Mr. TELLER. So far as I am concerned, there will be no reasonable time fixed nor any time fixed unless we know that a different course will be pursued from that pursued on some other bills, and if the Senators who support the bill are to refrain from speaking until the time is fixed and then come in and occupy all or nearly all the time, as has been done once or twice during this session. Unless I know that will not be done there will be no time fixed by unanimous consent.

I do not care about delaying the bill a moment. So far as I am concerned, I can vote on it now. I expect to vote against it. But I know there are Senators here who expect to speak, and I think if there is anybody on the other side who expects to speak at all he should take the floor now. But three speeches have been made on this subject by members of the committee—one by the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS], one by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK], and one by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS].

Mr. LODGE. Two members of the committee.

Mr. DUBOIS. The Senator from North Carolina is not a member of the committee.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator from North Carolina is not a member of the committee, but speeches have been made by two members of the committee.

Mr. President, it will not do for the other side to say that they are not going to debate the bill. In a service in this body that pretty nearly reaches a quarter of a century I have never heard, nor has any other member of the Senate, in my judgment, heard such an arraignment of a policy based upon the documents emanating from the party in power as was presented to the Senate by the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS].

Mr. President, the credit of the Government of the United States is at stake; its honor is at stake; and if the other side of this Chamber can not show that that was a statement unfounded and unsupported by facts, their credit and the credit of the nation at least demands that they shall disown and disavow and condemn the proceedings in those islands as they were condemned yesterday by a member of their party in another place.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that it is asking very much of us who do not believe in the bill to follow the three very exhaustive and very able speeches—speeches that Senators on the other side can not themselves, in my judgment, meet, and speeches that they have no right to complain of, speeches made in good temper, made as it becomes an American Senator to make them. It might be different, perhaps, if there had been some allusions made in a sarcastic manner; and such things have not been unusual in the Senate. I do not think anybody will complain of those speeches, and if they do, we are prepared to listen to the complaint.

I do not think we are under any obligation to make speeches every day on our side and then wait until the debate is over and allow Senators to take the floor and complete the debate when we have no chance to reply. A debate in the American Senate should mean an opportunity for both sides to contest questions that are presented, and no one side has a right to occupy the entire time, nor has either side a right to wait until the last hour and then occupy all of the time.

I have an amendment here to the bill that I want to put in. I will send it to the desk and ask to have it read. I move it now as an additional section to the bill.

Mr. FORAKER. Before the Senator from Colorado passes away from what he has been talking about, if it will not be objectionable to him, I should like to say that when two of the speeches to which he has referred were made in the Senate I was compelled to be absent from the Senate Chamber. I was engaged upon committee work, and could not be here. I was unable, therefore, to hear those speeches. I have heard about them through the newspapers and otherwise, and I have had it in mind to probably say something in answer to them, but not until I have had an opportunity to read the RECORD and see what the speeches were. As yet neither one of the speeches to which I refer has been published in the RECORD. I heard only a part of the speech that was made yesterday by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]. I want only to say now that there was not anything in that speech to deter any man who believes in the policy the Government has been pursuing in respect to the Philippines from making a speech in support of it. I do not know what may be in the speeches that have been made but not yet printed in the RECORD, which I have not yet had an opportunity to read, but I apprehend there will not be anything there that will absolutely exterminate independence of thought and freedom of speech, so far as the other side of the Chamber are concerned.

Now, I appreciate the spirit in which the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] has spoken. I think this is an important measure. I think we ought to debate it. I think the speaking ought not to be confined to one side, but it should be indulged in by both sides until we have arrived at conclusions with which we are satisfied, intelligent conclusions, which we will express by the votes we will give.

I have been very diligently consulting the RECORD every morning ever since those speeches were made to see them. Why they have not yet appeared in the RECORD I do not know. I suppose the Senators who made them have been withholding them in order that they may revise them, as is usual. I find no fault with that; but I only rose to say that we can not be criticised for not having answered those speeches when it was impossible to hear them and has been impossible to read them.

I do not know how this matter came up at this time. I do not know what was the request of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. I was absent from the Chamber when he made the request, but I suppose it was that a time might be fixed when we could vote upon the bill.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the Senator from Colorado is entitled to the floor.

Mr. TELLER. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts, if he wants to say anything.

Mr. LODGE. I desire merely to say to the Senator from Ohio that I made no request. The bill came up as the unfinished business of the Senate. In speaking to the Senator from Ohio, I need not dwell on the importance of the bill or the importance of reaching a conclusion after proper debate. All I have said was—I have said it two or three times—that I think a measure of this importance we can not afford to put over without either debate and discussion or action of any kind from day to day to satisfy the convenience of Senators who desire to speak. I am one of those Senators myself, but the request was made to put the bill over. We have a large number of amendments which we can deal with, if no one is ready to make a general speech on the bill. We can take up and discuss and dispose of those amendments. I again say that it seems to me we ought to be able either to vote or debate or fix a time, and in suggesting that we fix a time I desire to have the most liberal time allowed.

The Senator has referred to the period when the last bill was under discussion, and he seemed to think that after the time was fixed for voting we on this side consumed most of the time. I was at some pains to have a record kept at the desk of the time used by Senators in that debate, and it came out as nearly as possible even.

I am perfectly willing in fixing a time for voting, if we can agree upon any reasonable date, to make an agreement that the time shall be equally divided between both sides, and I think from what I know that the most of the time then will go to the opposition, as only one or two Senators on this side have intimated to me that they intend to speak upon the bill.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that, in the interest of public business, we ought either to proceed with the consideration of the bill at the proper time each day, or else we should fix a time when we shall vote. Then Senators who desire to make speeches can govern themselves accordingly.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] has made a proper explanation of why he was not prepared to speak. I know that it is not possible for Senators to be always in attendance here, that they have other duties which call them away, and I can conceive, without difficulty, that the Senator from Ohio may want to see the speeches in print before he replies to them. That, however, does not apply to a great majority of his political associates in this Chamber, although I am free to say I think they are almost as ignorant of what has been said here as is the Senator from Ohio. For instance, yesterday when the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] was making his speech, it is an absolute fact that if it had not been that two Republican Senators have seats on the Democratic side, there would not have been a Republican Senator in any seat in this Chamber. I was afterwards told that some Republican Senator did sit on one of the sofas back of the seats; but while the Senator from North Carolina was making a very fair, and, I think, able speech, there was not a Senator in his seat on the other side of the Chamber. Of course, I must assume that business required that they should all be away, but it was rather remarkable that all should have been called away at the same time; and that has been pretty nearly the condition here day by day as this debate has gone on.

Mr. CULLOM. Does the Senator say that there were no Senators on this side of the Chamber during the speech of the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. TELLER. I did not say that.

Mr. CULLOM. I want to know what the Senator did say, because I was present nearly all the time the Senator from North Carolina was addressing the Senate.

Mr. TELLER. I say there was a time when no man sat in his seat on the other side of the Chamber.

Mr. CULLOM. That might have been the case during a few minutes of that time.

Mr. TELLER. It was for a considerable time; it was not for simply a few minutes. I do not mean to charge that there is any determined effort on the part of Senators to keep away.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to ask the Senator what difference it makes whether a Senator is in his own seat or in some other seat, so that he is listening to a speech?

Mr. TELLER. But the trouble is there was not a Republican Senator in any seat.

Mr. SPOONER. I was in a seat on the other side during every minute of the speech of the Senator from North Carolina, except for about ten minutes, when I was called out of the Chamber.

Mr. TELLER. The time I referred to was during those ten minutes.

Mr. SPOONER. Oh! [Laughter.]

Mr. TELLER. I affirm—for I called the attention of some of my associates to it—that not a Senator was in his seat or in any other Senator's seat on the other side of the Chamber during that time. Of course I do not suppose that that condition of affairs lasted for a great while, but it lasted long enough to be the subject of considerable comment on this side of the Chamber.

Mr. CULLOM. As I have said, I was in my seat during the speech of the Senator from North Carolina, but I observed that there were then very few Senators on the other side of the Chamber.

Mr. TELLER. I am not saying that there was any surplus or superabundance of Senators over here [laughter], but there was always somebody here.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes, the speaker. [Laughter.]

Mr. TELLER. I am not sure but that during the interim I mention there was one Republican present—I think the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD], who was in the Vice-President's seat, perhaps; so that there was a Republican Senator in a seat at least; and I have been told that there was a Senator on one of the back seats.

Mr. SPOONER. I was on one of the back seats. [Laughter.]

Mr. TELLER. I mean on the back seats; not within the bar of the Senate.

Mr. TILLMAN. I hope the Senator from Colorado will name the Senator.

Mr. TELLER. I do not know who it was. He was so far away that my sight was not good enough to determine. I suppose there will be some controversy among Senators as to who had the merit of being so nearly present as that.

Mr. President, I do not care to say anything further upon that point. I intend to make a very brief speech on this bill some day, and I intend to address myself a good deal more to the bill itself than to the general question if I can get the time to arrange my views as to what the bill ought to contain. I have not felt disposed to be unnecessarily critical.

I called attention when I made a speech on the former bill to orders which had been issued which I regarded as extremely cruel. I now find in one of the great journals of the country—not a Democratic journal—some statements which I think are very important to be considered in this debate, if true, and whether they are true or not I do not know, but I think we should try to find out, if we can, whether they are true or not. I refer to the order issued by General Smith, and I am going to ask to have read an article which appeared in the New York Herald, because I am very much inclined to think that very few Senators have seen it. I have asked one or two if they have seen it, and they told me they had not.

As the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] is anxious that the time should be occupied by this bill, I will accommodate him by sending to the Secretary's desk, and having read, an article which appeared in the New York Herald of Sunday, April 27, 1902. It begins on the first column of the second section of the Sunday issue, and I will ask the Secretary to read the whole article, including the headlines. I can not ask him to put in the RECORD the portraits of the distinguished officers which appear in the paper, and of course I would not do that if I could.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Colorado? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary began the reading of the article, which is as follows:

[New York Herald, Sunday, April 27, 1902.]

CHAFFEE WILL BE HELD RESPONSIBLE—HIS ORDERS TO HUGHES SAID TO JUSTIFY SMITH'S COURSE IN SAMAR—REASON FOR PRESIDENT ORDER OF COURT—"WILL DETERMINE THE PROPRIETY OF RETAINING MAJOR-GENERAL IN THE PHILIPPINES"—EXPECT SMITH'S ACQUITTAL—ARMY OFFICERS BELIEVE HIS FRANK DEFENSE HAS PLACED CHAFFEE IN AWKWARD POSITION.

HERALD BUREAU, No. 734 FIFTEENTH STREET NW.,
Washington, D. C., Saturday.

Maj. Gen. Adna R. Chaffee, commanding the Military Division of the Philippines, will be made responsible for the character of the warfare conducted in the island of Samar as a result of the frank and sensational line of defense adopted by Brig. Gen. Jacob H. Smith.

This is the conclusion of Army officers in Washington who read to-day the admission by counsel for General Smith that that officer did give orders to "kill and burn and make Samar a howling wilderness" and did specify that all males over 10 years of age should be shot.

It is learned that it was because of the possibility that the responsibility for General Smith's orders would be finally placed at the doors of Major-General Chaffee that the President decided to take the matter out of the hands of the commanding general in the Philippines and himself order the court which is now trying General Smith.

The effect of the organization of the court by the President will be to make President Roosevelt, instead of General Chaffee, the reviewing authority.

This means that the President will finally determine the propriety of General Chaffee's acts and the advisability of his retention in the Philippines.

General Smith was ordered by General Chaffee to command the Sixth Brigade, which was ordered to operate in Leyte and Samar. General Smith was sent to Samar as a result of the massacre of Company C of the Ninth Infantry at Balangiga, and was directed to act under the general supervision of Major-General Hughes.

Writing to General Hughes, General Chaffee stated that "General Smith, I am told, is an energetic officer, and I hope he will prove so in command of that brigade." General Smith's energy was directed in accordance with these instructions, sent by General Chaffee to General Hughes:

"While I do not urge inhuman treatment of any person in these islands, it is necessary that we be stern and inflexible, and both officers and men must be cordially supported in their duty in this regard. There is one thing necessary, and that is the wholesome fear by these people of the Army, and that every hostile motion of any inhabitant toward the troops will be quickly and severely punished.

"I have all the time thought that we do not appreciate the fact that we are dealing with a people whose character is deceitful, who are absolutely hostile to the white race, and who regard life as of little value, and, finally, who will not submit to our control until absolutely defeated and whipped into such a condition. It is to our interest to disarm these people and to keep them disarmed, and any means to that end is advisable."

General Chaffee made these further observations:

"The condition of mind of officers and men in these islands is largely in error, and they must be given to understand that they are in error, by which I mean their opinion is that the people are far more friendly than they really are and that they are satisfied with our presence among them.

"In a considerable sense this may be true. Women and children are probably friendly toward us, but as a rule I would not trust 50 per cent of the male population, and they must not be trusted.

"It is our duty to suspicion every male inhabitant in these islands, and the proof of any error in this regard must rest with them, not so much in words as by action, which can not be misunderstood."

General Chaffee added a postscript to this letter of General Hughes, which reads:

"We are glad of the services of the peace party in Cebu to assist in getting hold of the insurrectos, but by the great horn spoon we will not wait for their movement nor their palaver.

"It is my opinion that Cebu in the past has been petted altogether too much, and that the island of Bohol needs a strong cathartic."

General Smith will be further able to place the responsibility upon the shoulders of his seniors by showing that the orders which he issued are identical with those published by Brigadier-General Bell in southern Luzon, and, furthermore, received the cordial approval of General Hughes and General Chaffee.

General Smith had not been four months in the island of Samar when he issued his order in relation to the character of the warfare which should be waged. He said in this order that he had become thoroughly convinced that the insurrection in Samar had been supported solely by the people who live in the Pueblos, ostensibly pursuing their peaceful pursuits and enjoying American protection, and that this was especially true of the wealthy class.

"Under such conditions," continued the order, "there can be but one course to pursue, which is to adopt a policy that will create in the minds of all the people a burning desire for the war to cease, a desire or longing so intense, so personal, especially to every individual of the class mentioned, and so real, that it will impel them to devote themselves in earnest to bringing about a state of real peace, that will impel them to join hands with the Americans in the accomplishment of this end."

"The policy to be pursued in this brigade from this time on will be to wage war in the sharpest and most decisive manner possible. This policy will apply to the island of Samar and such other portions of the brigade to which it may become necessary to apply it, even though such territory is supposed peaceful or is under civil government."

General Smith announced certain rules which would guide the army in its treatment of the natives. The first directed that "every native, whether in arms or living in the pueblos or barrios, will be regarded and treated as an enemy until he has conclusively shown that he is a friend. This he can not do by mere words or promises. The only manner in which the native can demonstrate his loyalty is by some positive act or acts that actually and positively commit him to us."

General Smith declared that "neutrality must not be tolerated on the part of any native. The time has now arrived when all natives in this brigade who are not openly for us must be regarded as against us."

This order was approved by Major-General Hughes and forwarded to Major-General Chaffee, who likewise approved it and transmitted it to the War Department. That order was allowed to remain in force, and was obeyed for one year and two months.

In February last General Smith issued an order announcing his belief that active opposition to American occupation of the island had crumbled away and inaugurating a more lenient policy.

That both General Hughes and General Chaffee were in full sympathy with the character of General Smith's campaign is further established by their official reports.

In a report dated a few days after General Smith assumed command in Samar, General Hughes wrote to General Chaffee that "our people continue killing bolomen, etc., and improving their geography." He added in this report that "the detachment of native scouts at Calbayog has killed more barefoots than any full company on the island."

General Chaffee frequently took occasion in his official reports to express commendation of the conduct of General Hughes, and it was as a result of this commendation that the latter was recently appointed a major-general in the regular establishment.

Because of the far-reaching effect of General Smith's admission yesterday that he had given orders to "kill and burn and destroy all males over 10 years of age," considerable perturbation was displayed at the War Department to-day.

Since the publication of details in connection with the methods of warfare observed in the Philippines there has been a disposition manifested to minimize the importance of the revelations.

It is admitted that the first great mistake, from an Army point of view, was made when General Chaffee ordered the court-martial of Maj. L. W. T. Waller, of the United States Marine Corps. This brought to the notice of the public the fact that the war in Samar had not been conducted in accordance with a humanitarian policy.

Testifying before the court which tried Major Waller, General Smith denied that he ever "gave Major Waller power over life and death, exceeding the General Order No. 100," issued by the War Department. Officials of the War Department said to-day that there was no conflict between this statement and the admissions of General Smith's counsel yesterday, as "there was nothing in his instructions to Waller to sanction the execution of prisoners except by due process of military law."

One Army officer, who for obvious reasons would not permit himself to be quoted, predicted that General Smith would be whitewashed. That an acquittal is expected by the Department is shown by the statement that there is nothing in the admissions of General Smith's counsel to lay the officer open to censure.

It was pointed out that the court which is trying General Smith is composed of officers who have issued or obeyed the very kind of orders which the accused published and enforced.

The Department insists that "war is hell," and that the quickest way to bring it to an end is to make the enemy as uncomfortable and sick of hostilities as possible.

That General Smith's policy accomplished results is shown, it is stated, by conditions in Samar, where the insurrectos have practically all surrendered and where a condition of comparative peace prevails.

Though the War Department may attempt to condone General Smith's policy, the same lenient view is not taken at the White House. The President believes that the war should be prosecuted with the utmost vigor, but within the bounds of humanity. He has been told that the reason why General Smith gave instructions for the killing of all males over 10 is because children of that age are engaged in the war against the Americans.

So long as hostilities were in progress it was proper, in the opinion of the President, that the combatants should be crushed, but when defeated it was wholly inexcusable for the American troops to perpetrate atrocities merely for the purpose, as General Chaffee stated, of instilling a fear of the Army in the breasts of the natives.

When the record and findings of the court which is trying General Smith is received in Washington it is the purpose of the President to carefully examine it and consider the testimony which has been taken.

General Smith may be acquitted by the court, but it is within the power of the President to disapprove the findings, though it is, of course, impossible for him to order another court-martial of this officer on the same charges.

In transmitting the record and findings General Chaffee is expected to make an explanation of any facts which may appear damaging to himself.

It is the purpose of the Democrats in Congress to use the admissions of General Smith's counsel as ammunition for their speeches on the Philippine government bill, and to show the country the character of Republican administration in the Philippines, in the hope that it will have a great influence upon the fall elections.

Senator CARMACK, in the course of a speech in the Senate to-day, in which he attacked the President and General Funston, spoke of the possible results of General Smith's policy.

Senator PROCTOR, of Vermont, expressed sincere regret that General Smith should have conducted the character of campaign he did. He said there should be a careful investigation and that the court-martial of that officer should be thorough.

Senator PETTUS, one of the Democratic members of the Military Committee of the Senate, said that only General Smith's own admission could have convinced him that it was possible for an American to wage war in such a barbarous manner.

General Smith has been noted in the Army for his energy and military ability. He was born in Ohio in 1840, and served as a volunteer in the civil war, afterwards receiving a commission in the Regular Army. He was engaged in several Indian wars, and was sent to the Philippines after the war with Spain.

During the advance in Luzon, in 1899, General Smith displayed zeal and ability, which brought him an appointment as brigadier-general of volunteers, and in March, 1901, an appointment as brigadier-general in the regular establishment.

His reports of operations in Luzon are as remarkable as those on operations in Samar. One of these communications, dated Cazas, November 11, 1899, says:

"In a few minutes after reaching here we discovered about two or three hundred insurgents coming up the railroad track from the south, waving a flag of truce. I made my dispositions to receive them warmly.

"I heard three volleys from the cavalry, who were to the right and south of the railroad crossing. They dispersed quickly, going toward the east. I got word to a battalion that was in a position to intercept them and a few of them were killed, but they scattered like birds and we heard nothing more of them."

During the reading of the foregoing extract,

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, with the permission of the Senator from Colorado, who sent the article to the desk, which is being read, I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on the Philippines a question.

Mr. TELLER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator from Massachusetts in charge of the bill tell us whether these quotations are from documents in the War Department, and whether they have been officially published?

Mr. LODGE. I do not know. I did not present this document. I take it they are from interviews. I do not know where they come from. I know nothing about it.

Mr. TILLMAN. The documents certainly are accessible, and this correspondent must have gotten them from somebody. Has any resolution been offered calling for these official orders?

Mr. LODGE. I do not know that they are official orders. I should like the Secretary to read what the statement is about them. Are they official orders?

Mr. TILLMAN. They are supposed to be, at least that is my understanding of the reading. They are quotations from the official orders of General Chaffee to General Hughes.

Mr. LODGE. I want to find out what they purport to be. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] has presented the paper, and perhaps he knows.

Mr. TELLER. I know nothing about it except what is in the paper. The paper speaks for itself.

Mr. LODGE. From what document are the words which purport to be the words of General Chaffee taken?

The Secretary read as follows:

General Smith was ordered by General Chaffee to command the Sixth Brigade, which was ordered to operate in Leyte and Samar. General Smith was sent to Samar as a result of the massacre of Company C of the Ninth Infantry at Balangiga, and was directed to act under the general supervision of Major-General Hughes.

Writing to General Hughes, General Chaffee stated that "General Smith, I am told, is an energetic officer, and I hope he will prove so in command of that brigade."

Mr. LODGE. The statement is that it is a letter to General Hughes.

Mr. TILLMAN. An order.

Mr. PATTERSON. No; a letter.

Mr. TILLMAN. A letter of instructions, which is equivalent to an order.

Mr. President, while I am on my feet, I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts what foundation in fact there is for the publication in the newspapers for the last three or four days in regard to Mindanao and the situation as to the sultan, the datos, and the mussulmans down that way, who are said to be fighters? Has the Senator got any information as the chairman of the Committee on the Philippines, or has the War Department any information, or are these mere shadowy emanations from the brains of our newspaper people? We ought to have some foundation for these things, or we ought to be able to get them from the committee or have the committee furnish the Senate some authoritative denial of them.

Mr. LODGE. I know nothing about matters in Mindanao, except what has been published in the newspapers. The official orders and reports which have been published in the newspapers are all I know about.

Mr. TILLMAN. Here is one respectable paper—at least it is supposed to be a respectable paper—that publishes quotations from military orders that must have been furnished its correspondent from the War Department.

Mr. LODGE. This has nothing to do with Mindanao.

Mr. TILLMAN. I understand that; but I was just working up to the point to know why we should be so urgent or strenuous with the people in Samar and those other islands where the people are not such bloodthirsty fighters and why we are so polite and Christianlike in our dealings with the Mohammedans. If the Senator has any information on these points, I wish, as chairman of the committee, he would furnish it to the Senate.

I saw this morning a document lying on our tables which furnishes us a good many statements and copies of petitions from natives of the Philippines, asking that our Army shall remain there, and all that kind of thing. Those things are sent here in order to try to influence public opinion to the effect that the war is one of civilization and humanity and liberty and all that kind of thing; but along comes these other statements which stagger us. I want to get at the facts. That is all.

We are told very positively that there was no water cure being administered over there. That was denied by the Secretary of War and others. I do not suppose that there is anybody but acknowledges from the testimony which has been taken that our people have been guilty of imitating the Spaniards and the Macabebe scouts in some of their inhumanities and cruelties.

I am merely asking for information. I do not want to cast any imputation upon the conduct of the war, unless it rests upon facts, and I should like to have the chairman direct attention to some official document bearing upon the orders which have been issued by Chaffee, Smith, Hughes, and others. That information is either at the War Department or it can be gotten from Manila.

Mr. LODGE. Possibly.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the chairman of the committee would take the matter in hand and furnish the information to the Senate, and save somebody calling by resolution for certain correspondence, and all that kind of thing, as an humble member of the Senate I should like to gain some information, some light on the subject. I am especially desirous of knowing whether we, a Christian people, are to-day occupying the attitude of butchers and practicing cruelties that would disgrace the Inquisition, if it were now in existence, upon the inoffensive, I might say cowardly, inhabitants of some of the islands; whereas, whenever we reach a region where we shall have to fight with some people who are bloodthirsty themselves and will cause us a great deal of trouble and loss, we get very polite, and go to cringing and fawning around, and pay them a stipend, I believe. I saw a statement at least to the effect that there was a treaty made by General Bell, in which we agreed to pay a certain sum to the Sultan of Sulu, a couple of thousand dollars or some such a matter, and that his chiefs or lieutenants were paid $1,200, or something like that.

I merely want to know if the chairman of the committee will furnish us information as to whether or not we are cringing and fawning around in the southern end of the archipelago, whereas we are butchering, torturing, and injecting or forcing water into the others, and practicing other cruelties that are indecent and contrary to the American character.

Mr. TELLER. I ask now that the reading of the article which I sent to the desk may be resumed, that it may go into the RECORD as a continuous document, and that the interruptions of Senators may follow. Otherwise its continuity will be disturbed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request? The Chair hears none, and the article will be published entire, as requested by the Senator from Colorado.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the article referred to.

Mr. TELLER. If I had General Smith's order I would put it in, but I have not got it. I suppose it has been read by everybody.

In alluding to the fact of the small attendance on the other side when the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] was speaking yesterday, I wish to say, so that it will not appear that there was any disrespect not shown to others, that frequently not more than four or five Senators have been present on the other side of the Chamber when other speakers have addressed the Senate on this subject.

I wish to put in the RECORD, because some Senators have not had the privilege of reading it, General Bell's order of December 8, 1901. I wish to put in, also, his telegraphic circular of December 9, 1901, and I think, in justice to General Bell, I should put in what the editor of the Army and Navy Journal says, which is, of course, complimentary to General Bell and justifying his action.

Mr. President, I am not going to enter into a general discussion of this case. I understand that General Smith admitted recently that he had given such an order, and justifies it upon an order issued during the civil war which has been known generally, although I do not find it named in this newspaper article, as the Tom Ewing order. General Ewing, a distinguished officer and a member of a distinguished family in Ohio, was in command in the State of Missouri. Just what his grade was does not occur to me now, but it is immaterial. There had been great complaint of bushwhacking in Missouri, and General Ewing deported the entire population of two counties, as I recollect, and destroyed practically all the property that was destructible in those two counties.

There was very severe criticism of his action in every part of the United States. It was not attended with cruelty, except as everybody must realize that to take a whole community and move it must necessarily be cruel. I never heard any complaint that there was any unnecessary force. Those people were taken outside of the immediate neighborhood so that they could be supported, and they were supported. I do not remember just how. Yet that order received the bitterest criticism in the United States.

In the greatest war that ever afflicted mankind, a civil war, with the greatest armies that were ever assembled in an internecine war, lasting four years, between people of the same blood and of the same family as it were, people all of whom had called themselves citizens of the United States, with all the bitterness that arose out of such a contest between high-spirited people, where I venture to say there were more exhibitions of manly courage than in any other war in the world, there was no complaint of any acts of this kind, and no officer can justify himself by going back to General Ewing's order or anything like it. Of course, I have not forgotten——

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. TELLER. I will in a moment. I have not forgotten the complaint that was made of the cruelty to prisoners practiced by a certain Confederate officer who suffered subsequently the penalty of his misconduct. Now I will hear the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. SPOONER. I was going to ask the Senator quietly and kindly if he had forgotten Fort Pillow?

Mr. TELLER. I have not forgotten Fort Pillow, but the Fort Pillow affair was not a comparison to what is charged as having occurred in these islands.

Mr. CARMACK. Will the Senator from Colorado permit me to inquire of the Senator from Wisconsin what he means by remembering Fort Pillow?

Mr. TELLER. I will let the Senator complain of Fort Pillow, if he wants to. I will yield to the Senator.

Mr. CARMACK. What did the Senator from Wisconsin mean by asking if the Senator from Colorado remembered Fort Pillow?

Mr. SPOONER. I had in mind, of course, the massacre of colored troops at Fort Pillow.

Mr. CARMACK. What?

Mr. SPOONER. What has always been regarded as the massacre of colored troops.

Mr. CARMACK. I do not want to go into a discussion of that question now, in the time of the Senator from Colorado——

Mr. TELLER. You may.

Mr. CARMACK. But there was no massacre at Fort Pillow except the shooting of men who were fleeing after the fort was captured. There was no massacre of prisoners. No such thing ever occurred at Fort Pillow.

Mr. TELLER. I have a pretty fair recollection of Fort Pillow, and while there was considerable criticism and, I think, likely justly some criticism about it, if the Senator from Wisconsin will go back to the history of the time he will find it was nothing in comparison with what we are informed has occurred in these islands.

I understand, as I was saying, that General Smith defends this order on the ground that there was something of the kind done during our war, and upon the further ground that boys of 10 years of age in the Philippine Islands are warriors; that owing to the climatic influences boys of 10 years in tropical countries are equal to boys of 14 or 15 in the higher altitudes. While that is not true, as a matter of fact, there is an earlier development of course in the Tropics than in the North, but I doubt very much whether there are any 10-year-old boys in the Philippine army. However, if there are boys of 10 years of age in the Philippine army fighting for what they and their fathers believe are their rights, I have a better opinion of the Filipinos than I had before.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Will the Senator from Colorado allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. TELLER. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I have been absent during a portion of the debate upon this question. I suppose I am pretty familiar with its general features, because we have heard the Philippine question debated over and over again for the last three years, and from the first speech up to the present time I have heard nothing new. I wish to inquire what the Senator is now objecting to. I do not understand that the Government approves of what was done by General Smith. Does the Senator from Colorado so understand it?

Mr. TELLER. I do not know whether the Government approves of it or not.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I understand a court-martial has been ordered.

Mr. TELLER. I have heard that a court-martial has been ordered.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Yes.

Mr. TELLER. But if the newspaper statement is correct, the court-martial ought to have been ordered fifteen months ago.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. But the fact is that one has been ordered.

Mr. TELLER. I do not know whether it has or not. I only know what the newspaper says. But it is rather a late day to order an investigation. If the newspaper article is correct, it has been within the knowledge of the War Department for more than a year. I do not know whether it is true or not. I said I did not vouch for it. I put it in here so that Senators who stand by the Administration and who seem to be quite prepared to indorse everything that is done may bring a proper excuse here, which I hope they can do.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. May I ask the Senator from Colorado another question?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Does not the Senator understand that the court-martial was ordered as soon as the facts alleged were known in Washington?

Mr. TELLER. Not if the newspaper article is true. I hope the Senator will understand now what I am talking about. I understand more about it, it appears, than he does by a great deal.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Quite likely. The Senator is basing his statements entirely upon the newspaper report?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly I am.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I simply want to get at the Senator's understanding of the facts.

Mr. TELLER. I understand. I assume now that the probability is that these statements are facts. The court-martial has been ordered, but if the statement is true, and it was published last Sunday, and nobody arose here yesterday to say that the Administration had been slandered, and offering to get the facts for us——

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. TELLER. In one moment. I will assume, so far as respectful criticism of it has been made by members of that political party as well as by those of the opposition, that it is true enough at least to call for action on the part of the Department in disclaiming it if the statement is not true.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. I wish to call the Senator's attention to the closing paragraph of the article read, in which General Smith's record is given. It appears from it that he himself, in making a report of his military operations a year or two ago, declared he had fired on a flag of truce under which some natives were approaching, endeavoring, I presume, to surrender, and that they were shot down in cold blood. So you might expect such a man to give an order to kill all down to those 10 years of age.

Mr. TELLER. I was diverted in stating what I was going to state about the 10-year-old soldiers. I do not myself believe very much in 10-year-old soldiers. I do not believe there has been any considerable number of 10-year-old soldiers. If so, I can not myself conceive of a man who could see 10-year-old boys in an army fighting for what they believe to be their rights and who would have the heart to kill them.

Mr. President, the American people have been proud of the war powers of our own people. We have always been enthusiastic when people went into the Army. We have patted them on the back, and if these boys of 10 or 12 years of age are in the army they certainly have a right to be treated as soldiers. Perhaps it will be said they are so young they can not be treated as soldiers. What right have we to kill everybody in a province because he is in arms against us? Does that account for the wonderful difference between the wounded and the dead, attention to which has been called repeatedly here and no explanation ever made?

I am going to put into the RECORD an article from the Post of this morning, headed "Pacifying Filipinos." It is a Republican paper, a paper of character, and it can not be characterized as being hostile to the Administration in office. I do not care to take the time of the Senate to read it, unless some one objects, and I will ask that it be printed as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the article will be printed in the RECORD.

The article referred to is as follows:

PACIFYING FILIPINOS.

Our sentiment about retaining the Philippine Islands and our conception of their relations to our prestige and their importance to our oriental commerce are entirely distinct from views of policy as to their people and their pacification. This country may be a unit on the first and be properly divided on the second.

There is a justifiable division of sentiment on the subject of making Funstonitis a permanent influence in our policy. The acquittal of Lieutenant Waller, accused of shooting prisoners, was perfectly proper when he made good his plea of justification and proved it by citing the order of his superior officer, General Smith, to kill everything over 10 years of age and make the country a howling wilderness. It is not forgotten that when this remarkable order was pleaded by Waller friends of General Smith in the islands and many people here were indignant in their denials that such an order had been issued.

Had the President not ordered a court-martial for General Smith these denials would have stood unimpeached and the country would have laid all blame upon Waller's court-martial for acquitting him on a plea not proved. But now General Smith, put on trial, admits that he issued that order, not only for the killing of prisoners, but for an appalling and indiscriminate slaughter of all the inhabitants over 10 years of age. He justifies himself by harking back to a general order, issued in the pinch of our civil war, of 1863. Reading that order is sufficient to nullify it as his justification for his action. It begins with the statement that the life of the country is the first thing to be considered, and that, being attacked and threatened with destruction, in using the means for its preservation all else is secondary. What follows in regard to retaliation, treatment of prisoners and of hostages, is all dependent on the introductory clause of the order. There is no inherent evidence that the order was issued as a general rule. It depends upon the statement of the emergency of a defensive warfare to save the national life.

The simplest mind sees at once that such an order is not intended to apply to our conduct of an offensive warfare that touches at no point the national life.

Yet General Smith pleads that order, issued nearly forty years ago in a civil war of defense, as justification of his order to kill all human beings, not excepting sex, over 10 years of age.

War blunts feeling and conscience, but that process has not yet wrapped in amaurosis the conscience and the humanity of the American people. They are willing to make offensive war, and will not flinch at any of its necessities when it is directed against men. Nor do they have undue sentiment at any horror of war that scowls in open battle and overtakes men who are free to fight or free to run. But they will not be reconciled to the repetition of Spanish atrocities under our flag. It is not fair to say now that General Smith will be acquitted, but it may be said to be probable that, as Lieutenant Waller passed the responsibility up to General Smith's order and went free, General Smith may be able to pass it up to a general order that is forty years old and go free also. That will be bad, but it is far from being the worst of this business.

Concurrently with the incident of General Smith's court-martial appears matter in the press to justify him. This comes, properly enough, from Kansas, the State that bears the awful responsibility of Funston. Soldier Boardman, of that State, says:

"There has been a great howl in this country because the order was issued that 10-year-old boys should be killed. Anyone who has had occasion to see how fiercely a 10-year-old Filipino fights will realize the wisdom of that order. A Filipino boy of 10 is as mature as an American boy of 14 or 15, and can shoot as well as a man. Many of the young boys among the Tagalos were armed with rifles and bolos, and were as good marksmen as their fathers. They shared their parents' hatred of the Americans and resorted to all sorts of treachery.

"Soldiers who have seen their comrades shot down by boy sharpshooters realize the justice of General Smith's order. All sentiment about tender years and that sort of thing is lost under such conditions as the American soldiers faced in the Samar campaign. People who have no knowledge of the actual conditions existing in the Philippines can not understand what desperate straits the American forces were in at times."

We don't think that folly and blindness have ever gone beyond that. What a picture to hang on the walls of the War Department! Our army in the Philippines driven into a corner by boy sharpshooters of the age of 10!

During the Cuban revolution the Spaniards caught a boy of 10 and shot him as a spy. When the little fellow was placed in front of the firing squad he cried: "Disaten mis ojos. No tengo miedo de morir; pero dejeme ver a los cerros en donde naci!" ("Unbind my eyes. I'm not afraid to die; but let me see the hills where I was born!")

This Kansas hero believes now in shooting boys of 10, because "they share their parants' hatred of Americans." That Cuban child shared his parents' hatred of Spaniards, and died like a hero. Is it the purpose of the American people to make permanent in the Philippines a condition that will bring children into the world their blood hot with inherited curses of us and our flag?

The men of this country will blush when they read that "soldiers who have seen their comrades shot down by boy sharpshooters realize the justice of General Smith's order." Because a spirit of defense, no matter how mistaken a patriotism, no matter how misdirected, has sent boys of 10 to fight with arms, then all boys of 10 are to be shot down on sight, with no arms in their hands, as a means of "justice."

It is time for public sentiment to move to the front and make itself felt. No matter how high our purpose in the Philippines, nor how consecrated by sacrifice, if it can be attained only by the wholesale slaughter of children of 10, like lambs in the shambles, it will be abandoned. No prize is great enough to be won by incurring the curse that fell upon Herod.

Mr. TELLER. In addition, I wish to put in the RECORD, although I know they have appeared there before, but they must have been forgotten, General Bell's orders of December 8 and 9 last.

Several SENATORS. Have them read.

Mr. TELLER. I will have them read. There is nothing very pressing before the Senate, and I will ask that they be read. The article taken from the Army and Navy Journal.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

RIGOROUS MEASURES IN LUZON.

It is evident from the following circulars issued by Brig. Gen. J. Franklin Bell, United States Army, commanding in Batangas Province, island of Luzon, that experience has convinced him that nothing short of the most rigorous military measures will crush the insurrection in that hotbed of Tagalog treachery and crime. General Bell is an officer of the highest courage and intelligence, whose record in the Philippines is a story of ceaseless activity and splendid results in support of American authority. He has been in Batangas for months. He is acquainted with the Tagalogs and their ways. He has personally studied the situation in all its bearings, and if it can not be said of him that he knows just what he is talking about, then there is no man in the Army of whom it can be said. The subjoined circulars show that halfway measures in dealing with the insurgents are futile and almost suicidal. The enemy must be taught what war really means. Major-General Chaffee in recent orders declared that there was widespread organized treachery among the Tagalogs. These conditions fully justify the radical measures which have been adopted to crush the revolt in Batangas. General Bell's circulars are as follows:

To all Station Commanders:

In order to put an end to enforced contributions, now levied by insurgents upon the inhabitants of sparsely settled and outlying barrios and districts, by means of intimidation and assassination, commanding officers of all towns now existing in the provinces of Batangas and Laguna, including those at which no garrison is stationed at present, will immediately specify and establish plainly marked limits surrounding each town bounding a zone within which it may be practicable, with an average-sized garrison, to exercise efficient supervision over and furnish protection to inhabitants (who desire to be peaceful) against the depredations of armed insurgents. Those limits may include the barrios which exist sufficiently near the town to be given protection and supervision by the garrison, and should include some ground on which live stock could graze, but so situated that it can be patrolled and watched. All ungarrisoned towns will be garrisoned as soon as troops become available.

Commanding officers will also see that orders are at once given and distributed to all the inhabitants within the jurisdiction of towns over which they exercise supervision, informing them of the danger of remaining outside of these limits, and that unless they move by December 25 from outlying barrios and districts with all their movable food supplies, including rice, palay, chickens, live stock, etc., to within the limits of the zone established at their own or nearest town, their property (found outside of said zone at said date) will become liable to confiscation or destruction. The people will be permitted to move houses from outlying districts should they desire to do so, or to construct temporary shelter for themselves on any vacant land without compensation to the owner, and no owner will be permitted to deprive them of the privilege of doing so.

In the discretion of commanding officers the prices of necessities of existence may also be regulated in the interest of those thus seeking protection.

As soon as peaceful conditions have been reestablished in the territory of this brigade, these persons will be encouraged to return to their homes and such assistance be rendered them as may be found practicable.

J. F. BELL,
Brigadier-General Commanding.

[Telegraphic circular No. 3.]

BATANGAS, December 9, 1901.

To all Station Commanders:

A general conviction, which the brigade commander shares, appears to exist that the insurrection in the territory of this brigade continues because the greater part of the people, especially the wealthy ones, pretend to desire but in reality do not want peace; that when all really want peace we can have it promptly. Under such circumstances it is clearly indicated that a policy should be adopted that will as soon as possible make the people want peace and want it badly.

It is an inevitable consequence of war that the innocent must generally suffer with the guilty, for when inflicting merited punishment upon a guilty class it is unfortunately at times impossible to avoid the doing of damage to some who do not individually deserve it.

For reasons here indicated, which are well known to all, and chief of which is the delay and difficulty in ascertaining the exact truth, it will be impossible to wage war efficiently and at the same time do abstract justice in operations unquestionably essential to putting down an insurrection which has long continued in the territory of this brigade.

Natural and commendable sympathy for suffering and loss and for those with whom friendly relations may have been maintained should therefore take a place subordinate to the doing of whatever may be necessary to bring a people, who have as yet not felt the distressing effect of war, to a realizing sense of the advantages of peace.

War in the disturbed portions of the territory of this brigade, and, when manifestly necessary, in those portions supposed to be peaceful or which are under civil government, will be conducted in accordance with the provisions of General Orders, No. 100, Adjutant-General's Office, 1863, which publishes instructions for the government of armies of the United States in the field. The provisions of this order will be directly adhered to, but no station commander will put anyone to death as a measure of retaliation for assassination under sections 27, 28, 34, and 148, without obtaining authority from a superior commander, nor will the death penalty be inflicted in any case without similar authority.

Commanding officers are urged and enjoined to use their discretion freely in adopting any or all measures of warfare authorized by this order which will contribute, in their judgment, toward enforcing the policy or accomplishing the purpose above announced.

It is not necessary to seek or wait for authority from these headquarters to do anything or take any action which will contribute to the end in view. It is desired that subdistrict commanders accord to their subordinate officers and commanders a degree of confidence and latitude in operations similar to that herein conferred upon them. Such restraint and supervision only should be exercised as is dictated by sound discretion, and as may be essential to securing concert of action and cooperation when desirable, adherence to authorized methods, and a uniform policy and harmonious action in working for a common end. Subordinate commanders and young officers of experience should not be restrained or discouraged without excellent reason, but should be encouraged to hunt for, pursue, and vigorously operate against armed bodies of insurgents wherever they may be found.

Except when the advantage in position and numbers is overwhelming on the side of the enemy our troops should always assume the offensive and advance on and pursue them vigorously. The best defense against these people is to assume a vigorous offensive at once. To retire in the presence of this enemy is generally hazardous and discouraging to our troops.

Nothing herein contained will be so interpreted as to warrant or arouse carelessness or a lack of well-known and proper precautions. Though troops should be aggressive, they should be military in methods, and precautions against surprise and ambush should never be neglected.

In addition to maintaining active operations against armed bands of insurgents persistent and systematic efforts will be made, through the use of spies, loyal police, native scouts, intelligence officers, provost-marshals, and provost courts, to discover, apprehend, and punish all agents, collectors, organizers, contributors, and sympathizers who secretly aid, assist, and extend encouragement or comfort to those in arms. Many such persons will unquestionably be found among municipal officials and councils and tenientes of cabezas of barrios. [Lieutenant of the head of a barrio.—Editor.]

It is so probable as to amount almost to a certainty that the election of all town officials in the province of Batangas and Laguna have been dictated by Malvar or other insurgent leaders and that they would never have been permitted to discharge their functions without molestation had they not continued to be subservient to the will of the insurgent leaders and been acting as their agents, or at least have done nothing inconsistent with their interests.

The only acceptable and convincing evidence of the real sentiments of either individuals or town councils should be such acts publicly performed as must inevitably commit them irrevocably to the side of Americans by arousing the animosity and opposition of the insurgent element. Such acts are reliable evidence, but mere words are worthless.

No person should be given credit for loyalty simply because he takes the oath of allegiance or secretly conveys to Americans worthless information and idle rumors which result in nothing. Those who publicly guide our troops in operations against the enemy, who denounce and assist in arresting the secret enemies of the Government, who publicly obtain and bring reliable and valuable information to commanding officers, those, in fact, who publicly array themselves against the insurgents and for Americans, should be trusted and given credit for loyalty, but no others. No person should be given credit for loyalty solely on account of his having done nothing for or against us, so far as known. Neutrality should not be tolerated. Every inhabitant of the territory of this brigade should either be an active friend or be classed as an enemy.

Presidentes and chiefs of police against whom sufficient evidence can be found to convict them before a court of violating their oaths by acting as agents for insurgents, or by aiding, assisting, or protecting them in any way, should be arrested and confined, and should ordinarily be tried by military commission. Charges should be preferred and forwarded with that in view.

Other town officials guilty of similar offenses might be tried by provost courts unless their offense be too grave for adequate punishment thereby.

Another dangerous class of enemies are wealthy sympathizers and contributors who, though holding no official positions, use all their influence in support of the insurrection; and while enjoying American protection for themselves, their families, and property, secretly aid, protect, and contribute to insurgents. Chief and most important among this class of disloyal persons are native priests. It may be considered as practically certain that every native priest in the provinces of Batangas and Laguna is a secret enemy of the Government and in active sympathy with insurgents. These are absolutely our most dangerous enemies—more dangerous even than armed insurgents—because of their unequaled influence. They should be given no exemptions whatever on account of their calling. On the contrary, whenever sufficient evidence is obtainable they should be brought to trial. Should well-founded suspicion rest against them, in the absence of competent evidence, they should be confined and held as a necessary military precaution to preclude further activity or bad influence on their part.

The same course should be pursued with all of this class, for to arrest anyone believed to be guilty of giving aid or assistance to the insurrection in any way or of giving food or comfort to the enemies of the Government it is not necessary to wait for sufficient evidence to lead to conviction by a court; but those strongly suspected of complicity with the insurrection may be arrested and confined as a military necessity and may be held indefinitely as prisoners of war in the discretion of the station commander or until receipt of other orders from higher authority. It will frequently be found impossible to obtain any evidence against persons of influence as long as they are at liberty, but once confined evidence is easily obtainable. * * *

The apprehension and punishment of one individual of the above-mentioned classes (men of wealth and standing and officials) is of greater importance and will exercise greater influence than the punishment of a hundred ignorant hombres for whose suffering no principale cares a straw. The wealthy and influential and town and insurgent officials are therefore those against whom our most energetic efforts should be directed. The common people amount to nothing. They are merely densely ignorant tools who blindly follow the lead of the principales. When guilty they must be arrested and confined, in order to put an end to further activity on their part, but whenever it is possible to reach their chief or leader through their testimony they may be promised immunity from trial for such simple offenses as aiding and assisting or being insurgents. They should not be released, however, unless they are willing to demonstrate their loyalty by public participation in operations against their former leaders.

The policy herein indicated need not be applied, should commanding officers be convinced it is inadvisable, in those portions of the territory of this brigade where peaceful conditions have been completely reestablished, as in Marinduque, for example. Discretion should also be exercised as to the degree of rigor to be employed in its enforcement in those portions of the territory of the brigade where civil government exists, and where no organized insurrection or intrigue is discoverable.

Wherever the constabulary have been organized, cordial cooperation will be extended to and solicited from them. Commanding officers will promptly transmit by wire to other commanding officers any information which may possibly be of assistance to them, and are expected to seek cooperation and concert of action from each other whenever such may appear to be desirable.

J. F. BELL,
Brigadier-General Commanding.

(Army and Navy Journal, January 25, 1902.)

Mr. TELLER. I ask that the amendment which I offered may be read and printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. Add at the end of the bill the following, as a new section:

SEC. 95. That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to appoint a commission composed of not less than seven and not more than fifteen persons whose duty it shall be to proceed as speedily as practicable to the Philippine Islands and to take such measures as shall be deemed desirable to secure a lasting peace between the inhabitants of said islands and the United States. The persons so to be appointed shall be commissioned by the President, who is authorized to make such rules and regulations for the government of such commission in their effort to secure peace as he shall consider necessary to carry out the spirit of this section. The persons so appointed shall each receive a salary of $10,000 per annum, to be paid monthly. The United States shall bear all the expenses of said commission while en route to or from the said islands, or while there performing the duties imposed by law or by the instructions of the President, as herein provided for. The salary of the members of such commission and the other expenses thereof shall be paid out of the money appropriated for the support of the Army.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, the Senator from Indiana asked me about the order for the court-martial. I was not prepared then to say when the court-martial was ordered, nor am I now prepared to say when the Department received knowledge of the order. That must be determined otherwise. But in a telegram sent by the Adjutant-General to Chaffee on April 15, 1902, I find the following:

On the 24th of March instructions were mailed you containing statement of charges against those officers—

Speaking of some officers—and Gen. Jacob H. Smith—

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I should like to ask the Senator from what document he is reading?

Mr. TELLER. It appears in some of the testimony taken by the committee.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. By the Committee on the Philippines?

Mr. TELLER. Yes; I will go back to the beginning of the paragraph:

On the 24th of March instructions were mailed you containing statement of charges against those officers and Gen. Jacob H. Smith as the basis of the investigation ordered by the cable of March 4.

Further instructions in both matters are required by the following facts.

I call the attention of the Senate to the following:

Press dispatches state that upon the trial of Major Waller, of the Marine Corps, testimony was given by Waller, corroborated by other witnesses, that Gen. Jacob H. Smith instructed him to kill and burn; that the more he killed and burned the better pleased General Smith would be; that it was no time to take prisoners, and that when Major Waller asked General Smith to define the age limit for killing, he replied "Everything over 10."

I do not know, but I assume that that is a correct statement of what the order to Waller was. It does not appear to have been even confined to males over 10—"everything over 10;" but of course if it was supposed to be confined to males it would exclude noncombatants, as well as combatants, which does seem to me perfectly horrible to contemplate. I think, Mr. President, the order calls for very prompt action on the part of the Department, and what is more——

Mr. FAIRBANKS. If I may tax the kindness of the Senator for a moment, I will say that I interrupted him a moment ago simply to obtain information. I do not have complete information on the subject, and I supposed the Senator, with his usual care, had obtained all that pertained to it. It did not seem to me that he should criticise the Government for what had been done without its knowledge.

I do not believe that the Senator thinks for one moment that the Government of the United States would sanction in the Philippines or anywhere else, in the name of war, anything that did not conform to the ordinary usages of war, and that if there has been anything done by any officer of the Government in the Philippines which is in contravention of those rules which are recognized in modern warfare the Government would instantly see that the officer who had violated the rules of war was brought to summary account. I do not think we should charge the Government with any delinquency before the case had been brought to the attention of the officers of the Government. If the authorities in Washington acted when advised of alleged wrongdoing, they have acted properly and are not censurable.

Mr. TELLER. That is the question. I had not supposed myself when I heard of the court-martial that the Department here had had knowledge of this enormity, but a very respectable journal published last Sunday, and so far it has not been disputed by anybody, the statement that the Department had this knowledge and by its silence, at least, approved of it for many, many months, if not a year, before the court-martial was ordered. I hope it will be proved, for the credit of the Government, that that is not true.

I know that the knowledge which has gone out has created a great deal of surprise, and I may say it has been a shock to the public mind. I know that it is not confined to this side of the Chamber, nor is it confined to those who believe that as a general policy the policy of the party in power touching the Philippines is an unwise one. The men who are in full accord with it have felt disposed to complain of this order, and some of the best citizens of the United States have entered a very vigorous protest.

Mr. President, I should despair of the welfare of this country if the American people as a people did not repudiate such an order as that. I believe they will, and if this charge should prove to be true, I believe the officer ought to be dismissed from the service.

I have not been inclined, Mr. President, to unduly criticise the Administration here on the conduct of the war in the Philippine Islands. I have never said a great many things that have come to me that would indicate that the war had been carried on in a cruel and unlawful manner.

I see by the report in the press that Major Waller was acquitted upon the ground that he was under obligation to follow the order of his commanding officer. I understand that that is not the law of war. He must follow every order within the rightful power of that officer, but no more. If Gen. Jacob H. Smith had not the authority to issue the order, which I believe no one here will contend, then Major Waller ought to have refused to execute the order. I know it is very difficult for a subordinate to decline to do that, and I think as a rule the punishment should be inflicted upon the officer commanding and not upon the subordinate who executed it, even though he does not approve of a wicked thing.

Mr. President, I will not charge the Administration with any attempt to condone this crime. In this connection I want to read an order of the President, and I am glad to read it. It will be found in the same telegram:

The President desires to know in the fullest and most circumstantial manner all the facts, nothing being concealed, and no man being for any reason favored or shielded. For the very reason that the President intends to back up the Army in the heartiest fashion in every lawful and legitimate method of doing its work, he also intends to see that the most rigorous care is exercised to detect and prevent any cruelty or brutality, and that men who are guilty thereof are punished. Great as the provocation has been in dealing with foes who habitually resort to treachery, murder, and torture against our men, nothing can justify, or will be held to justify, the use of torture or inhuman conduct of any kind on the part of the American Army.

By direction of the Secretary of War:

H. C. CORBIN,
Adjutant-General, Major-General, U. S. Army.

Mr. President, that is a declaration that I have no doubt will be carried out. I hope so at least. But every time we complain of these infractions of the laws of war we are compelled to rather excuse ourselves and explain that we are not attacking the Government or that we are not attacking our soldiers in the Philippines, for all of us on this side are, by implication at least, charged with doing that. I feel that it is my duty to my country and my duty to myself when I know such things are going on to enter my protest, and I should despise myself, as I would despise any man who was afraid to do that thing when he thought he ought to do it.

I know the people who are supporting the Administration are somewhat embarrassed in being frank about these matters. I know, of course, it is a little difficult for them. They want to wait until the full proof is in, and frequently it never gets in with a certain class of people, for no matter what is done they will find some excuse for it.

Could anything be more childish than to say, as many of the newspapers of the country are saying, that these Filipino 10-year-old boys are vigorous soldiers, fighting like men, and therefore we are obliged to kill them. If that had been true of boys 10 years old, which it is not, and everybody knows that it is not, there might have been some modification of the orders, so as at least to kill only those 10-year-old children who had arms in their hands; but the very wording of the order included everybody, it included noncombatants, and it included all without reference to sex. When a military order goes to the extent of making a country "a howling wilderness," so that a bird can not fly through it, as one officer said, there must be, and everybody must know that there is, cruelty of the extremest kind. Old General Sherman said, "War is hell." War will always be hell; but it remains for these modern days to make war what it was in the tenth century. I will venture to say that in all the great wars since the Middle Ages you can not find an order of infamy like that of Bell or that of Smith, and if the order of Smith was lodged in the War Department, as that newspaper says, and it was not repudiated within an hour, everlasting disgrace is brought to this American nation.

Does it seem possible, Mr. President, that any man with American instincts could know that such an order was in existence and not promptly repudiate it? I repeat, I hope for the credit of the American name that it will be proved that when it was known the order was issued it was promptly repudiated and that the statement in the newspaper is not true, but it is for the Administration to tell us when that news came to them.

Newspaper after newspaper, including the Army and Navy Journal, which is supposed to speak for the great Army and Navy of the United States, can find sufficient excuse for these wicked orders. Can anybody here find any excuse for them? Is there any man here who will say that the enormities practiced by the Filipinos justify such enormities on our part?

Why, Mr. President, for two hundred years and more we have conducted war with savages in this country, who burned and scalped and murdered, who have been guilty of treachery of every possible kind, and yet did anybody ever hear of any such cruelties being inflicted upon them or any such wicked order issued? Never, never, Mr. President.

I know we have been charged again and again with cruelties to the Indians, and I have no doubt we have been cruel; but I never before heard of an officer issuing an order of this kind; and if he had done so, it would have been repudiated by the whole American people, even by the people living on the border who were threatened with Indian wars and Indian massacres.

I am somewhat encouraged to find that there are some who are members of the party on the other side of the Chamber, who are ardent supporters of the annexation of the Philippine Islands, and some who are ardent supporters of the doctrine that we are to hold them and exploit them, who have been entering their protest against this last wicked order which has come to our knowledge. I want, in this connection, to read an utterance made yesterday by a very prominent Republican, who can not be charged with any attempt to discredit the party to which he belongs and which has highly honored him. They are the words of an American citizen, delivered in another place, and I believe they found a welcome in the hearts of all who heard them, as I believe they must find a welcome here. I hope that he will not be the last to condemn such conduct.

If the General is correctly reported and stands by the declaration with which he is credited, assuming the responsibility for such orders—

As I understand he has—

then I desire to say that there is no defense; and I hope the President of the United States will have the courage, upon this man's admission, to discharge him dishonorably from the service which he has thus disgraced. [Applause.]

If he is correctly reported as admitting that he issued orders to leave that province a howling waste and wilderness and to kill all above 10 years of age, the innocent with the guilty, that man ought never to be permitted to stay in the service of the United States until the sun goes down. He is a blot not alone upon the army in the Philippines; he is a disgrace to every man who ever wore the uniform of the United States, and he is a blot and a disgrace upon our present civilization. Wait and hear what his justification may be! That man does not live who can justify such orders. [Applause.] There is no justification. There can be no justification. I care not how adroit may be his lawyers, how subtle may be their reasoning, or how cunningly they may frame their plea; the fact, admitted by his own mouth, that he issued such orders is sufficient for me to hope that there is the courage and the patriotism, the humanity and the Christianity, at the other end of this avenue that will not permit him to wear the Federal uniform twenty-four hours hence.

This is no question of party. This rises above all party levels. In the name of humanity we protest. For the fame of our civilization; for the honor of those who wore both the blue and the gray during the long years of civic strife; in the name of those who wore the nation's uniform and marched to glory and to honor beneath the folds of the American flag in Cuba, in Porto Rico, and in the Philippines; in the name of the compassionate Christ, whose followers we profess to be, we protest and deny the right of any man to wear the American uniform under a commission from this Government and place such a blot upon the banner of freedom. Nor can we believe that the God of battles can march with us where such practices are permitted to prevail. [Applause.]

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, some time ago the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] asked me about the orders that were quoted by the newspaper article which has been read, and why we did not send for them. Then he went off on the question of Mindanao, and the debate drifted away without my having an opportunity of saying to him what I desired.

On the 16th of April, 1902, the Secretary of War addressed the following letter to me as chairman of the Philippine Committee:

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, April 16, 1902.

Hon. H. C. LODGE,
Chairman Philippine Committee, United States Senate.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 12th instant, transmitting the following resolution of the Philippine Committee of the United States Senate:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of War be requested to send to the committee—

"1. Copies of all orders that have come from commanders and subordinates in the military districts of Tayabas, Samar, Laguna, and Batangas—

Those are the provinces where fighting is going on—together with a statement of the Department's action thereon.

"2. Copies of all official circulars issued by such commanders and subordinates and all official reports from military officers in said districts."

While this resolution indicates no date from which the orders and reports are to commence, I assume that the period intended to be covered is from the date when the civil executive authority theretofore reposed in the military governor was transferred to the civil governor—namely, July 4, 1901—to the present time, and this report, therefore, includes:

1. Copy of an act of the Philippine Commission enacted July 17, 1901, "restoring the provinces of Batangas, Cebu, and Bohol to the control of the military governor." (The parts of Laguna and Tayabas adjoining Batangas in the mountain region are affected by the disturbances in Batangas.)

2. General Chaffee's General Orders, No. 179, July 20, 1901, laying down the procedure to be observed by the military in the provinces designated by the Philippine Commission as fully organized and sufficiently well advanced in all details of civil administration as to warrant passing under the civil executive jurisdiction of the civil governor.

3. Copies of all orders that have come from commanders and subordinates, and copies of all official circulars issued by such commanders and subordinates, and all official reports from military officers of the Third Brigade, whose jurisdiction includes the provinces of Tayabas, Laguna, and Batangas.

4. Similar orders and reports of the Sixth Brigade, which includes the island of Samar.

5. Reports of General Chaffee to the Adjutant-General of the Army, touching operations in the provinces indicated in the resolution.

These papers, it is believed, will fully supply the information called for in the resolution of your committee. It is possible that some of the printed orders furnished are not required, but inasmuch as the purpose for which these orders are required is not indicated, it has been thought best to furnish the committee with all orders that have been issued during the period in question touching in any manner upon the military operations in Tayabas, Laguna, Batangas, and Samar.

So far as the desire of the committee to be furnished with a statement of the action taken by this Department upon these orders is concerned, permit me to say that the matter being one of military administration in the suppression of an insurrection, concerning which the department commander was governed by the rules and articles of war and the regulations for the government of troops in campaign, the Department considered that General Chaffee was able to handle the situation without special instructions from Washington.

Very respectfully, ELIHU ROOT, Secretary of War.

That includes all the orders from which extracts have been made. I think, in the New York Herald article; but, at all events, it includes all the orders of any kind in the disturbed provinces which have been issued since last July and are in the possession of the War Department.

The order of General Smith to Major Waller is not, so far as I am aware, among those orders, nor, so far as I know, was it known to anybody until Major Waller pleaded it in his defense. That was the first I knew of it, and that, I think, is the first anybody here knew of it. As soon as Major Waller had pleaded it in his defense, as I understand, an order was given by the President directing a court-martial of General Smith, and, as has been said here this afternoon, already the court-martial of General Smith is now being proceeded with, and its findings are to come for review to the Secretary of War and the President, and are not to go to General Chaffee.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. CARMACK. Does the Senator know how it happened that that particular order did not go to the War Department?

Mr. LODGE. I have not been able to make out—perhaps the Senator knows—from the statement, whether it was a verbal order or a written order. The first I knew of it, the first the country knew of it, and the first, so far as I am informed, that anybody knew of it, was from the cable dispatch that Major Waller had pleaded this order of General Smith in his defense. Thereupon cable orders were sent from here for the trial of General Smith. I know nothing else about it except that.

Mr. CARMACK. The suggestion made to my mind by that fact is that we are not getting all the orders made by our military officers in the Philippines. I do not doubt that we are getting all that are in the War Department. I do not question that at all.

Mr. LODGE. No.

Mr. CARMACK. But it seems that orders are issued over there, and orders of a very extreme character, which never reach the War Department. I presented a resolution in the Philippine Committee calling for these orders, and this particular order was not sent. I do not mean to suggest at all that it was in the possession of the War Department. I do not suppose it was, and I do not believe it was; I feel sure it was not. But it indicates that our military officers in the Philippines send to the War Department just such orders as they please and suppress just such orders as they please.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator is aware, of course, being a member of the Committee on the Philippines, that since this communication came in we have asked the Department to cable for a copy of the record in the Waller case—the whole record.

Mr. CARMACK. I am aware of that. I myself offered the resolution for that.

Mr. LODGE. That the Senator knows that it was adopted at once by the committee, and we were informed by the War Department that it had been cabled.

Mr. CARMACK. That is not the point of which I was speaking. I was not complaining of any action of the committee or of any action of the War Department in regard to this matter; but I was simply suggesting that orders are given by our military officers in the Philippines, no word or hint of which ever comes to the War Department, and this matter leaked out through the court-martial of Major Waller. It came to the country for the first time in the proceedings of that court-martial, in the defense made by Major Waller, that General Smith had issued an order of this character. Now, it seems that they have never transmitted any such order as that to the War Department, that it is not in the possession of the War Department, and when we call for information from the War Department, it seems we do not get any reliable information as to what is being done in the Philippines.

Mr. LODGE. The Bell orders, which have been cited, are given, as the Senator knows, here in this pamphlet.

Mr. CARMACK. Yes, sir; I know that.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. TILLMAN. In furtherance of the contention or the utterance of the Senator from Tennessee, I am not exactly sure, but it seems to me that the testimony given before the Military Committee by the General of the Army had something to do with unearthing the report which has been suppressed, or held back, or was lying covered up in the War Department in regard to the decimation, we might term it, of the province of Tayabas, or whatever it is, where the population ran down from 300,000 to 200,000.

Mr. CARMACK and Mr. RAWLINS. Batangas.

Mr. LODGE. That was another province; another government.

Mr. TILLMAN. But was not Major Gardener the officer who made the report?

Mr. LODGE. No; it was the secretary of the other province, who was a native Filipino.

Mr. TILLMAN. Is that story true?

Mr. LODGE. I know no more about that than the Senator knows. The report was recently published here, as the Senator knows.

Mr. TILLMAN. Are the committee taking any steps to investigate and to see whether we are just leaving a waste over there—a burned country, with everybody being killed, down to the age of 10?

Mr. LODGE. The Senator evidently has not read the report.

Mr. TILLMAN. I certainly have not.

Mr. LODGE. The report states that since the close of hostilities there—since the war ended—it is estimated that nearly one-third of the population have died of malaria and dysentery, which comes from it.

Mr. TILLMAN. It is very absurd, to my mind, to talk about people who are acclimated and born and raised there dying from malaria.

Mr. LODGE. It may be absurd to the Senator, but that is the statement of the secretary of the province.

Mr. TILLMAN. They have died. The main fact that we are confronted with is that they are dead.

Mr. LODGE. Undoubtedly; the secretary states that.

Mr. TILLMAN. Why they died or whether dysentery is another form of starvation——

Mr. LODGE. I beg the Senator's pardon. The secretary of the province states that they are dead from that cause, and I take it the figures given are but a rough estimate.

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask, then, if the committee are taking any steps to verify that statement? Do we propose to continue going along in this helter-skelter sort of way that we are going?

Mr. LODGE. Does the Senator ask if we have sent for the information?

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask if the committee have taken any steps whatever to discover the present status in that province, what the population formerly was and what it is now, and whether there is any truth in that statement?

Mr. LODGE. The committee have not yet investigated the condition of that province. They only received the report a short time ago. I will say to the Senator that the bill covers just such an investigation as that; but the committee, of course, have not had time to go to the province to get the information.

Mr. TILLMAN. I did not expect the committee to go to the province, but I thought they might make Mohammed come to the mountain, as we are the investigating force, and try to throw some light on the situation in the Philippines. And as the committee is now at work, we might send over and get some witnesses in regard to the situation that would induce us to make some alteration in the policy we are pursuing if we are now simply murdering, butchering, or killing in legitimate warfare, or whatever term you may use.

You say that they are a vicious, cruel, and semibarbarous people, who are dealing with us in a way that makes us retaliate, and all that kind of thing. The question that presents itself to my mind is, how long we are going to continue to hold on to this bag of cats. If they are such a type of men in their love of liberty, or what little they have of it is of such a character, as to make them determined to perpetually war with us, resist our authority, and do everything possible in their weakened and unarmed condition to maintain a show of resistance, what benefit is it to the American people to persist in this infamous policy?

Mr. LODGE. Is that the question the Senator wants to ask of me? I thought the Senator was going to ask me a question; but he went on delightfully, as he always does, in regard to so many other matters, that I lost sight of his question.

Mr. TILLMAN. I think that the little speech, as you term it, which I have made, is just bristling with questions before, behind, above, and below. [Laughter.]

Mr. LODGE. The last question the Senator asked opens up the entire subject, on which I hope to make a speech, but which I can not reply to in a few minutes.

Mr. TILLMAN. I hope the Senator, or some other Senator on that side of the Chamber, will get equipped for a speech, but it seems, as my friend from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] says, that nobody on that side of the Chamber is inclined to discuss the subject.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I simply rise to ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question, as he has the floor.

Mr. LODGE. Though I had the floor, I yielded it long since, but I gladly take it again. [Laughter.]

Mr. CULBERSON. Whatever may be the situation and the truth with reference to the order of Gen. Jacob H. Smith, I do not suppose the Senator will deny that the order of General Bell, which is almost as reprehensible, was issued on the 8th day of December of last year, and that that order, at least, has been acquiesced in by the War Department. It has never been disapproved or countermanded, and there has never been any disposition, so far as we are advised, on the part of the Administration, to inquire why it was issued. I should like to ask the Senator if he indorses that order of General Bell, issued on the 8th day of December, 1901? It is a question, Mr. President, to which I desire an answer from the Senator from Massachusetts, if he is disposed to give one.

Mr. LODGE. Does the Senator ask if I indorse the order of General Bell?

Mr. CULBERSON. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. No, sir; I do not indorse cruel methods of waging warfare. I think, as every right-minded man must think, that that order of General Smith's, as it stands published before the world, is an order which every American must regret—bitterly regret.

General Bell's order I have not looked at for some time, but if I remember correctly the order the Senator refers to contains a number of provisions. It is quite a long order, as I recall it. It contains a number of provisions, some of which seemed to me harsh and cruel without understanding the conditions which prompted it. The whole testimony—I do not know, and I can only speak of my own knowledge on the surface, but the order of General Smith seems to me revolting.

Mr. CULBERSON. I will ask if the Senator does not also remember that the President of the United States has very recently sent his congratulations to General Bell for his vigorous prosecution of the war in that province under the very order which the Senator has just now condemned?

Mr. LODGE. That is something I do not know. That is something of which I have not heard.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, on the last day of the speech of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK] he referred to the fact that in the province of Batangas one-third of the population has within a short time died. I want to know if that is the province the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] referred to, where he said the people had died of malaria and dysentery?

Mr. LODGE. That is one of the statements in the report, and I read it. It is the report I had in mind.

Mr. TELLER. It is the report to which the Senator from Tennessee called attention. I am not quite certain, but I understand that Batangas is in the province of Luzon.

Mr. RAWLINS. The province of Batangas is in the island of Luzon, not far from Manila, and the report has been made by the secretary of the province. It was made on the 16th day of December of last year. That is the date of it. The secretary stated substantially as the Senator from Massachusetts has stated, that one-third of the inhabitants have died.

Mr. TELLER. In what period of time has this large number of people died—how many months or years?

Mr. RAWLINS. The precise time is not given.

Mr. TELLER. And the population there has decreased one-third?

Mr. RAWLINS. One-third—from over 300,000 to 200,000.

Mr. TELLER. I may be mistaken—and if I am mistaken I can be readily corrected by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT]—but I think that is one of the provinces we were told quite early in the session had been pacified.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes.

Mr. TELLER. I think that is so. I do not think I am mistaken about that. The Senator from Connecticut, who read the list of the pacified provinces, can inform us. I am quite sure that there have been no active hostilities in the immediate vicinity of Manila for some time.

Mr. LODGE. Batangas is a southern province, just south of Manila, and very near it; the last point at which we were fighting.

Mr. TELLER. So I understand.

Mr. RAWLINS. If the Senator from Colorado will permit me, it was in respect of that very province, on the 16th day of December, 1901, as shown by this report to have been decimated to the extent of one-third of its people, that Bell's order, referred to by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] a moment ago, was made applicable.

Mr. TELLER. The order applied to that particular province.

Mr. CARMACK. That was one of the orders that for some reason or other was not sent here by the War Department.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, there is one proposition in the bill before the Senate to which I wish to give my approval. There is not very much in the bill with which I could possibly agree. But I find this provision:

> That all inhabitants of the Philippine Islands continuing to reside therein who were Spanish subjects on the 11th of April, 1899, and then resided in the Philippine Islands, and their children born subsequent thereto, shall be deemed and held to be citizens of the Philippine Islands, and as such entitled to the protection of the United States.

To that part "entitled to the protection of the United States" I wish to give my adhesion. I wish to know if a condition of affairs exits over there where every third man, woman, and child, is dying or has died, amongst a class of people who, whatever may be their relations to us, the committee thus declare are entitled to our protection, and as we are commanding them I suppose everybody will agree to that.

Mr. TILLMAN. What about the 300,000 slaves in Mindanao?

Mr. TELLER. I will forego that question. If that is the condition over there, it seems to me, with respect to the humanitarians of this section of the country, who have gone into so much severe travail over the condition in Cuba, where they say the people are in danger of being in want at some time in the future, and who have to admit that the danger does not now exist, and with respect to which we are called upon to help them, it would have been a great deal better if we had been called on to help these people. There is not anybody who does not know that if a third of a population die, they do not die from any normal cause. People may die in vast numbers when some great plague sweeps over them, but I have not heard of any such thing in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. Is not the statement that a third of the population have died, coupled with the statement, by the man who asserts it, that the cause of their death was malaria or dysentery? Is not one branch of the assertion of fact supported by precisely the same evidence as the other? I suppose, of course, the Senator does not construe the provision in the bill that the United States shall protect the Filipinos to include protection against malaria and dysentery?

Mr. TELLER. The Senator from Wisconsin has the reputation of being a very good lawyer. He knows very well that when a man makes a statement of that kind I am not obliged to take his entire statement.

Mr. SPOONER. If you take part of it.

Mr. TELLER. No; I am not. The fact of the death is one thing. Why they died may be entirely another,

Mr. SPOONER. The whole statement is based on this report of December 18, 1901.

Mr. TELLER. Yes; unfortunately that is the only way we have of getting evidence.

Mr. SPOONER. It is signed by Caedo, provincial secretary. Will the Senator permit me to read just a word?

Mr. TELLER. Yes.

Mr. SPOONER. He says:

> I have the honor to report to your excellency that the conditions of the province during the present year can not be more deplorable.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator permit me to make a suggestion in this connection which may reconcile the two Senators?

Mr. SPOONER. As soon as I have read this.

Mr. BACON. I beg pardon.

Mr. SPOONER. It is only a word.

Mr. TELLER. Finish it.

Mr. SPOONER. It continues:

> The mortality, caused no longer by the war, but by disease, such as malaria and dysentery, has reduced to a little over 200,000 the more than 300,000 inhabitants which in former years the province had.

Mr. TELLER. What does he say as to the cause that brought on the condition?

Mr. LODGE (to Mr. SPOONER). Read it all.

Mr. SPOONER. I will continue the reading:

> All the highways and wagon roads and bridle paths are almost impassable, even for cavalry, in the wet season, except in a few places where they have been repaired by the military.
> Working animals having been decimated by the epizootic (rinderpest), agriculture, the province's only source of wealth, is entirely prostrated, and as a climax to all these events, the war, with all its fatal results.
> Out of the 22 pueblos of this province a relative peace is enjoyed only in the pueblos or Calaca, Balayan, Tuy, Ilang, Calatagan, and Nasugbu.

It is pretty long. Does the Senator want me to read it all?

Mr. TELLER. I do not care.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; read it all.

Mr. SPOONER. Very well.

> The committees of the Federal party having been created in the pueblos of the province since February last, civil rule having been inaugurated and established since the May following, and the pueblos having been organized into municipalities pursuant to the existing municipal code, with the exception of Cuenta, Taysan, and Rosario, all of us who were lovers of peace and order hoped that those who were still in arms would surrender and recognize American sovereignty, in order to enjoy the benefits of that rule with us. But the revolutionary leaders, miserably deceived by the revolutionary committee of Hongkong, and all of them, down to the last private, being the rulers over the life and property of the poor farmers who live outside the immediate protection of the American forces, have wished to remain in arms, for if they surrender the greater part will become vagrants, accustomed as they are to living at the expense of others.
> Nevertheless, through the efficient measures which the illustrious General Bell is beginnlng to take, such as the blockade of the ports of this province and the prohibition of all trade, it is to be hoped that within a short time the desired peace may be secured. All the more since all the pueblos are clamoring for it and willing to lend their valuable assistance to its securement.
> After all, I foresee the coming of famine with all its horrible consequences. It is true that during the coming year, in so far as the resources of the province will permit, the famine referred to may be partly remedied by giving work to the poor in the repair of roads, construction of bridges, and opening of means of communication between the pueblos. These resources shall become exhausted—as they will undoubtedly—since agriculture it dead, owing to the lack of working animals, which has been general throughout the archipelago. Famine must reign in this province in the coming years, and God grant that it may not be for a long time.
> This is all I can report to your excellency.
> Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
> FLORENCIO R. CAEDO, > Provincial Secretary.

Mr. CARMACK. I should like to ask the Senator a question. Did the Senator ever hear of any great plague or epidemic where one-third of the people died?

Mr. SPOONER. No; I do not know that it has been true or that it has not. I think probably it is true——

Mr. CARMACK. I can not recall any instance in history where one-third of a people ever died from any plague.

Mr. SPOONER. That may be; but, nevertheless, I think it is very possible, with due deference to my friend, that it may be a fact that there have been plagues which destroyed one-third of the population. I think it is barely possible, if this recital as to the situation in that province is correct, that some people have left it and gone where there was no famine——

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

Mr. SPOONER. But I know nothing about it. I beg pardon of the Senator from Colorado for having presumed to trespass upon his time.

Mr. CULBERSON. I simply desired to ask the Senator from Wisconsin a question.

Mr. TELLER. Proceed.

Mr. CULBERSON. I have the report before me, and I will read the section to which the Senator refers.

The mortality, caused no longer by the war, but by disease, such as malaria and dysentery, has reduced to a little over 200,000 the more than 300,000 inhabitants which in former years the province had.

I will ask the Senator if this is not the proper and the clear construction of that sentence, that there has been a mortality of a hundred thousand people in that province, but at the time this report was written it was not being caused by the war, but by malaria and dysentery, not that the whole 100,000 people had died from malaria and dysentery, but that there had been a mortality in the province of 100,000 out of 300,000.

Mr. FORAKER. From what page does the Senator read?

Mr. CULBERSON. Page 887 of the RECORD. That is the clear and plain construction, it seems to me, of this report of the Secretary.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator asks me a question and proceeds to answer it himself.

Mr. CULBERSON. I thought I might as well do it then as later.

Mr. SPOONER. I will answer the Senator later and in my own time.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator from Colorado permit me a moment?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly. I want to know something of the condition over there, and I believe the Senator from Georgia does know about it.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I believe if the investigation is ever made, which ought to be made, on the ground, as to what has occurred in the Philippine Islands and as to the conditions there, it will be shown that this particular province is not the only province in which there has been this enormous mortality. I think it will be shown—of course this is only an opinion, and does not profess to be more than that—that there has been an enormous mortality from disease, a mortality from disease altogether normal, very far in excess of such mortality as ordinarily exists in those islands from malaria, dysentery, or any other diseases.

I think it will be found that the disease has been superinduced by what I started to say was almost the total destruction—and I have no doubt that will be found to be true in many places—of the ordinary food crops of the people as the result of the war. There has been such an absolute destruction of food crops as has necessitated that the people should live upon what we hear spoken of in the reports as roots—really an inferior quality of sweet potato which grows in those islands—and, while that sweet potato may support life, it is so inferior in its nutritive properties that those who are compelled to rely upon it alone are so reduced in vitality as to become the general prey of disease. I believe it will be found upon investigation, if that investigation is ever made, that that has been true not simply of the province of Batangas, but very largely true in many other provinces of the archipelago.

I suggest that, as I stated a moment ago when I endeavored to get the floor, with the idea that it can reconcile the contention of the Senator from Colorado as to what was the natural thing to anticipate and to believe, and the contention of the Senator from Wisconsin as to the evidence in the matter. I believe they are both correct that, as an ordinary thing, it would be incredible and as an ordinary thing it would not occur. I believe it to be correct that there has been this immense mortality from disease. I believe it is entirely abnormal and due to the fact that the food crops of the islands have been almost entirely destroyed, at least wherever there has been active warfare; the people have been compelled to attempt to subsist on wild roots, and that they have died off by the hundred thousand, and not one hundred thousand, but many hundreds of thousands.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator from Georgia has the advantage of the rest of us of having been there and of knowing something about the conditions that we do not know from actual acquaintance. I am glad he made the statement. I did not question the fact that these people had died of disease. I did not mean that I thought they had been killed by the Army, but I thought they had not died from the natural diseases of the country, malaria and dysentery, which prevail in every country in the world, so far as I know. They perhaps died from disease brought on by the fact that we had invaded a whole country, and if the newspapers could be believed—the Army statements—we had destroyed everywhere we could all food of the country, both for man and beast. We saw frequently in the papers that in certain places the rice had been destroyed, and in others this and that or another article, and that a certain number of buildings were burned.

Mr. BACON. And the islands blockaded so that no other food products could be brought in.

Mr. TELLER. And, as the Senator from Georgia says, the islands blockaded and the statement distinctly made that no food should be introduced.

Of course those people were at one time in hostility to us. That is one of the provinces which was first pacified, as we thought; but it broke out later. That is why Bell's order was justified by some—as severe as it is. It was attempted to be justified upon the theory that those people had pretended for a time to have accepted our government and our control, and then broke away. Those people have died because they did not have, probably, as the Senator from Georgia says, sufficient nourishment.

I wish to say for myself that if the islands were a thousand times as rich as they are and a thousand dollars were coming to us where a cent is coming to us by our connection with them, I would not want the money at the expense of these people's lives, nor do the American people. While, of course, when you say "protection" it does not mean that we will support them, I do say that if we have destroyed the food in order to destroy the insurgents it was an act of great inhumanity that we left those people there to starve to death, as they undoubtedly have done; and there is an obligation on this Government, not an obligation because they are citizens but the obligation of humanity, that the Government should see that these people, whose living we have taken away from them, do not starve.

The people of Batangas are not savages. They are amongst the best people of Luzon. They are a people who have been spoken of as a very mild, simple, and pleasant people by writers who went there before they were induced to find fault with them and color their statements. I wish to repeat that if you can spend, at the expense of one class of American citizens, four or five million dollars on Cuba, where every witness who was brought before the House committee, except one or two, admitted that there was no immediate distress, but said they were very much afraid there might be distress in the future, where there is no trouble, but might be trouble in the future, the whole body of the American people could spare a few hundred thousand dollars to furnish food to these people, whether they are citizens or not, for everybody must admit that they must be under our protection as long as we assume to dominate and control the country.

When Dewey took possession of Manila, I confess to a great deal of ignorance about the population, but I do not think I was any more ignorant than my associates here. I do not think anybody knew much about them. I went over to the Congressional Library and I got everything I could get in the Library on the subject to see if I could find out what kind of people they were—whether they were a class of people with whom we could get along, etc., and what was the value of the islands. I now know something about those people. They are a Christian people. Almost the entire population of the island of Luzon, except a few people in the very interior, are Christian people.

Mr. CARMACK. And nine-tenths of them can read and write.

Mr. TELLER. And as the Senator from Tennessee says, nine-tenths of them can read and write. For more than two hundred years they have been recognized in the civilized world as the best of all the Asiatics. They have been called again and again, and I can show where they were so called more than fifty years ago, the Anglo-Saxons of Asia. They are the only people in Asia among whom any man who has a knowledge of the history of the world can have any hopes of establishing a free government. You can not do it in India. You can not do it in China. There is some hope of doing it amongst these people if they are properly treated. Great Britain has come pretty near solving that problem down in the Malay Peninsula after fifteen years of kindness, not by making war odious, not by making it to such an extent that everybody would want to quit, but preventing it by recognizing the rights of the people and giving to them the privilege of participating in the government under which they live.

Dean Worcester went there and spent a couple of years off and on in those islands. Before he had become imbued with the idea that everybody who did not gracefully and cheerfully submit to being trampled on by the United States soldiers was a bad individual, he told us what those people were, and I wish to read from his book. I want to say that it corresponds with every statement made by every intelligent person about whom I know anything, including Mr. Foreman, the Englishman who lived there eighteen or twenty years, and a Scotchman whom I know, who told me he had lived there for eighteen years—that they are the best class of Asiatics. Of course I do not pretend that they are as good as some other classes of people, or ever will be. I have expressed my opinion about that a dozen times.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator does not include the Japanese among the Asiatics?

Mr. TELLER. I do not have the highest admiration for the Japanese. The Japanese is a Malay. I believe to-day that in many respects the Filipino is as good as the Japanese. I am not going into that discussion, however.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator from Colorado will allow me to make a statement in this connection I will say that I have seen both people, and outside of the mere matter of physical strength and vigor I consider the Filipino not inferior to the Japanese. That would be my estimate of him.

Mr. TELLER. I shall not enter into any controversy with the Senator from Georgia on that subject. I do not think it particularly pleasant for me to stand up here and complain of even the Japanese. We have pleasant diplomatic relations with them.

Mr. BACON. I did not mean to deprecate them in any way by the remark I made.

Mr. TELLER. No. I think as much of the one as I do of the other, certainly.

I desire to read two or three little extracts from Dean C. Worcester's book, entitled The Philippine Islands. It was published in 1898, before the war began. On page 475 he says:

> The important questions which intimately concern the future of the Philippines result from the character of the 5,000,000 civilized natives and the conditions existing in the regions which they now inhabit. I trust that my readers have gained some idea of these conditions, but I have as yet said but little concerning the character of the people themselves.
> They belong for the most part to three tribes—the Tagalogs, the Ilocanos, and Visayans. Some attempt has been made to draw fine distinctions between the Tagalogs and Visayans, rather to the discredit of the latter people, but I confess that it seems to me a little farfetched. Certainly it would be a great mistake to maintain that the Tagalogs of Mindoro were superior to the Visayans of Cebu. Some differences will inevitably be found between the inhabitants of different islands, or even of different parts of the same island, yet I think that the civilized natives show sufficient homogeneity to be treated as a class.

That is, the civilized class.

> Foreman states that after years of faithful service a trusted native employee will sometimes rob his master or commit some horrid crime against him—betraying him into the hands of brigands, for instance. This is doubtless true, but such occurrences are certainly far from common, nor, on the other hand, are they by any means confined to the Philippines.

Not wanting to take much of the time of the Senate, I skip some parts of what he says.

> On the whole, I will believe that they are naturally fairly intelligent, and they are often most anxious for an opportunity to get some education. On a number of occasions we secured good servants who asked for nothing but food and an opportunity to pick up a little English or Spanish.
> It is often said that he lacks originality. If this means that he has never made any extensive contributions toward the advancement of science, literature, or art, the charge must be admitted, although the Tagalog race has developed one painter of merit, an author of no mean ability, and some wood carvers who have done admirable work. But the average native, situated as he is, could not be expected to make any advancement along such lines. Within his own sphere he is certainly ingenious and ever ready with a remedy for any mishap which may occur.

Now, skipping some, but all creditable to these people, he says:

> The civilized Filipino certainly has many good qualities to offset his bad traits. The traveler can not fail to be impressed by his open-handed and cheerful hospitality. He will go to any amount of trouble, and often to no little expense, in order to accommodate some perfect stranger, who has not the slightest claim on him; and he never turns one of his own race from his door.
> If cleanliness be next to godliness, he certainly has much to recommend him. Every village has its bath, if there is any chance for one, and men, women, and children patronize it liberally. Should the situation of a town be unfortunate in this particular, its people will carry water from a great distance if necessary, and, in any event, will keep clean.
> Hardly less noticeable than the almost universal hospitality of the well-regulated homes is their happy family life which one soon finds to be the rule. Children are orderly, respectful, and obedient to their parents. Wives are allowed an amount of liberty hardly equaled in any other Eastern country, and they seldom abuse it. More often than not they are the financiers of their families, and I have frequently been referred by the head of a house to "mi mujer"— > when I wished to make a bargain. Women have their share of the work to do, but it is a just share, and they perform it without question and without grumbling.

That is his wife—

> At vespers in the evening there is always a pretty scene. An instant hush comes over the busy village. In each house father, mother, and children fall on their knees before the image or picture of some saint and repeat their prayers. The devotions over, each child kisses the hand of his father and his mother, at the same time wishing them good evening. He then makes an obeisance to each of his brothers and sisters, as well as to each guest who happens to be present, repeating his pleasant salutation with each funny bow. Host and hostess also greet one in the same way, and in remote places, where white men are a rarity, the little tots often kneel to kiss one's hand.
> The civilized native is self-respecting and self-restrained to a remarkable degree.

Mr. President, I am going to stop right here and say a word about what Governor Taft said. He told how sensitive these people are when we call them negroes and when we speak of them as savages. That is supported by this declaration that they are self-respecting.

> He is patient under misfortune and forbearing under provocation. While it is stretching the truth to say that he never reveals anger, he certainly succeeds much better in controlling himself than does the average European. When he does give way to passion, however, he is as likely as not to become for the moment a maniac, and to do some one a fatal injury.
> He is a kind father and a dutiful son. His aged relatives are never left in want, but are brought to his home, and are welcome to share the best that it affords to the end of their days.
> Among his fellows he is genial and sociable. He loves to sing, dance, and make merry. He is a born musician, and considering the sort of instruments at his disposal, and especially the limited advantages which he has for perfecting himself in their use, his performances on them are often very remarkable.
> He is naturally fearless, and admires nothing so much as bravery in others. Under good officers he makes an excellent soldier, and he is ready to fight to the death for his honor or his home.

I heard not long since, when a Senator was reading from an order, that they burned 10,000 homes, and then in a few minutes he read from another and he was asked: "They were negro huts, were they not?" Mr. President, they were the homes of that class of people; they were the homes of a Christian, civilized people, and if they were not filled with the rich furniture that you may find in the homes in Washington, there was the love of the family, the self-respect, the education of the children; there was everything that goes to make decency in civilized life. And yet in two towns, within a short distance of each other, 22,000 of them were burned out and sent adrift. I do not wonder that they are dying by the thousands and tens of thousands.

I want to say now, Mr. President, that the American people can not escape the condemnation that the world will put upon us, the condemnation that our own people will put upon us, the condemnation that every right-thinking man must put upon himself if he does not protest against this wicked and miserable attempt to compel these people to accept our Government whether they desire it or not.

Mr. President, I did not intend to say anything about this question at all. Some day I mean to take up the bill and show what I think are, speaking mildly, the absurd features of it.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, April 29, 1902.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

OMNIBUS PUBLIC BUILDING BILL.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I submit the following privileged report.

House resolution No. 227.

Resolved, That on the 29th day of April, 1902, immediately after the reading of the Journal, the House shall resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14018) entitled "A bill to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, and for other purposes," and after three hours of general debate the Committee of the Whole shall rise and the chairman shall report the bill; whereupon, without debate or intervening motion, the vote shall be taken on engrossment and third reading of the bill and (if the bill shall have passed to be engrossed and read a third time) on the final passage.

The following amendments recommended by the Committee on Rules were read:

Page 1, lines 1 and 2, strike out the words "on the 29th day of April, 1902."

Page 1, lines 2 and 3, strike out the words "reading of the Journal" and insert "adoption of this resolution."

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, if this rule shall be adopted, immediately on its adoption the House will resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of the omnibus public building bill, and after three hours' debate rise and report the bill to the House, and thereupon a vote will be taken on its passage.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. DALZELL. I will. What time does the gentleman want?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. About fifteen minutes.

Mr. DALZELL. I will yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I do not expect to use that much time, Mr. Speaker, and I will yield some of it to gentlemen on this side, if they desire it.

Mr. Speaker, I do not rise to oppose this rule with the expectation of defeating it. There is no politics to this bill.

Mr. CREAMER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise a point of order. I believe it will be too late after we have debated the rule.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. CREAMER. My point of order is based on what I find in the Constitution, Manual and Digest, which is supposed to govern us to a certain degree. It is much more material, Mr. Speaker, that there should be a rule to go by than what that rule is. I maintain, Mr. Speaker, that this report suspends Rule X, which permits the offering of amendments to all questions brought before the House, and under Rule XXVIII to suspend that rule requires a two-thirds vote. Am I correct in that proposition?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not correct.

Mr. CREAMER. Then I will appeal from the decision of the Chair——

The SPEAKER. The question has been fought out again and again, and is well settled that the Committee on Rules can bring in a rule providing for order of business in the House——

Mr. CREAMER. Has it been settled in this House, Mr. Speaker, in the Fifty-seventh Congress?

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand the gentleman.

Mr. CREAMER. When was the decision rendered?

The SPEAKER. There have been many decisions that a rule from the Committee on Rules, which fixes the order of business, with the approval of the House, does not require a two-thirds vote.

Mr. CREAMER. I raise the point that it does require a two-thirds vote, in accordance with the rule I find here, as it goes beyond fixing the order of business, and I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to lay the appeal on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order, and from that decision the gentleman from New York appeals to the judgment of the House, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to lay that appeal on the table. The question before the House is, Shall the appeal be laid on the table?

The question was taken, and the motion of Mr. DALZELL to lay the appeal on the table was agreed to.

Mr. CREAMER. Most of the gentlemen upon this side, as well as on the other side of the House, would seem to have pork in the barrel. [Laughter.]

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, my friend from New York [Mr. CREAMER] is mistaken in his last remark, in which he said that "all had pork in the barrel." Speaking for one, I will say that I have no "pork in the barrel." I am utterly and irreconcilably opposed to the adoption of this rule—not because I have no "pork in the barrel" (for I did not ask to have any in it). I have not asked for any public building at this session of Congress in my district, and therefore in opposing this rule I am not influenced by reason of the rejection of an application for a building.

But, sir, I am eternally opposed to this method of legislation. It can not be justified by any kind or course of reasoning or argument. We are here near the middle of the session. We have ample time to consider public-building bills. Mr. Speaker, for more than a hundred years, in the history of Congress, bills of this kind have been considered separately. It is a very modern, a very recent idea that we can not consider public-building bills upon their merits, and that each bill to construct a public building can not be allowed to stand upon its own merits, if it has any. I think this is the second bill of this kind that I have ever seen considered in the House of Representatives.

Now, sir, this form of legislation is wrong—radically wrong. Under the pending rule, no gentleman is to be permitted to offer an amendment to increase the amount of an appropriation for a public building, and no man is to be permitted to move to reduce the amount proposed by the committee. All must accept the action of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. Their judgment must be taken as infallible.

Mr. Speaker, I care not how wise the committee may be; I care not how wise the gentlemen are who compose that committee, and I mean no reflection upon the committee or any member of it when I say it, but it is absolutely impossible that those 17 gentlemen can know with mathematical precision what amount is required for each of the public buildings for which an appropriation is recommended in this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I have not had time to read the report on the bill. It was not here yesterday. It was only delivered to us this morning. I have not had time to glance over its contents, but I find that it is a report of 12 or 13 pages. I presume it undertakes to give the arguments in favor of each one of these appropriations. I do not know that that is what is contained in this report; but I find that it refers to several of these public buildings. The bill provides a method or plan for procuring sites, and also defines, with at least some degree of detail, the manner of expending the appropriations made. Whether these provisions are wise or unwise no one here can tell.

Mr. Speaker, it is futile to stand here and object to this measure. I take it for granted that before the bill was reported enough promises were obtained, enough "pork" was put into "the barrel" to guarantee the passage of the bill. It may be right that it should pass. I can not controvert it. I have not had the time, and no gentleman outside of the committee has had the time to investigate the particular items of this bill, and yet we are called upon to vote for it in gross, to vote for it as one bill, to vote for it without amendment, to vote for it without the opportunity of offering an amendment, and thus we are to take $17,000,000 or $18,000,000 out of the Treasury or reject the bill, and thereby vote that no appropriation shall be made for any public building anywhere.

That is the position in which we are placed. It is not right, Mr. Speaker. With all the time we have—with the session only about half gone—we could take up each one of these propositions as it was the custom to do for a hundred years of our history; we could consider each public-building measure upon its merit and then pass it, either as reported or as amended by the Committee of the Whole.

I have not taken the floor for the purpose of attempting to bring united party action against this bill. It is not a partisan measure; it is not a political measure; but it is one, I repeat, that is radically wrong in its construction, radically wrong in the methods to be pursued for its passage. For one I shall vote against the rule, although I shall not seek to defeat it by calling the yeas and nays. I recognize that it would not be possible to defeat the rule. All I have taken the floor to do is to protest in the name of good legislation against the rule which we are now considering.

I yield five minutes to my colleague [Mr. SIMS].

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] whether he will yield for an amendment striking out so much of this proposed rule as provides that there shall be no amendments offered to the bill.

Mr. DALZELL. I can not.

Mr. SIMS. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to this bill being considered, and no objection, in general, to a rule providing for its consideration; but it does seem to me that it is carrying things to an extreme pass when we can not offer an amendment to an omnibus bill containing numerous items—a bill which the House has had no opportunity to consider and will have no opportunity to consider.

I want to say that, so far as I know, I have no amendments to offer to increase any item in the bill, but there are some items in the bill which I would move to amend by decreasing. In the interest of economy in public expenditures I can not see what it is that has appealed to the Committee on Rules in this House to report a rule providing for the consideration of a bill involving many millions in such a way that it can not be considered in Committee of the Whole by paragraphs and shall not be open to amendments.

It seems to me that is a surrender of the powers of this House which is dangerous in the extreme and which no consideration should prevail upon any member to indorse. I have no objection to the rule if we are permitted to amend, but I want to ask this House, Mr. Speaker, why should the House upon this particular bill be denied the privilege which it exercises on other bills of like character? The river and harbor bill is considered here item by item, with amendments pro and con offered and voted upon. The omnibus war claims bill, reported from the committee of which I have the honor to be a member, is considered in the same way. Now, why is this bill so sacred? Are these appropriations so sacred and is the committee which has considered it so wise that the provisions of the bill must not even be inquired into in this House? Why have three hours of general debate on a bill that can not be amended one way or the other? Why these three hours? If it is a bill so good that it can not be improved by amendment, how can it be improved by general debate? What is the use of general debate?

The House knows in the repeal of the war-revenue taxes that on account of amendments being denied by the special rule it was asked to have no general debate and put the bill upon its immediate passage and it met with the universal approval of the country. Why give three hours now to talk about provisions of a bill which we know is going to pass without the dotting of an "i" or the crossing of a "t"? Omnibus bills are bad enough in their nature when the House has the liberty to consider them in Committee of the Whole with power to amend them, but how much worse do they become when the voice of the House is to be stifled and the House yield to the committee, its servant, its sovereign power to change or amend. I make no reflection upon this committee; they are all my personal friends, and I am not making one particle of complaint personally in regard to the matter; but why should this committee or its action be selected out and dignified with this decree, behind which it is impossible to go, to inquire, to alter, or to amend?

Why not take the omnibus war-claims bill and treat it in the same way? Why not take the river and harbor bill and treat it in the same way? Why not take the naval appropriation bill which is now before the House and treat it in the same way? Whenever the servant of this House has become supreme, then the rules of which this side has complained so much become extremely dangerous. I hope my Democratic friends who have something in this bill will not vote in violation of every principle and doctrine which they have ever maintained simply for fear they will not get justice. I presume every appropriation in this bill is a proper one. As far as I know, it is. Therefore, what reason is there for us to surrender our rights in order to pass a just bill?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] has two minutes remaining.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I will only use a moment of that time in order to emphasize what my colleague has said, that I can see no use in having three hours general debate upon this bill. I ask my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] what can be accomplished by a general debate of three hours here upon this bill? What is the object of the three hours' debate? If we go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union and have general debate, with gentlemen to speak on the state of the Union, that is well enough, but I can not see what good is to be accomplished by three hours of general debate upon the pending measure, with no opportunity to amend. We are to have no right to amend, no right to reduce or to increase any proposition in the bill or to strike out any proposition or insert a new one, yet we are to stand here and speak for three hours. Now, if the proposition were, I say, to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union and have general debate I can see that some good might be accomplished. That is all I care to say, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MERCER].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska is recognized for ten minutes.

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has had under consideration before it over 400 bills authorizing public-building legislation. The aggregate of the amounts asked by those bills foot up almost $67,000,000. The committee realizes that the United States is a growing country and has attempted, as far as possible, to relieve the situation in different parts of the Republic in an economical and systematic way. The committee regret exceedingly that it was impossible to recognize all bills before it, but there are other Congresses to come. It is impossible for one Congress, and especially one session of Congress, to meet all the wants of this great country of ours. We have prepared a bill, after very careful investigation and consideration, which we think upon investigation by the members of this House will meet with almost unanimous approval.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Nebraska yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. MERCER. I do yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Does the gentleman from Nebraska think that the provision in the bill reported by the committee relating to the post-office in New York will give to New York City a post-office within the time in which that great city ought to have one?

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the gentleman from New York, permit me to say that the three gentlemen from the city of New York who have made the most fuss upon the floor of this House about a public building in the city of New York have done more to retard that measure and have done less to give the city of New York any relief whatever than any other members upon the floor of this House; and if the committee had depended upon the three members referred to, who have occupied the time of this House, for information as to the situation in New York, nothing would have been reported by the committee with reference to that city. These three gentlemen have occupied the time of this House in giving data and evidence and information about the condition of affairs in the city of New York, and not one of them ever came before the committee and offered us a single line of evidence why we should do anything in the city of New York, and were it not for Representative GILLET, a member of the committee, and Messrs. MCCLELLAN, CUMMINGS, SULZER, DOUGLAS, and other distinguished gentlemen from the State and city of New York who came to us and gave us this evidence the committee would not have been justified in even recognizing the city of New York in this bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Nebraska yield further to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. MERCER. I gladly yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Did not the entire delegation from New York wait upon the gentleman from Nebraska and implore him to report a bill for the construction of a post-office in New York, and did not the Representatives from New York in the House, when in Committee of the Whole, discussing the Post-Office appropriation bill, and in the gentleman's own room and elsewhere, furnish the gentleman from Nebraska and his committee with statistics showing the absolute necessity for the erection of a post-office in the city of New York?

Mr. MERCER. In reply to the gentleman, permit me to say that the gentleman who is now addressing the House and the other gentleman from New York [Mr. CREAMER] never gave us a line of evidence or a line of information upon which we should act in the committee. They made all their speeches upon the floor of the House, and took good care to make their speeches when I happened to be absent and when other members of the committee were absent from the floor of the House. The truth of the matter is, Mr. Speaker, that the city of New York has been treated magnificently in this bill.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. What! [Laughter.]

Mr. MERCER. Why, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman does not know that New York City is mentioned in the bill, apparently.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Oh, yes, I do; but in what way?

Mr. MERCER. We have authorized a commission, consisting of the Postmaster-General, the Attorney-General of the United States, and the Secretary of the Treasury, to select a site in the city of New York, in Manhattan borough. That commission must take its time and hear all the evidence and information and plans with reference to a building in that city before a site can be purchased. It is not a simple matter to purchase a site in the great city of New York. It may be expensive, and the location must satisfy certain conditions. These three men must decide as to those conditions. Now, it is utterly impossible to construct a building in New York or elsewhere without first obtaining a site, and it will take from six months to two years to buy this site, let this commission work as faithfully as they may. The committee in this bill also aids New York by adding $1,000,000 to the limit of cost of the custom-house in that city.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Nebraska yield further?

Mr. MERCER. No; I do not yield any further.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska declines to yield further to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MERCER. I desire to say, in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, that I think this bill will meet with the approval of this House almost unanimously, as I said before, and we court investigation. I think the bill will be passed almost unanimously. [Applause.]

Mr. DALZELL and Mr. GOLDFOGLE rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DALZELL. I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The question being taken on the adoption of the resolution as amended, on a division (demanded by Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee) there were—ayes 166, noes 33.

Mr. SIMS. The yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

The yeas and nays were refused, 16 members (not a sufficient number) rising in support of the demand therefor.

So the resolution as amended was agreed to.

And then, on motion of Mr. MERCER, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14018) to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, and for other purposes, with Mr. GROSVENOR in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of House bill 14018, pursuant to the special order of the House.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. MERCER (interrupting the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MERCER. Now, Mr. Chairman, in order to arrive at a fair distribution of the three hours, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague, Mr. BANKHEAD, control one half of the time and myself the balance.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. You are both on the same side.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that one-half of the time allotted for general debate be controlled by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] and one-half by the gentleman from Nebraska, chairman of the committee. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I do not rise to object. I want to say that both these gentlemen are upon the same side of the question, and it is not usual for gentlemen on the same side to control all the time.

Mr. MERCER. I thought there was but one side to this question. [Laughter.]

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. It seems so; although 30 gentlemen voted against it.

Mr. MERCER. I will say to the gentleman there will be no trouble about time.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I am not objecting to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] controlling the time; but several gentlemen have asked for time, and all who have asked it are opposed to the bill. I have no doubt the gentleman from Alabama will yield them time.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I desire to say that I have already agreed to yield time to two gentlemen on this question, and they are both opposed to this bill; and I apprehend that every gentleman who asks for time on this side will get it, because there will be but very few who are opposed to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MERCER. I yield forty minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DOUGLAS].

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Chairman, fully understanding that no ultimate good could be accomplished by so doing, as the matter had practically to be fought out in the committee, I have heretofore refrained from making any special remarks relative to any of the anticipated provisions for the interests of New York City which would be incorporated in the bill of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds until such measure was before the House for discussion, and even now I shall endeavor to state my views briefly and to the point.

I desire first to thoroughly indorse and say that I am in full accord with the statements that have been made by other gentlemen from New York City in regard to the absolute needs and requirements of our metropolis for a new uptown post-office building. Also that I fully agree and stand with them in the condemnation and repudiation of the criticism which one New York paper especially has seen fit to mete out to us, wishing to make it appear that we have been lukewarm and derelict in our duty toward the public and not mindful of the wishes of our city in this particular, nor appreciative of the great need for prompt extra postal facilities.

I believe that from the start of this session every man representing the city of New York on this floor has been in full sympathy with the object in view, and that they have done everything in their power to arrive at a proper conclusion of the question, and are still prepared to act in any manner which may benefit New York by securing necessary relief.

It does not require any flight of oratory, long speeches, or statistics, in my judgment, to show the absolute necessities of our city and prove that our needs for a new uptown post-office are urgent and imperative. It is not merely a local question, nor are we looking at it from any selfish standpoint, or desire it to satisfy our own pride, but it is a measure for the benefit of the whole country, and as much their interests as it is ours, as with the present cramped facilities and for the want of proper space to do the work beyond doubt the forwarding of mails rapidly and expeditiously as should be done is not possible. The employees are also called upon to work at a great disadvantage in the basement and other parts of the building not originally intended for that purpose.

The present post-office was built some twenty-five years ago, and our city and the country has nearly doubled in population since. We have also increased largely in intelligence, and letter writing has developed in a most wonderful degree—far beyond the proportionate increase based on population. During the past quarter of a century ten or fifteen millions of aliens have also come to this country, thus increasing enormously the foreign mails, and especially to Europe and nearby countries.

The immense growth of our import and export business has necessitated our merchants to increase rapidly their foreign correspondence, and it has expanded several hundred per cent during the period under discussion.

We must not overlook, as well, the through mail service, thousands of bags of letters and papers reaching our shores almost daily from China, Japan, Australia, New Zealand, the Philippine Islands, and other sections of the great East, now developing so rapidly, entering our portals at San Francisco, crossing the continent, and required to be handled in New York City, which is the great outlet for all foreign correspondence.

Then again we must not forget to mention the introduction of the typewriter, supplemented by the employment of stenographers, as practically all our business houses throughout the land, as well as many of our homes, are now enjoying these advantages, thus enabling a man or a woman to write probably a hundred letters a day, where previously by the pen and hand likely not more than one-third or one-fourth of this number would have been sent out. All these combination of facts have so overtaxed our present facilities that it has become absolutely necessary for us to ask of Congress a generous and prompt response to our needs.

A special bill was introduced by our senior Senator and passed by the Senate for this purpose; and believing fully in the justice of our request, I should have preferred a special bill also to have come before the House, as immediate relief is what is required, and I do not believe that anyone on this floor would not have recognized our necessities and gladly have accorded us consideration. But there was a division of opinion on this matter even among the New York Representatives themselves.

It was then considered that an appropriation for a site and building with a New York commission was desirable; but finally, after a comprehensive discussion of the entire issue and its merits, the present provisions have been thought more feasible and perhaps more to the ultimate advantage of our city, and I wish to say here that, having followed the matter up closely, and practically weekly, I always found the chairman, the gentleman from New York State on the committee, and others desirous of doing what is right by our city and agreeable to our wants having proper consideration.

It is not often that more is granted than is asked for in matters of this kind, but let us look at the question for a moment from this point of view. The postmaster in New York City, as I understand, was anxious to have a building with light and ventilation, large floor space, and accessibility, but so that this could be secured quickly he was not so particular as to the building itself. It is evident, however, that by the provisions we shall now secure even more, as the commission are instructed to obtain a site accessible by streets on all four sides, thus insuring large space, plenty of light and air; and practically this provision means an entire city block, or its equivalent.

It further means that, having obtained a grand site, which this will give us, that we should also secure a building commensurate in importance to the site; and I do not question whatever that when the committee reports to this House, as they are called upon to do—and their instructions to purchase, I should say, are mandatory—that Congress will then willingly grant us a proper appropriation for a building which will be a credit and ornament to the city, and that we shall secure a splendid edifice which will be a pleasure to our citizens and those who visit us from other parts of the country and our foreign friends, and that we will hear no more of a single-story building, which would be entirely inadequate.

The original intention was to have New York men on the commission, but perhaps with wisdom, as it will avoid any possible criticism as to the selection of a site this has been changed, and the commission as named is composed of three upright gentlemen at the head of the most important departments of our Government, and as they will be able easily to obtain all the information they require as to the best likely position for the new building, we can undoubtedly intrust this matter safely to them, although I still believe it might have been well to have had one New Yorker on the commission, say the president of the chamber of commerce.

It is possible that the securing of final relief for New York under the provisions outlined may take somewhat longer, but it also seems clear that we shall ultimately benefit very much by the slight delay, and I think that people in New York City, upon giving the matter consideration, will be satisfied that they have been treated well, considering all the circumstances, and I will point out as well that the commission is not restricted as to the value of the site they are to purchase.

While speaking in connection with this bill I wish also to say just a few words in regard to another important issue which has not, I believe, been mentioned heretofore, and that is the New York custom-house.

I introduced a bill in connection with the completion of this building and have followed the matter up and am pleased to say that the present measure carries an extra appropriation of $1,000,000 toward this object, and the building can probably be finally finished at an expenditure of one and a half millions, which amount we hope to finally secure. I would explain in relation to this appropriation that the building was originally intended to be only five stories in height and built of granite and limestone, also that the offices provided were for the collector, the surveyor, and the naval officer. It has since been deemed desirable that room would also be furnished for the down-town branch of the post-office, and accommodation for the collector of internal revenue, second division, and for the department or board of light-house inspectors, thus saving annually a large amount of money in rental for the Government.

This has necessitated increasing the height of the building by the addition of an extra story. When the building is completed the rental saved will be, for the collector's office, $130,000; naval office, $16,500; internal-revenue office, $7,500; and branch post-office, $6,000, or a total of $160,000, which amount is now being paid out yearly.

It has further been decided, and most wisely, to finish the building entirely of granite, so that we may have a strong and imposing structure which will be worthy of our city, and the site the building occupies, rather than having a building which would be imposing up to the third story and gaudy and cheap on the upper floors.

The New York custom-house is splendidly situated at the end of Broadway, facing north toward that grand avenue, overlooking Bowling Green, a small park. On the east it overlooks the fine building of the New York Produce Exchange; on the west, Battery Park, and on the south the magnificent buildings of the Cheeseborough Company. It occupies an entire city block, and has light and ventilation on all sides, also access. Therefore, reviewing these provisions of the bill, it seems that, after all, New York does not fare so badly.

We are granted for our new custom-house a million dollars to a million and a half. We will obtain a fine site for our new uptown post-office at probably a cost of not less than $2,000,000, and finally a likely further expenditure of one or more millions for the building when we come to Congress asking their indulgence in this matter.

I therefore feel that we should accept in good faith the provisions as named in the bill, and believe that the people of New York will be well satisfied with what has been accomplished after giving the matter proper attention. [Applause.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FEELY].

Mr. FEELY. Mr. Chairman, in opposing this bill I have no criticism to make of the committee except that I deprecate their judgment. On December 10, 1901, I introduced a bill for a public building at Oak Park, Ill., the appropriation proposed being $35,000. The same identical bill, without the crossing of a "t" or the dotting of an "i," was introduced by my predecessor in the previous Congress, Mr. Lorimer. I introduced that bill at the request of many of the leading citizens of the village of Oak Park. The representations that were made to me as to the desirability of this appropriation were such as could not be gainsaid. Subsequently, on the 4th of February, in response to a circular letter of the chairman of the committee, the postmaster of that place transmitted to him a letter, a part of which I will quote:

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER,
Oak Park, Cook County, Ill.

* * * Some of our reasons for thinking a public building should be erected in Oak Park are:

First, that the amount of postal business done here warrants the erection of a building. We have 14 letter carriers, 6 clerks (including assistant postmaster), and I have the recommendation of the assistant superintendent of free-delivery division that 2 additional carriers be allowed us when the appropriation for 1902 be available.

Second, that our present quarters are totally inadequate. Including substitute letter carriers, special messenger boys, and janitor, there are 25 persons employed in the office, with a space within the walls of only 1,749 feet. There is no swing room for the carriers, no lockers for the clerks or carriers, a lack of rack room, and inadequate toilet facilities for the female clerks; and the office occupies the same room it did when less than half the present force was employed.

Third, that the character of the public and private buildings in Oak Park, with its reputation of being one of the most beautiful places in the West, calls for a post-office building that will not discredit the National Government.

Fourth. That it will be more economical to spend $35,000 for a building (at the rate of interest paid by the Government) than it will be to pay rent for such quarters as will have to be provided us.

Respectfully submitted.

W. A. HUTCHINSON, Postmaster.

I could add little to that, even if I had the time. The post-office at Oak Park serves three distinct villages—Oak Park, Harlem, and River Forest—the population of which in 1900 was, Oak Park, 9,653; Harlem, 4,112; River Forest, 1,664—a total of 15,439.

Mr. Chairman, we do not ask an appropriation for any building which, if erected, might be regarded as a magnificent monument. We do not ask that the United States Government shall squander any vast sum of money there. The simple, modest sum of $35,000 to erect a post-office which would be in keeping with the growth and business of that city is all we ask.

I have nothing but words of praise for the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and its chairman. A day was accorded by the committee for hearing a delegation of the leading citizens of that place. They came on here with the support of two United States Senators from our State and several Representatives, all but one of the Representatives of our State being in accord with this proposition. We appeared before the committee and made our representations. Every courtesy was extended to us by the committee. Since then I have visited the committee very many times and received the assurance that the matter was receiving due consideration. I suppose that in the judgment of the committee the proposition did receive due consideration. I conceive the proposition of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MERCER] to be reasonable when he says that it is impossible for his committee to give favorable consideration to all the bills that are brought in here.

But I submit, Mr. Chairman, that the appropriation which we ask for Oak Park is less than one three-hundred-and-ninetieth part of the total appropriation carried by this bill. There will be 390 Representatives in the next House. I submit that no one on the committee, no one anywhere with a show of reason, has ever presumed to oppose this appropriation publicly on its merits. The two United States Senators from our State favor it. The delegation of the State in this House, with one exception, favors it. The people of that district are unitedly in favor of it. Of the $35,000 asked, $10,000 is for the site and $25,000 for the building.

In justice to my predecessor in this House, who was by some thought to be opposed to this proposition, I wish to say that I have every assurance from him and his friends that he favored the proposition; that he saw no politics in it, and could not conceive how anyone could construe political benefit to come to anyone from such a plain business proposition as this.

But, Mr. Chairman, it seems that some people lie awake at night computing the political effect that combing their hair in the morning will have on the United States. Some people are so small, so picayunish, so devoted to a system of rat-hole politics that whenever a measure is introduced into Congress any Representative who takes an interest in its passage is at once a subject of their criticism, and at once they undertake to defeat him if by any means any credit—did I say credit?—sometimes discredit—can come to them by reason of that fact.

Mr. Chairman, this is my first term in this House. It may be, and likely will be, the last—for some time at least. I have endeavored while here to demean myself in a gentlemanly and measurably modest manner toward all the members of this House. I have received the fullest consideration, notwithstanding all the complaints about the rules, from nearly all the members of the House. But there has come to my hands evidence that there was in connection with this bill a secret and malign influence—not operating against me, because I have no political interest at stake. Operating against whom? The people of Oak Park, the people of Harlem, and the people of River Forest, communities aggregating 15,000 souls—a community of as fine a people as live anywhere in this country. They are pioneers worthy of every appreciation. What was a few years ago a bleak rural country they have transformed by their work and by their taste and their patience into what I consider one of the most beautiful residential localities in the world. It would have been a matter of great pride to me if I could have secured for them the consideration to which they are entitled.

I have to submit here a letter written by a member of this House, representing a constituency 20 miles distant from the boundaries of this post-office district, representing a constituency which has nothing in common, a district which is not territorially contiguous, and I will read this letter without comment. I will submit it to the fair judgment of every member of this House. I will leave its impression to lie where it ought to lie. The letter is as follows:

JANUARY 29, 1902.

Mr. H. W. AUSTIN,
Oak Park State Bank, Oak Park, Ill.

DEAR SIR: My friend, Mr. Williams, subtreasurer, has indorsed your favor of recent date to me, and also written to me urging my aid in securing a Government building at Oak Park. In my judgment the only chance Oak Park had to secure a public building was through the reelection of Mr. Lorimer to Congress. If I remember correctly, the Oak Park people were not very enthusiastic in his support. Oak Park is in the district represented by Mr. FEELY, as far as the present Congress is concerned, and will probably have to wait so long as it is represented by a new member of Congress.

Yqurs, very sincerely,

J. R. MANN.

I submit, gentlemen, that while a man may be a new member of Congress, while he may endeavor to do all that is possible for his district with the cooperation of the United States Senators and the unanimous support of his State delegation, with one exception, yet it may be possible that such influences as I have referred to can defeat favorable consideration of measures he would introduce. I say again, Mr. Chairman, I have no criticism to make of the committee except as to their judgment. If there was sufficient conflict between those interested—in favor of and opposed to this measure—then the committee doubtless believe that they were justified in relegating the matter to the pigeonhole where it may remain until the event referred to in the letter I have read may happen, at which time Oak Park may get the post-office which it desires.

Mr. MERCER. Will the gentleman from Illinois permit a suggestion at this point? I desire to say that the gentleman from Illinois was most attentive in his duties with reference to this matter and gave the committee all the information which he could secure, and the committee was very sorry that it could not include Oak Park in this bill, and if it had not been for the complications which would have followed, and not political by any means, but business complications which would have compelled us to take up some other places in Illinois, we would have included Oak Park. If it had been the only one of the kind, Oak Park would have been included.

I yield one minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL].

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to occupy the attention of the committee or to make any extended remarks. I wish to put in the RECORD a statement of facts which justifies the committee in one paragraph of the bill, that which relates to a public building at McKeesport, Pa. I ask unanimous consent that I may have the privilege to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to insert the statement to which he refers in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The statement referred to by Mr. DALZELL is as follows:

McKeesport is a city of the third class, in Pennsylvania, with a population now estimated at 40,000, with rapidly growing suburbs—Glassport, East McKeesport, Versailles, and Dravosburg—increasing the total to about 50,000 people. It is situate on the Monongahela River, 15 miles above Pittsburg, and, in addition to the Baltimore and Ohio, Pennsylvania, and Erie railroads, has three electric railway systems, which give regular and rapid communication with all surrounding districts. By these lines carriers leaving the Mckeesport office could within twenty minutes deliver mail at the following points, now independent offices, namely, Duquesne, Dravosburg, Otto, Glassport, East McKeesport, Boston, Buenavista, and Linconia, all within 3 miles; and a 5-mile radius would include the towns of Turtlecreek, East Pittsburg, Wilmerding, and Pitcairn, in the Turtle Creek valley, and the towns of Coal Valley, Mendelssohn, Wilson, Hawkins, and Clairton, on the north side of the Monongahela. The first named are now reached by well-paved streets, with electric-car service, which within a year will also be extended to the river towns. These towns, like McKeesport, are all rapidly growing manufacturing centers, with a population of 30,000 people; so that McKeesport and the district contiguous to it, as a center for the rapid distribution of mail, now has a population of not less than 80,000, which must increase to 100,000 within three years. These 17 towns now receive from 4 to 6 mails per day, but were they connected with McKeesport would have from 10 to 30 mails per day, and all Eastern mails would be from two to five hours earlier, and one or more hours would be gained on the Western.

The growth of the Monongahela Valley has been phenomenal for the past five years and is more rapid to-day than at any previous period. It is one community from Pittsburg to McKeesport, and in ten years the district from McKeesport to Monongahela—a distance of 18 miles—will also be a continuous town, connected by bridges from the bluffs at each bend in the river to the opposite plateaus, with paved streets and electric-car service from one end of the valley to the other. The most sanguine estimate of the population would likely fall short of the reality; yet it is reasonably safe to say that, including the towns mentioned in the Turtle Creek Valley and those in the Monongahela Valley—all within a 5-mile radius—with McKeesport as one post-office district, the next census would certainly show a combined population of 150,000 people, who would thus receive much better service at greatly reduced cost. To properly serve this district now from McKeesport would require facilities four times as great as we have at present, and the necessity for a modern building would at once be admitted.

Yet, aside from the advantages to the Department from such a service, the actual situation at the McKeesport office demands a radical change, even when only the district now covered by the carriers is considered. The present building has been occupied for sixteen years, and the service has outgrown it. The rent has been $1,200, but changes and improvements must be made, and the rent has been raised to $1,800 including some minor changes, or $2,200 and make improvements as suggested by the Department. The room would then answer for a few years only, and we would soon outgrow it again. The Department advertised for a suitable room, but no offers were received. Rents are very high on Fifth avenue, the main business street, and sufficient space there would cost from $4,000 to $5,000 per annum. There are no buildings on the side streets sufficiently large to accommodate the office, and owners will not build for the purpose without the protection of a long lease at a high rental. The present service requires 8 clerks and 20 carriers, with receipts now over $3,000 per month. Thirty-five mails are received and 31 dispatched daily, and about 2,200 money orders and registered letters are entered monthly. Owing to the fact that most of our manufacturing firms have Pittsburg offices and get their special-request envelopes in that city, and that the main offices of our electric-light and gas companies are in Pittsburg and collections are made by postal cards purchased there, the receipts of our office are from $3,000 to $4,000 per annum less than they should be, considering the work done in collecting and delivering these letters and postals.

That the importance of McKeesport has not been overstated is shown by the census of 1900, from which it appears that in the annual output of her industries McKeesport stands fourth in the list of cities of the State, with a total annual product of $37,074,136, Philadelphia, Pittsburg, and Allegheny only outranking her. Should we include with McKeesport only those towns which would be included within a 2-mile radius, as shown by the map, our city would be third and stand next to Pittsburg as a manufacturing center. All that is needed is consolidation and the establishment of a central government for communities which are now one in hourly intercourse and all essential interests, and our rank as third city of the State would not be disputed, and statistics would not be required to show our need for a Federal building. Fortunately for our present purpose, municipal jealousies and corporate lines need not be considered, and the only matters of prime importance are the needs of the public and the economy of the service. We are a manufacturing people, hemmed into a narrow valley by high hills, and a denser population can hardly be found in any of our large cities, and our neighbors are in no respect more favorably situated. A public building will not only serve us better, but will more than double the facilities for their service, giving them free delivery and frequent mails—two essentials for which the Department is constantly striving. That there would be economy in a service such as has been suggested need hardly be stated with a population so dense as ours and so well supplied with paved streets and street-car service with 5-cent fare for 5 miles. To virtually stand still and continue methods a quarter century old in a district adding from five to ten thousand to its population annually is certain to result in inefficiency, as well as great expense and loss to the service.

As evidence of the extent and diversity of the industries of the McKeesport district, the following list, embracing the iron and steel furnaces and other manufactories in operation within a 2-mile radius of the center of the city, is presented: National Tube and Pipe Mills, National Rolling Mill, Monongahela Furnaces, Monongahela Steel Works, Boston Iron and Steel Works, Seamless Tube Works, National Galvanizing Works, W. De Wees Wood Company's Works, United States Iron and Tinplate Works, Firth-Sterling Steel Works, Wheeler Projectile Works, Duquesne Steel Works, Duquesne Blast Furnaces, McKeesport Tinplate Works, Pittsburg Gas and Coke Works, United States Glass Works, Pittsburg Steel Hoop Works, Severance Spike and Bolt Works, Pittsburg Steel Foundry, American Ax and Tool Works, Pittsburg and Lake Erie Railroad Shops.

The total value of these combined plants is estimated to be $60,000,000, with a monthly product valued at $10,000,000; the total number of men employed being 15,000, and from 1,000 to 2,000 men employed in other minor industries.

A reliable computation of the monthly pay roll of the works enumerated as being within 2 miles of the center of the city is $750,000, or an annual pay roll of the enormous sum of $9,000,000.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE].

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, it must have surprised the members of this House to hear the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds remark that those who had spoken in favor of a new post-office in the city of New York had, by their insistence to secure action on the bill, done more than anyone else in retarding the committee in reporting the bill.

Just what the chairman of the committee meant by that I am at a loss to understand. If he meant that by firm advocacy of the bill for an appropriation for a new post-office, by repeated requests on the committee to act on the bill, by repeated calls of members of the New York delegation on the gentleman from Nebraska to secure his action, by earnest effort, from time to time, by that delegation in their endeavor to secure a favorable report upon the bill which the committee had in charge for the erection of a new post-office was to retard the measure, then, of course, the measure was so retarded.

The delegation from New York had met in conference. That conference was presided over by the dean of our delegation on this side of the House, our able friend, Mr. CUMMINGS. We discussed the question as to what action should be taken, what further efforts should be employed, and what other means should be resorted to to secure from the committee a report upon the bill. During that conference it was stated by members of the delegation that the gentleman from Nebraska had been called upon repeatedly and urged to make a report to the House on the bill for a new post-office.

Members of the delegation stated that the attention of the gentleman from Nebraska had been called to the conditions that exist in New York City, rendering it imperatively necessary that we should have improved postal facilities and adequate quarters for the transaction of our postal business in that great and growing city commensurate with the post-office needs. We united our efforts—gentlemen on this side of the Chamber and those on the other side of the Chamber—to secure action by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

In a body we called at the room of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and there we waited to see its chairman. We sent for him. We waited, and waited his will. After a while the gentleman came and deigned to see us. He did not even do us the scant courtesy of asking us to be seated. Coldly and austerely he received our delegation and wanted to know what we wanted. Our spokesman, Mr. CUMMINGS, stated the views of the delegation. He told the gentleman from Nebraska what was urgently needed and most desired. He called the gentleman's attention to the need of a new post-office, but the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds did not venture any more response than that he would consult the members of his committee about it.

That interview took place some time after the gentleman from Nebraska had himself declared that the need of New York was aggravated and had expressed himself strongly in favor of a new post-office for New York City. The interview with the gentleman from Nebraska to which I refer took place after publications had appeared in some of the leading papers published in the metropolis calling his attention and the attention of the committee, as well as of Congress, to the needs for the desired improvement.

The gentleman from Nebraska said to-day that his attention had not been called to the needs of our city. Surely it can not be that the gentleman from the Far West is oblivious to the conditions obtaining in our great metropolis. It can not be that the chairman of so great and important a committee as he heads does not understand that one-tenth of the gross receipts of the entire postal service is obtained from New York. He can not be oblivious to the fact that an appropriation of $2,500,000, which was asked, is but about 35 per cent of the net annual revenue from the postal service in the city of New York alone. When he made the onslaught on the entire New York delegation this morning on the floor of this House, he was oblivious to the fact that New York City——

Mr. MERCER. Will the gentleman permit a suggestion there? I never made any onslaught on the entire delegation from the city of New York or the State of New York. My reference was made to the gentleman who is now occupying the floor and two of his colleagues who have spoken in reference to this measure. I referred to no other gentleman from the city of New York.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. What did the gentleman who is now addressing the committee do to offend the chairman of the committee? He called respectfully upon the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, with other members of the delegation, and in a perfectly polite manner asked for favorable action upon a bill the committee had in charge. Upon the floor of this House he arose and called the attention of the members to the conditions that make it necessary to erect a new post-office in New York City adequate for our needs. He submitted to the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds statistics which appeared in print in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

He joined his colleagues in a respectful request for favorable consideration. What can the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds then mean? I pause to give the gentleman an opportunity of saying whether I did anything else, or whether my colleagues did anything else, in respect to the matter which was not agreeable to the committee.

Mr. MERCER. Do you want a reply? The gentleman from New York, and the other two gentlemen to whom I referred at the beginning of the session to-day, have never given the committee, so far as I know, a line of information. They made some speeches on the floor of this House. They did not even send us copies of their speeches.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Did you receive any information from any other member of the delegation?

Mr. MERCER. We received information from the able and distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS], one of the noblest Romans of them all, who I sincerely hope will soon recover from the illness from which he is now suffering. [Loud applause.]

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Did he not furnish you full and complete information?

Mr. MERCER. He furnished the committee with some splendid information, and he never attempted to impede the progress of the committee with reference to this great project in New York.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I am glad that the gentleman from Nebraska has made that statement. If so able and efficient a member of this House as Mr. CUMMINGS has supplied the gentleman with full information, why did he not act upon it? Was it necessary for each member of our delegation to come to him and, like a mendicant on bended knee, beg the favor of audiences of the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds?

Mr. MERCER. If the gentleman from New York will permit, I think the committee are very familiar with the situation in New York, and have been for some time.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Did you not say this morning that you were not familiar with the situation?

Mr. MERCER. Most of the members of the committee have been in New York; they have visited the post-office there and know a great deal about it, and the committee has taken the very same course that was pursued with reference to the great Congressional Library and the great Printing Office in this city.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Will the gentleman point out specifically in what way any member of this delegation retarded action on the bill?

Mr. MERCER. The gentleman from New York who is now addressing the House, by making certain statements on the floor, by going out of his way to publish editorials from newspapers which had no foundation in fact, and which in a measure ridiculed the members of the New York delegation.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Does the gentleman mean to say that the editorial published in the New York Herald on February 28, read in my speech, is untrue?

Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Nebraska points to nothing beyond the making of a speech on the floor of this House which in any degree is claimed to have retarded action. Surely it can not be that in the performance of a duty assigned to a committee, a duty that ought to be faithfully and conscientiously discharged in the interest of the nation, the gentleman's wounded sensibilities, caused by the Herald's editorial, stopped him from doing what was right and just to the country at large?

I am surprised that the reading of a newspaper editorial from the Clerk's desk, calling the gentleman to account, is assigned by him for the committee's failure to report the bill for a new post-office. The post-office in New York is not a local, but a national institution.

Mr. MERCER. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question right there?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Yes.

Mr. MERCER. Does the gentleman from New York intend to vote against this bill?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I intend, if I can not get anything better, to vote for the bill. But I had hoped that we would have obtained something better. I trusted that the opportunity to offer an amendment would not have been cut off and that we could have secured, by way of amendment, a provision in the pending bill which would have speedily given to New York the post-office so much needed. No opportunity is afforded to anyone from New York to offer an amendment which will cure the defect in the bill.

The bill provides that a site shall be selected, but those who are to select the site are officials in Washington. There is no provision made in the bill for the erection of the building. On the contrary, the bill clearly contemplates there shall be further delay. Another Congress shall have to pass upon the question, and we shall have to go through the same logrolling which has characterized the action of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with respect to the measure originally introduced. [Loud applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I yield ten minutes to my colleague from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON].

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, the support which I give this bill is not actuated or influenced in any manner by either local or personal considerations. It is true I was an earnest and I might be considered an active applicant before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds for the erection of a public building—a post-office—in one of the most flourishing and prosperous cities in the beautiful valley of the Tennessee—Florence, in the northern section of Alabama; but the committee saw proper in its judgment and wisdom to deny me that application; and the comfort that I take, Mr. Chairman, as to my disappointment is in the accepted theory that "faith is the substance of things hoped for," and "to him that hath faith all things will be added, provided he abideth his time and patience;" and I find that I am sustained, Mr. Chairman, in that theory and belief in this paragraph which the committee, in its report, so appropriately uses. It says:

> It is impossible to meet all the demands of the country at this session of Congress, but let us hope that this effort of the committee will be followed by a general desire on the part of Congress and the country that those cities where buildings are inadequate, or where new buildings are needed and which have not been recognized in this bill, may reap their reward at an early date.

Now, I am truly in that class—expecting to reap my reward at an early day. I am, Mr. Chairman, of that class of citizens who believe that it is a wise and patriotic policy for the Government to adopt, to erect substantial public buildings in all cities and towns where the public good and character of the business interests of the people demand it. I do not want to be understood as favoring a policy that would justify and excuse unlimited expenditures of public money at every village and every town throughout our whole country. That would be untenable and utterly unreasonable. But I am an advocate—and an earnest and a sincere one from a patriotic standpoint—of the inauguration of a policy that looks in the early future to the erection of a public building commensurate with the population and the business interests, and I refer now mostly to post-offices in every county seat of every county and State and Territory in this Union.

I say it will appeal to the pride and patriotism of the people, and it has another effect. It shows the people that they have a part and a parcel in their Government; that the Government is not a something that is intangible, but it is something that they can touch, reach, feel, and understand—not a mere creature to make laws and provide penalties. I believe it is the duty of the Government to localize the influence of the Government as far as can be done practically with common sense and good judgment. What better way to do this can be devised than a reasonable policy of erecting public buildings? Why, Mr. Speaker, we have all seen the effect of it. After locating a public building in a county seat, the people of that town and of that county point to it with pride. They say, "It is our public building" They use the word "our." They have an interest in it. They feel that the Government has done something especially for them and their neighbors, for their use and for their benefit. It gives the Government a name, an abiding place among them.

And I say, too, Mr. Chairman, that it is an economical matter. It is a matter that appeals, as to dollars and cents, to us not to be "penny wise and pound foolish"—a policy that we have pursued for many years in the past—but adopt a sound business policy. You can not take any business man or any firm of business men that have at their command anything to compare with the resources that the Government has that would pursue the policy that the Government has pursued for years past in renting private property for the transaction of public business.

Another idea, Mr. Chairman, is that it is the accepted theory, if I understand it aright, that the chief and first end, object, and purpose of the Government in all matters should be to enlist the love and affection, the aid and cooperation, and the loyalty of the people. How best can this be done? What manner and in what way can we better accomplish these desirable ends than by placing among them public buildings—giving them object lessons, for that is what a public building is?

Why, Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, the spirit that inspired the homestead law, noble and patriotic as it was, and as it is in every respect, is nearly akin, is similar, and on "all fours" with the policy that I believe this bill reported by the committee is leading to. Why, the aim and end of this beneficent law was to create a happy, contented, frugal, prosperous, God-fearing people, by conferring upon them the unutterable blessings of a home. I say to-day, Mr. Chairman, that around the sacred altar of the humble home of the masses of the people of this country are born the grand and noble aspirations that give purity and strength and nobility to our republican form of Government. [Applause.]

Around the altar of these common homes that have been made by the homestead law we find the true nursery of American patriotism and of freedom—yea, of magnificent womanhood and manhood.

There is another feature, as I pass along, that attracts me to this bill. Why, there is no contest, political, religious, social, or otherwise, that can possibly bring up among the people the bitter and discordant feelings that accompanies the contest for the removal of a county court-house. It divides brother against brother, it arrays father against son, and creates the bitterest feeling. It leaves scars that time can scarcely heal. If you had a public Government building located there it would tend to quiet all of these dissentions and strife and make harmony and peace among these people.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I believe, as history has said, that a people are judged as to their refinement, their patriotism, their sociability, and civilization, and all that enobles manhood, by the monuments they leave behind them; they are judged by these monuments that they erect to their heroes, their soldiers, their scholars, and their statesmen. I am proud to know that no section of our country has been derelict in splendid monuments to our noble men.

It can be as truly said that the public buildings of our country—magnificent structures—are as characteristic of a people as the monuments they have of their heroes. They speak to future generations.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, there is one thing that I wish to speak of in the State of Alabama that has met with rejoicing and more universal approbation than any one single act of that character that has been called to our attention within the last ten years. The general assembly of Alabama within the last two years passed a law directing and requiring that the United States flag shall float over every public schoolhouse in the State. [Applause.] It is the emblem of our Government; it brings the people in closer touch—nearer to the Government. So it would be with a public building.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I see that the Committee on Public Buildings provides for the erection of a splendid and much-needed public building in the city of Washington. What citizen is there that can come from any section of our country and look upon these magnificent structures that has not his patriotism aroused and appealed to? We all want to see the capital of this, the greatest Republic in the world, noted for its magnificent structures—not a useless expenditure of money, but money expended wisely and prudently and discreetly. All of this will strengthen the feelings of patriotism among the people. I would be one, Mr. Chairman, and I believe the country could afford the expense to have so many of the good, plain people of this country visit the capital once every year and have their expenses and hotel bills paid to let them understand and see what their Government is. It would be a matter of pride to them and strengthen them in their patriotism and love of their country. Mr. Chairman, I acknowledge my thanks to my colleague [Mr. BANKHEAD] for his courtesy in extending my time. [Applause.]

Mr. MERCER. Now, Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SIBLEY].

Mr. SIBLEY. Mr. Chairman, whether the policy of the Government in the construction of public buildings in the communities of the Union is wise or not seems to be questioned by some who are not so fortunate on this occasion to find the home towns in their communities represented in this measure. The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads in the consideration of their appropriation bill of this year found it requisite to appropriate $8,000,000 for the rental of buildings for postal purposes. At the present interest rates and price of Government bonds these rentals would provide for a public building at the cost of $100,000 each in every city of the United States containing 10,000 people and upward which is not already so provided and still leave several hundred thousand dollars each year in the Government Treasury. My judgment is that this measure is to be criticised, not because it provides for so many public buildings, but because it does not provide for more. That the Government should erect public buildings in the cities of the nation is a policy demanded not alone by the needs of the service, but by reasons of economy as well.

Mr. MERCER. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES].

[Mr. GAINES of Tennessee addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Chairman, with reference to the town of Springfield, Tenn., in reply to the remarks made by the distinguished gentleman from the district in which that town is located, I desire to say that it was utterly impossible for the committee to take cognizance of claims of this character. Springfield in 1900 had a population of 1,732, and its gross postal receipts were $3,138.49.

I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TOMPKINS].

Mr. TOMPKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, as under the rules the pending bill is not subject to amendment, it is not my desire to occupy the attention of the committee on this subject for any length of time. I simply wish to join in the general expression of disappointment which doubtless prevails among many of the 400 who presented their claims for the consideration of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and get nothing substantial. I felt that the claims of the city of Columbus for the enlargement and alteration of the public building already erected and now in use there were sufficiently strong to persuade the committee favorably to include in its omnibus bill an appropriation for the purpose indicated.

It was my privilege to appear before a subcommittee of that body, accompanied by a number of gentlemen sent here from the Board of Trade of Columbus, and statements were made to that subcommittee, which accorded us every privilege and every courtesy that could be expected or asked. The committee has not seen fit to include any appropriation for Columbus, but we drew a consolation prize in the recommendation made in this bill to the effect that the Secretary of the Treasury and the Postmaster-General take steps to investigate the conditions at Columbus to ascertain the necessities there and report to Congress at its next session. I also draw consolation from the suggestion of my good friend from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON] that we should live in hope by reason of the recommendations made in this bill where no appropriations have been provided.

I ask unanimous consent that the statement made to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds in presenting the claims of the city of Columbus may be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks on this occasion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TOMPKINS] asks unanimous consent that the statement heretofore presented to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds may be printed as a part of his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The document referred to is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 1, 1902.

The COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: On behalf of the Board of Trade of Columbus, Ohio, we beg leave to submit the following facts concerning the need for an enlargement of the Government building in said city. These facts are carefully compiled from the official records of the several departments of the Government, and show in a striking manner the inadequacy of present accommodations for the Government service in Columbus:

A. GENERAL FACTS.

The present public building was first occupied in 1885. By the census of 1880 the city had 51,647 population. The census of 1900 gives it a population of 125,560. This is in an area of only 16.25 square miles. If the city bounds were proportionate with those of cities like Toledo, Cleveland, or Buffalo, there would be included in the city limits to-day not less than 140,000 people. Taking the population actually shown by the 1900 census within the city limits, there has been a growth of 125 per cent since the present building was constructed.

No city in the United States is growing more rapidly to-day than Columbus. In the calendar year 1900 the official records of the city inspector of buildings show that 1,800 new buildings were erected, a larger number than were constructed in the same period in the city of Buffalo, N. Y.; twice as many as were built in Omaha, Nebr., and 75 per cent of the number constructed in Pittsburg.

Within the past few years the city has come into great prominence as a growing center of iron and steel making, and the records of the United States Steel Corporation show that at no point in the Central West can iron or steel be made more cheaply. This industry promises great development within the next decade. Already Columbus stands fifth among the cities of the United States in the number of shoes manufactured annually, and this business is growing at the rate of 25 per cent per annum. Other factories which have grown to large proportions in the past are now building new works, doubling, and in some cases trebling, their present capacity.

The shops of the Pan Handle Railroad Company are being enlarged, at an expenditure of more than half a million dollars, with a proportionate increase in their already large force of employees, which numbers 1,500 or more.

A dispassionate review of the progress of the city during the past two years will convince any student of affairs that the rate of increase in population during the next decade will be larger than it has been in the past. It is conservative to say that by 1910 there will be 200,000 people immediately tributary to the Federal building of the city of Columbus, and it must be adequate to meet the need of that great population, fourfold that of the city when the present structure was planned.

Moreover, as the capital of the fourth State of the Union, the Government building ought to be one that would be commensurate with the dignity and power of the State. Both from this standpoint and from that of the third greatest manufacturing city in Ohio the necessity of the enlargement asked is manifest.

B. GROWTH OF PUBLIC BUSINESS.

When the present Federal building was planned, the establishment at Columbus of a department of the Pension Bureau was not contemplated. This is now one of the largest branches of this great Bureau in the United States, having on its rolls 105,000 pensioners and distributing annually more than $16,000,000. Already this bureau is greatly cramped for room, and if the plan now suggested, of making monthly instead of quarterly payments to pensioners, is carried out, the number of employees and the space necessary must be doubled. This department now occupies about 25 per cent of the total floor space of the present building, or an aggregate of over 3,700 square feet. Every room is crowded and the space for the necessary file cases, etc., is wretchedly inadequate. The present work of the bureau imperatively demands an increase of not less than 1,200 square feet, while the probability of the payment of pensioners monthly would require an increase of fully 4,000 square feet to give this bureau the space its importance demands.

When the present Government building at Columbus was constructed the city was not a port of entry. It was so constituted in 1889. Last year approximately $500,000 worth of goods were imported at this point. This great volume of business was transacted without any facilities for keeping goods in bond, other than a little corner of the basement, about 10 by 15 feet. The great risk in having goods in bond scattered at random in railway depots, storage warehouses, and held in cars on side-tracks only needs to be mentioned to emphasize the inadequacy of the present building for public purposes.

The central location of the city of Columbus, from which radiate in every direction fifteen lines of steam railway and nine interurban electric lines, constructed or under construction, makes it an especially important point in the Railway Mail Service. At the present time this important branch of the service has no quarters in the public building, but has been compelled to seek them outside at a relatively high rental, and it has been impossible to secure the dormitories necessary for the proper housing of the men in this service to promote their health and comfort.

During the past ten years this force in Columbus has increased 50 per cent, and 138 men are now tributary to this office. More postal clerks report to Columbus and work from this city than from Louisville, Ky., or Detroit, Mich., both much more populous centers. The absence to-day of any room for the proper keeping of the supplies which this Department requires; the absence of any general office, where maps can be consulted and general instructions given, and the unhandy, badly arranged quarters which are inevitable in the case of rented rooms make it imperative that some provision be made at once for the proper housing of this important branch of the public service in Columbus by an enlargement of the Government building.

The post-office business in the city of Columbus has vastly increased since the present building was planned. In 1887 the total post-office receipts of the city were $130,000. For the calendar year 1901 they reached the great total of $405,000, an increase in 15 years of more than 300 per cent. The sales of stamps for January, 1902, were more than $12,000 in excess of the same month of 1901. A conservative estimate of the growth of the post-office business in Columbus indicates that by 1910 the receipts of this office will approximate, if not exceed, $700,000. When the present building was first occupied but 29 employees were required to handle the work of the office, this number including carriers. To-day, with the most economical and efficient business management of any post-office in the United States, handling its large volume of business at less cost to the Government than can be shown by any other office of a city of like size in the United States, 120 men are employed.

Between 1889 and 1899 the number of pieces of mail handled at the Columbus office increased from 14,000,000 to 38,000,000, or almost threefold. The Government's net revenue for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, from the Columbus post-office amounted to $262,079.99, almost enough in itself to meet the entire expense of the improvement asked for. The absolute needs of this office to-day demand at least twice the floor space which the Government building now affords it. Every department is crowded to the utmost. The stamp clerks have a room only 8 by 11 feet; the register department, including lobby and vault, only 16 by 18 feet. No adequate quarters for the prompt handling of the mail exist at the present time, and the public suffers constant inconvenience and delay, notwithstanding the most conscientious effort upon the part of the officials to prevent it.

The Federal courts now occupy 5,350 square feet, approximately 30 per cent of the total floor area of the building. A movement is on foot, made necessary by the increased business of the Federal courts in Ohio, to create a district judge located permanently at Columbus. It is certain that this will be necessary in the immediate future and will require at least 75 per cent more floor space than is now occupied by the Federal courts.

The United States Weather Bureau is now housed outside of the Federal building at a large expense. It requires at least 2,000 square feet of floor space. With the proper enlargement the location of the Government building fits it to accommodate this important branch of the public service at a large saving to the Government.

The internal-revenue department has grown quite as rapidly as the post-office. The receipts for the fiscal year 1890 did not reach $300,000. For the year 1899 they exceeded $1,120,000, an increase of more than 300 per cent. This department is crowded, as is every department in the public building, and should have at least 1,000 square feet more space.

At a conservative figure, the present needs of the public service in the city of Columbus require a building with twice the floor space of the present structure, and the future development of the city makes it certain that even this enlargement will not be adequate to meet the requirements ten years hence. The recent location of an immigration inspector and the great development of the rural free-delivery service, in connection with the other departments mentioned, emphasize most strongly the imperative need for the immediate construction of a building with a floor space of not less than 25,000 square feet additional to the present area of about 17,800 feet.

The Federal Government already owns sufficient ground upon which to erect the additional building, without expenditure for site. The lot occupied by the Federal building is 189 by 189 feet, of which the present structure occupies a space 75 by 130, standing back 15 feet from each street. This leaves a space 99 by 189 feet, fronting on Third street and immediately south of the present building, which is sufficient for the erection of a structure that will meet the needs and be worthy of the city and the State for a decade or more to come.

To recapitulate in few words: Since the present Government building was constructed the population of Columbus has increased more than 125 per cent. The pension bureau and the surveyor of the port have been established, requiring between them approximately 30 per cent of the total floor area of the present structure, neither of which were contemplated when the existing building was planned. The cash receipts of the post-office department have grown over 400 per cent in fifteen years; the amount of mail handled has increased in the past ten years almost 300 per cent; the internal-revenue receipts in the last ten years have increased nearly 300 per cent, and the net revenue of the combined Government departments in the city of Columbus has reached a figure that will pay for the enlargement asked in less than five months.

This, gentlemen, is a concise, dispassionate statement of plain facts. No argument is necessary to enforce it or to make clear the reasonable request which we now make. The proper and safe conduct of the public business in Columbus demands the improvement provided by this bill, and the volume of business and the importance of the city as a great center of industry and population justifies the expenditure.

Respectfully submitted.

JOHN T. RASSELL,
SAMUEL G. McCLURE,
ELMER J. MILLER,
Committee of the Columbus Board of Trade.

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Chairman, with reference to the proposition affecting the city of Columbus, Ohio, I desire to say that the distinguished gentleman [Mr. TOMPKINS] who has the honor of representing the district in which that capital city is located has given this matter his best attention, has answered all the calls made upon him by the committee for information, and has made the best presentation of the case that could be made; but the situation in Columbus is of such a character that the committee felt that the information before it did not justify it in taking any action unless the information should prove to be exactly correct. For that reason the committee decided that rather than make a mistake in the city of Columbus it would provide for an investigation of the situation there and for a responsible report, and that when such a report was made to Congress by those appointed to investigate the committee would then be in a better position to legislate thereon.

I find that in December, 1882, a site was purchased in Columbus, Ohio, 189 feet square, at a cost of $58,500. It was bounded on the north by State street, on the west by Third street, on the south by Chapel alley, on the east by Lazelle alley. A contract was awarded for the foundation on November 14, 1883. The first story was occupied by the post-office October 1, 1887, and the other stories were completed a few weeks thereafter, the cost of construction being $264,588.96, the total cost of site and building to date being $334,345.50. The building is of Berea, Ohio, sandstone, and covers an area of 134 by 75 feet, and has cubic contents of 793,954 feet, a very fair building in size for a city of the size of Columbus. The data we had might lead us to conclude that more space is needed in that city, but we did not have sufficient information to justify us taking any action at this time aside from the recommendation we have made in the bill.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. LANDIS having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. CROOK, one of his secretaries.

OMNIBUS PUBLIC-BUILDING BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield ten minutes, or so much as he may need, to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL].

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I desire just for a moment to refer to that part of the bill on page 8 which reads as follows:

United States post-office and court-house at Elizabeth City, N. C., from $100,000 to $120,000: Provided, That said building shall be erected upon the site in said city now owned by the Government of the United States.

Under the rule adopted, and under which the House, as in Committee of the Whole, is considering this bill, no amendments are in order or can be made to the bill. Therefore my remarks shall be confined to matters in explanation of my own position and the action of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of this House.

So far as the increased limit of cost from $100,000 to $120,000 is concerned, I make no comment or criticism, because I feel very sure that the committee have given the claims of this city thorough consideration; and although the increase is not as much as we desired or as much as was recommended by the Treasury Department, still I feel that the committee gave that city the best consideration, under the circumstances, which they thought it deserved. But I do desire to make a word of explanation in regard to the provision which is to the effect that the building shall be located upon the site already owned by the Government. On the 3d day of February I introduced a bill to increase the limit of cost of that public building from $100,000 to $125,000. In the Fifty-fifth Congress (March, 1899) this public building was originally authorized and the limit of cost fixed at $50,000.

At the last session I introduced a bill by which the limit of cost was increased from $50,000 to $100,000. During this session, on the 3d day of February, I introduced a bill to further increase the limit of cost from $100,000 to $125,000. After I had introduced this bill, increasing the limit of cost to $125,000, a committee from the Chamber of Commerce of Elizabeth City appeared before the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, Hon. H. A. Taylor, and the Supervising Architect of the Treasury, Hon. J. K. Taylor, representing that the site owned by the Government was not a proper site, and that it was advisable to purchase another site. As a result of these representations the Treasury Department agreed that it would recommend to Congress legislation authorizing the purchase of another site. To that end I introduced on the 28th day of February a bill authorizing the Treasury Department to acquire another site for this court-house and post-office and custom-house building at Elizabeth City, and on the same day I introduced a bill increasing the limit of cost to $135,000, which bills I shall append as a part of my remarks.

These bills were referred by the House Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to the Treasury Department, and I shall ask to have incorporated as a part of my remarks the replies of the Treasury Department both to the bill increasing the limit of cost to $125,000 and to the two bills increasing the cost to $135,000 and authorizing the Treasury Department to purchase or condemn a new site. I will simply say that the Treasury Department recommended the passage of the two bills, one of which authorized the purchase of a new site, but suggested that the bill be amended, leaving it discretionary with the Treasury Department as to whether or not they would acquire another site in the future. This was the situation when the several bills came for consideration before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

At this point I ask the attention of the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds [Mr. MERCER] to the statement which I shall make. I had stated to the committee representing the Chamber of Commerce of Elizabeth City, and also to the distinguished chairman and the gentlemen of the committee, that I should take no part in the selection of a new site or in the recommendation of a new site, but that so far as I was concerned it should be left entirely to the citizens of Elizabeth City on the one part and the Treasury Department and to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds on the other to determine that question. I was not present when the committee acted nor had any notice of same until they had concluded their action. In that connection the distinguished chairman stated to me that the committee had considered this matter and had determined to include a proviso in the bill increasing the limit of cost, providing that the building should be constructed on the site now owned by the Government. I ask the chairman if that statement is not correct?

Mr. MERCER. I desire to say to the gentleman, in reply to his inquiry, that a site has been purchased in Elizabeth City at an expense of $4,000. We found upon investigation that it would be impossible to dispose of that site for much more than half that sum; and the committee, after investigation, reported that the present site was of ample size and suitably located for a building such as was to be erected there, and took the sole responsibility in making the provision in the bill that the building should be erected on the site now owned by the Government of the United States. The statement of the gentleman is correct.

Mr. SMALL. I thank the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds for making that statement. I only wish to put myself right with the committee and right with the citizens of Elizabeth City. This city has the reputation, deservedly, of being one of the most progressive cities in North Carolina. Its population, according to the last census, was 6,344, which represented an increase of more than 50 per cent over the census of 1890. It possesses an intelligent and progressive class of citizens. Its manufacturing interests are multiplying, and its wealth and population are increasing at a phenomenal rate. They are entitled to have a suitable public building commensurate with their needs, commensurate with the revenue and the business of the post-office there, adequate to the demands of the United States court, and also with the requirements of the custom-house.

I may say that a bill has passed the Senate and is now pending in this House to remove the custom-house from the town of Edenton to this town of Elizabeth City. While a great many may think the present site is not suitably located, they have had a fair opportunity to present the matter to our Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds if they desired to do so. That committee in its wisdom, for the reasons stated, concluded to retain the present site, in which they acted on their own judgment and responsibility, without advice or request from me, directly or indirectly.

With the consent of the House, I will include in my remarks the documents I have referred to.

A bill (H. R. 10707) to increase the limit of cost for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Elizabeth City, N. C.

Be it enacted, etc., That the amount heretofore fixed as the limit of cost for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building for the accommodation of the United States post-office and other Government offices in the city of Elizabeth City, in the State of North Carolina, be, and the same is hereby, increased to $125,000, which sum is hereby fixed as the limit of cost for the erection of said building, including the cost of a site therefor.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, February 18, 1902.

SIR: Referring further to the request dated the 12th instant, from your committee, for a report in connection with H. R. 10707, providing for the increase of the limit of cost of the public building at Elizabeth City, N. C., from $100,000 to $125,000, I have the honor to advise you that it is estimated that an increase of limit to the amount stated, namely, $125,000, will be necessary to provide for the construction of the building in a fireproof manner.

Respectfully,

H. A. TAYLOR, Assistant Secretary.

The CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS,

A bill (H. R. 11909) to acquire a new site for the court-house and post-office at Elizabeth City, N. C.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise a new site in the city of Elizabeth City, N. C., and to erect thereon the Federal building authorized by the act of Congress approved March 2, 1899, payment for said new site to be made from the appropriation heretofore made for "court-house and post-office, Elizabeth City, N. C."

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury is further authorized and directed to sell at public or private sale, at such time and on such terms as he may deem to be to the best interests of the United States, the land already acquired in said city as a site for said Federal building, and to deposit the net proceeds of such sale in the Treasury of the United States as a miscellaneous receipt.

A bill (H. R. 11910) to increase the limit of cost for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Elizabeth City, N. C.

Be it enacted, etc., That the amount heretofore fixed as the limit of cost for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building for the accommodation of the United States post-office and other Government offices in the city of Elizabeth City, in the State of North Carolina, be, and the same is hereby, increased to $135,000, which sum is hereby fixed as the limit of cost for the erection of said building, including the cost of a site therefor.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, March 26, 1902.

SIR: This Department is in receipt from you, with request for reports thereon, of H. R. 11909, to acquire a new site for the court-house and post-office at Elizabeth City, N. C., and H. R. 11910, providing that the amount heretofore fixed as the limit of cost of said building, namely, $100,000, be increased to $125,000.

In connection with H. R. 11909, for the acquisition of a new site, you are advised that said bill meets with the approval of this Department, and favorable action thereon is recommended.

It is suggested, however, that the words "and directed," in line 4, page 1 of said bill, be stricken out and the words "in his discretion" be inserted in lieu thereof, the effect of this suggested change being to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, to secure a new site for said building. It is also suggested that after the word "directed," in line 12, page 1 of said bill, the words "in the event of the acquisition of a new site" should be inserted.

In connection with H. R. 11910, to increase the present limit of cost to one hundred and thirty-five thousand dollars ($135,000), you are advised that it is estimated that an increase of limit to this amount will be necessary, in the event of a change being made in the location of said building, in order to provide for the erection of the building and to cover the additional cost of new site.

Respectfully,

H. A. TAYLOR,
Assistant Secretary.

The CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON
PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS,
House of Representatives.

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Chairman, I now yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I have been a member of this House for a great many years, and I am now nearer the achievement of a public building within my district than I have ever been before during all that period of time. And yet I represent a rich and growing section of a great State. I imagine that there is much lack of information in regard to the situation in the State of Ohio in the matter of public buildings. The Sixth Congressional district, represented by Mr. HILDEBRANT; the Tenth Congressional district, represented by Mr. MORGAN; the Eleventh Congressional district, which I have the honor to represent; the Fifteenth Congressional district, represented by Mr. VAN VOORHIS; the Sixteenth district, represented by Mr. GILL, occupy upon the map of the country a vast territory, extending from Cincinnati almost north to the national road and eastward almost to the city of Pittsburg, and in that whole territory of five Congressional districts and nearly 30 counties there is but a single public building, and that is located at the city of Portsmouth and cost the munificent sum of about $30,000, as I recall. I could point to other Congressional districts in Ohio in the same condition.

There is a larger concession of public buildings in the States lying along the Pacific coast and the interior in the intermountain section in proportion to the wealth and population than there is in the State of Ohio.

Now, there are five Congressional districts to which I have pointed, and these Congressional districts, looking over them with my familiarity with the people and their purposes and their desires and their actions in the matter of public improvement, brings this suggestion to my mind: While on that vast territory there is but a single small public building, the people of these counties have erected court-houses—in some of them at a cost of upward of $300,000—and in the little county in which I live and where I do not ask at this time for a public building we have a court-house which to-day would cost far more than the money that the little building will cost which I propose at Chillicothe.

In the city of Chillicothe there is a court-house built by taxation drawn from the people of that county, involving an expenditure in the original structure and the improvements made to it recently which, I presume, has amounted to at least $150,000. This shows to the House that the people of the country are willing to invest their money directly in the building of public structures for the accommodation of the public business.

I find that the city of Chillicothe stands No. 77 on this list of cities in point of population, and yet her population was not quite 13,000 by the last census. There are 76 cities of a smaller population than the city of Chillicothe provided for in this bill. Nevertheless I presume that in every one of these cities that is the county seat the people of that county have built a court-house and jail, or other public building, far in excess of the cost of the appropriation covered by this bill.

Why, the schoolhouses in some of the States covered by this bill, the common schoolhouses, have cost far more money than the Government buildings here provided for.

The city of Chillicothe is located in the Scioto Valley, on a stream which runs high up in the State above the middle of the State formed by the Olentangy and another stream, and flows down through one of the richest valleys that the sunlight of heaven ever shone upon.

At the city of Chillicothe is located, of course, the post-office, which pays a rental of a large sum, considering the character of the town, and in the city we have had for a long time a collection district where is located the internal-revenue collector's office for one of the rich collection districts of the State of Ohio. It is situated about 45 miles from the Ohio River in the valley of the Scioto River which, running all the way from the capital city of the State, mingles its waters with that of the Ohio River at the city of Portsmouth. It was the ancient capital of the State of Ohio, a city famed in the early history of that Territory and that State, and it was the capital until the removal took place which carried it to a more eligible and more central section of the State.

It has been a city famous in the history of the State of Ohio. The Virginia military district covered the land titles in the Scioto Valley, and gentlemen generally are familiar with the history of those land titles. At the time of the cession by Virginia to the General Government of the territory northwest of the Ohio River the State of Virginia, which was in its early history one of the most generous and liberal of all the States of the Union to the men who had fought the battles of the country, reserved a great portion of very valuable land to be occupied by the soldiers of Virginia who had fought in the Indian wars and other wars of the country.

So it was that a large body of men, good citizens, ambitious and hopeful, emigrated from the State of Virginia into the valley of the Scioto and its tributaries, and carried with them land warrants issued by the State of old Virginia and became settlers in the new world. In the old times among these and their descendants was a large body of Whigs, but in later years when issues unknown to the earlier days came, many of them, following the teachings and impressions of Virginia politics, became Democrats.

The valley of the Scioto and its tributaries have produced many of the conspicuous and distinguished men who have crowded the pages of Ohio's history with the record of their good deeds and great achievements.

Allen G. Thurman, one of our greatest statesmen, best lawyers, and purest men, was a resident originally of Chillicothe, having been born at Lynchburg, Va., and coming with his father at an early date to the Scioto Valley. William Allen, the famous citizen of Fruit Hill, lived and died a citizen of Chillicothe, and in the beautiful cemetery on the top of the hills overlooking the city lie buried the remains of four governors of Ohio—Tiffin, McArthur, Worthington, and Allen. Here also lie the remains of Gen. Nathaniel Massie, who was entitled to have received and held the office of governor of Ohio, but because of his feeling that he ought not to take an office for which he had not received the majority vote of the people, although his opponent was ineligible, declined the office. So the remains of five governors of Ohio lie in this beautiful cemetery, from which the visitor overlooks one of the grandest panoramic views anywhere in the world, I think. The hills to the right, the hills in the front, the hills to the left, the magnificent farms spread out like a beautiful carpet, all that can be imagined of beauty in landscape spreads itself out to the admiring gaze of the visitor.

On the east of Chillicothe is a splendid range of hills, which are memorable in connection with the early statehood of Ohio, the first great seal having engraved upon it emblems of agriculture, emblems of transportation in the form of a canal service; and the rising sun, suggestive of the glories that were to follow, makes its appearance coming up between the peaks of the high hills.

I remember one very beautiful morning starting before sunrise with President Hayes to travel from Chillicothe to Columbus by railroad. As we were passing eastward toward the station the sun was just rising, and General Hayes, who was a lover of all things of this character, stopped and pointed and said, "There is the view that suggested the old seal of the State of Ohio." For all time, no matter what changes may come, the outgrowth of the genius and intelligence of men, the great feature of the old seal of the State of Ohio will make itself apparent to the people of Chillicothe in all the coming ages.

The people who settled there were men of high distinction. I could not, without invidious comparisons or elaborate extension of my remarks, do justice to the long list of grand men who have impressed themselves and their characteristics and their patriotic purposes upon the population and action of the people of Chillicothe and Ross County.

Gen. Nathaniel Massie founded the city of Chillicothe in 1796, and selected for his permanent residence, however, a beautiful tract of land in the Paint Creek Valley, a stream tributary to the Scioto, one of the most beautiful valleys on the map of the world. But time would fail me if I attempted to speak of the grand men who settled in that neighborhood. What I have already said is hardly pertinent to the question under consideration. I have referred by name only to those who became conspicuous in the directions I have indicated.

As I have said, Chillicothe is located in one of the richest valleys in the world, and is the commercial center of that valley. A canal, stilled owned by the State, traverses the valley from the mouth of the river away north beyond Columbus, and railroads center in Chillicothe from all parts of Ohio. It is situated upon a great through line of railroad between St. Louis and the city of Baltimore, and thence to New York.

The inhabitants of this section of Ohio are the production of the commingling of various races. The cavaliers, to whom I have already referred, and the men of the Ohio Company's purchase, who spread themselves out from the Raccoon Valley into the Scioto Valley, commingling blood of the Puritans with the blood of the cavaliers, and making a population second in intelligence, patriotism, wealth, and character to no other population of equal size in the United States.

So, Mr. Chairman, in expending a few dollars for the purpose of erecting a public building in that city and placing upon it that flag for which the fathers and the grandfathers of the men and women of to-day fought both under the organization of old Virginia and in the achievement of her independence in connection with the colonies, as well as in the introduction of the great States into the brotherhood of States, you accomplish a purpose which, in my judgment, is commendable in the highest degree.

If I could have my way about it, there would be an American flag upon a public building in every considerable city in the Union. [Applause.] Since I have been a member of Congress I voted for a bill that would have given to every city in the Union with a population above a certain number a public building. I think now it would be money well expended to carry out such a project. I rejoice that the time has come when in planting the American flag upon any foot of the soil of the United States we need not have any fear that it will ever be looked upon again as the representative of injustice, unfairness, or oppression against the people of the United States or against the people of any other country. [Applause.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN].

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I acknowledge that at first I thought the three hours allowed for debate on this bill would be unnecessary. But since the discussion has begun I see the necessity for such debate. I am one of those who are not satisfied with this bill, though I shall vote for it. The grounds of my objection are its omissions and its limitations, especially the limitation as to cost of sites. But, Mr. Chairman, realizing that in the present parliamentary situation this bill can not be amended in this House, it is unnecessary for me to say anything about those omissions and limitations; and, therefore, I wish to express my gratification at the recognition which this bill contains of the town of Durham, N. C.

As is well known to the chairman of the Public Buildings Committee and to every member of that committee, I have to the last moment diligently and persistently urged that the proposition for another city in my present Congressional district should also be included in the bill. I refer to the bill introduced by me to enlarge the building at Greensboro, N. C. The omission of that meritorious project in this House bill has been to me a disappointment. Yet I have a confident hope that before Congress adjourns the Greensboro measure will become law, and I am glad to say that for the realization of that hope I have positive encouragement from the best sources. As to Durham, my predecessor in Congress introduced in the Fifty-third Congress a bill for a public building at that place. He reintroduced it in the Fifty-fourth Congress; and on the fourth day after I was first sworn in as a member I reintroduced it in the Fifty-fifth Congress, and thereafter in the Fifty-sixth and the Fifty-seventh Congresses.

In the Fifty-fifth Congress the Public Buildings Committee made a favorable report upon the bill for a public building at Durham, but that was one of the few unfortunate towns whose bills were not reached during the time allowed for the consideration of bills reported by that committee. Now, I am glad to see that Durham is included in this bill and that in all likelihood there will soon be a public building erected there. The bill that I introduced carries $100,000, but owing to the last estimate furnished the Public Buildings and Grounds Committee by the Treasury Department, the committee put Durham in this bill at $70,000, in accordance with that estimate.

Now, Mr. Chairman, Durham is a very important town. As in the Fifty-fifth Congress, in a speech on this floor, I gave statistics regarding Durham as she then was, I want to give some as she now is. Its population, according to the last census, was 6,679, but the township of Durham under the last census had 19,055. The truth is that about 15,000 of those people belong to the town of Durham, though not within its corporate limits at the time the census was taken. The last legislature of North Carolina, which met in January, 1901, enlarged the corporate limits so that to-day my information is the corporate limits of the town of Durham contain over 12,000 people, and in addition there are some populous communities adjoining the town.

The town of Durham during the last fiscal year paid to the Government in internal revenue $2,589,721. I notice with pleasure that the chairman of the Appropriations Committee [Mr. CANNON] smiles at that great contribution which Durham made to the Federal Treasury. Practically every dollar of this internal revenue is paid upon tobacco. The receipts from the post-office during the last fiscal year were $19,400.25. Durham is also a port of delivery. During the eleven months ending June 30, 1901, 2,046,293 pounds of manufactured tobacco were exported from this port to foreign countries, and upon that tobacco not a cent of revenue was paid.

In 1885 the post-office receipts amounted to $5,545. In 1895 they were $11,707; in 1899, $14,982.90; in 1900, $17,111.65; in 1901, $19,400.25.

Mr. Chairman, I want to congratulate the people of Durham upon the probability of their soon seeing, as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] wants to be seen everywhere in such towns, the United States flag flying from a Federal building; and I want to congratulate this House that this good town, which has been knocking at the doors of Congress for ten long years, is at last about to receive 70 per cent of the recognition which her people and their Representative think she is justly entitled, as this bill carries for her $70,000 instead of $100,000. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4419. An act to incorporate the General Education Board;

S. 3967. An act for the relief of Ramon O. Williams and Joseph A. Springer; and

S. 1191. An act for the relief of the legal devisees of James W. Schaumburg.

OMNIBUS PUBLIC-BUILDING BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. MERCER. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCDERMOTT].

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Mr. Chairman, section 29 of this bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury, the Postmaster-General, and the Attorney-General to make a report to the next session of this Congress upon the selection of a site, cost of building, etc., for a post-office in Jersey City. My understanding is that the committee desires plans and estimates before making an appropriation, and my further understanding is that this course will make but a few months' delay. Of course I would rather not have even this delay, but the bill is not, under the rule adopted, subject to amendment, and I am bound to express to the chairman of the committee and his fellow-members my appreciation of the courtesies they have extended to me during the several hearings given to Jersey City's application. In order that the commission may have a few statistics before them and that all the members of this House may be fully informed of the conditions imperatively demanding an appropriation for Jersey City, I desire to record a fair statement of present postal facilities in that municipality.

To those members of the House who are familiar with Jersey City argument can not be necessary to prove that municipality entitled to relief from Congress in the matter of the erection of a suitable public building to be used by the postal, revenue, judicial, and other departments of the United States Government. To those who have seen the city only while in transit to New York a few facts may be of benefit in arriving at a proper conclusion. The present building was purchased under legislation enacted in 1873, and is constructed for a private dwelling house, the inside of which would not be found extensive for a family of ten members. It was purchased by the Government in 1875, and was then in a residential section, which has since, by the encroachments of manufacturing establishments and railroad lines, been almost wholly transformed. It is now, for a large majority of the population and for visitors from New York and elsewhere, inconvenient of access, miserable in appearance, furnishing an eyesore for residents, and a topic for the ridicule of visitors.

The following letter from the Treasury Department shows the cost to date:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SUPERVISING ARCHITECT,
Washington, February 26, 1902.

Hon. ALLAN L. MCDERMOTT, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Your letter of the 24th, instant, addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury, relative to the appropriations made for a post-office building at Jersey City, N. J., has been referred to this office for response.

The records of this office indicate that in pursuance of acts of Congress approved March 3, 1873, and March 3, 1875, a plat of ground at the intersection of Sussex and Washington streets, Jersey City, N. J., with a brick building thereon, which had been used as a residence, was purchased October 21, 1875, for the sum of $70,000. In 1877, under authority of an act of July 31, 1876, this building was remodeled, and was occupied again in the latter part of that year. The total appropriations to this date were $112,000. Subsequently there was an additional appropriation of $4,000 for improvement of grounds, and in 1889 a one-story addition was built and some minor changes made at a cost of about $12,000, which sum was appropriated by an act of March 30, 1888. It would therefore appear that the total amount appropriated for the building named, aside from the regular annual cost of maintenance, was $128,000.

Trusting that this information may prove to be what you desire, I am,
Very respectfully,

J. K. TAYLOR, Supervising Architect.

Its purchase was a mistake, and its continuance in the public service is a detriment so positive that no parallel can be found in the dealings of the United States with the necessities of the people in any other section. The city is compactly built; covers an area of 13 square miles, is lighted by over 2,500 public lights, has about 250 miles of streets, and a population of over 200,000. It contains the terminal depots and lands of the Pennsylvania, Delaware, Lackawanna and Western, Lehigh Valley, Baltimore and Ohio, Erie, Philadelphia and Reading, and half a dozen other railroads. The value of its real estate, including railroad terminals, is about $200,000,000. Millions of dollars have been expended in the erection and equipment of manufactories, and we here find the works of the American Sugar Refining Company, the Lorillard Tobacco Company, the Dixon Crucible Company, the Colgate Soap Company, the Corcoran Windmill Works, the Griffin Iron Company, and hundreds of other corporations whose correspondence reaches every part of the world. In addition to these, over 2,000 corporations doing business outside of New Jersey have their offices in Jersey City. The correspondence of these concerns alone demands greater facilities than can be afforded in the present post-office, The following letter shows the growth in postal receipts at this station:

FEBRUARY 25, 1902.

HON. ALLAN L. MCDERMOTT,
House of Representatives.

The records in this office do not show the receipts of individual offices for years prior to 1878, therefore it is impossible to furnish the record for the above office for the fiscal years 1873 to 1877, as requested by you.

Very respectfully,

W. M. JOHNSON,
First Assistant Postmaster-General.

In 1875 the receipts were less than $38,000, and it therefore appears that there has been practically no increase in accommodation, while the business of the office has increased over 700 per cent.

So pressing are the necessities that the Secretary of the Treasury has decided that there must be an addition of some kind to the present building for immediate use. I have declined to introduce a bill for this purpose, believing that money expended in this way would be thrown away and that the immediate wants of the Department should be met by the renting of an additional building, to be used while a proper one is in course of construction. Almost every foot of space within the building is used by employees, and a dozen callers for letters must crowd each other into the street.

No other community is similarly afflicted, and no one can suggest a reason why the really great city of Jersey City should have this intolerable nuisance continued. The city has a city hall erected at a cost of over $1,000,000, school buildings that have cost several millions, and office buildings costing from $100,000 to $700,000 apiece. The public spirit and business enterprise that have done these things should not be depressed by having them offset by the maintenance in the name of the National Government of a public building that would not properly answer the requirements of a city of 20,000 inhabitants. With the exception of the $100,000 appropriation mentioned, the National Government has never expended a dollar within the city of Jersey City for an improvement of any kind, while hundreds of other municipalities have been favored far beyond their needs, and the pleas upon which these favors have been granted have not had safe foundation in any rule of governmental economy. All that Jersey City requests is that the Government of the United States shall show proper respect for itself.

Mr. MERCER. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EVANS].

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, the committee, in the bill reported to the House, has appropriated the sum of $20,000 for the purpose of securing a site upon which to erect a public building in the city of Johnstown. I presented to the House a bill asking for an appropriation of $125,000 for the purpose of securing a site and erecting a public building at that place; but the committee, in its judgment, did not see proper to recognize us in our application as set forth in the bill, and instead of that made the appropriation which I have referred to in the bill.

To my mind the wants and the needs of Johnstown in this direction are many; and while I am not here complaining as against the action of the committee in this particular, yet I believe that the application in the original bill should have been recognized. Johnstown is a city situate in the central part of the great State of Pennsylvania, and the history of that city in some particulars is well known to the people of this great country of ours. She is situated in the Conemaugh Valley, and in 1889 her people were almost wiped out of existence, and a great part of the city was destroyed by the dreadful flood which occurred in that year. Yet we find that in 1890, the year following the flood, the population of that city was some 21,000 people, and in 1900 the population had increased to some 35,000 people.

In order to indicate to the House the needs of this city for a public building, I wish to call attention to the receipts and expenditures for the year 1901 of the post-office in that city. In 1901 the total receipts for the fiscal year were $47,764.92, and the total expenditures were $22,657.70, leaving for the year 1901 a net revenue of over $25,000. Yet we are accorded only $20,000 for the purpose of obtaining a site for this city. We find that we are in a somewhat helpless condition, because we can not move an amendment to increase the amount in this bill. We should have been glad if we could do so; but however that may be, it does seem to us that the amount accorded is commensurate with the extent of the business in that city.

Now, the information before the committee as to the cost of a site on which to locate a building in this city ranged, I believe, from $35,000 to over $50,000. I very much fear that the amount appropriated in this bill will not be sufficient to secure a site in a desirable location in the city. However that may be, we desire to be in a position to lay before the House the needs and wants of the city as based upon the amount of business which is done there.

The total population of the city, as I have already said, is over 35,000, but there are adjacent boroughs that do their business through the Johnstown post-office, and the population of those adjacent boroughs amounts to something in the neighborhood of 14,000 people, making a total population doing business through that office of over 50,000 people.

Now, in glancing over the list of appropriations made for buildings in Pennsylvania I can say that but a single one of the cities named is greater in population than the city of Johnstown, and only a single one of these show an amount of receipts flowing through the post-office greater than those in Johnstown.

Now, Mr. Chairman, while we appreciate our helpless position, we hope that the action of the committee in this bill has placed us on the highway to securing that to which we feel that we are entitled. [Applause.]

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say for the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EVANS] that he has done all in his power to convince the committee that a building should be authorized at Johnstown.

The city of Johnstown is peculiarly situated. The topography of the country is unusual, and the building space in that city is confined within very narrow limits. The city government of Johnstown owns a piece of ground 66 feet square, and when the delegation from that enterprising city came before our committee evidence was offered that most likely the city would donate that much of ground for a site, and that additional ground could be purchased which would enlarge the site satisfactorily and at a cost not to exceed twenty or thirty thousand dollars. The remark was dropped that possibly $20,000 would satisfy the requirements for the purchase of additional ground. The distinguished gentleman [Mr. EVANS] is inclined to think it will take more money than that. The Treasury Department in its estimate to the committee indicates that $25,000 will be sufficient. Our information is that $20,000 will be ample, and I am inclined to think that the enterprising citizens of Johnstown will see to it that the Government obtains a site within those figures.

In reply to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCDERMOTT] I desire to say that Jersey City is one of the largest cities in the East without a commodious public building. The Government of the United States has already expended in Jersey City $147,539.08 toward the purchase of a site and the construction of a building in that city. The present site cost in the neighborhood of $71,390, and was purchased August 15, 1875. The same site to-day can not be sold for over $25,000 or $30,000. It is in size 200 feet by 100 feet, but is situated in that part of Jersey City where land values have decreased. The business center of the city has gradually moved westward. To purchase a site for Jersey City will cost a good deal of money, and the committee was not satisfied with the data it had before it to act thereon without further information; and it has recommended in this bill a further investigation of the situation at Jersey City.

The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCDERMOTT] has been very diligent in this matter, has been before the committee several times, and has responded to all inquiries put to him in reference to this matter, and I trust in the early future that Congress will find itself justified in furnishing that enterprising city with a commodious public building.

Mr. VANDIVER. I did not hear all that the gentleman said; but I understood him to say that that had been purchased there in 1875 for $75,000, and no building erected on it yet.

Mr. MERCER. The gentleman really misunderstood me. The Government purchased a site at that time, but at that time there was a building on the site. It was a private residence belonging to a wealthy man of that day, and the Government has utilized the building, with the additions added to it since, up to the present time.

Mr. VANDIVER. But the gentleman says at the present time that it would not sell for $25,000?

Mr. MERCER. I do not think it would sell for over $25,000.

Mr. VANDIVER. How does the gentleman account for that wonderful decline in value?

Mr. MERCER. Because business has moved away from that portion of Jersey City, and the valuable portion of the city is now in a different direction from that in which the present office is situated. The gentleman is aware in a city such as Jersey City the business center sometimes moves from one place to another, and in Jersey City it has actually left the place where the present office is situated.

Mr. VANDIVER. Does the gentleman think the commission will ascertain the fact that it was not a reasonable investment when it was made?

Mr. MERCER. I have been informed that the Government paid really more than it should have paid at the time the property was purchased.

Mr. VANDIVER. I should think so.

Mr. MCDERMOTT. If the gentleman will allow me to answer the gentleman from Missouri——

Mr. MERCER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MCDERMOTT. In 1875 property in the vicinity of the present post-office site was very valuable for residential purposes, but, in my opinion, at least 30 per cent more than its real value was paid for the property. Since then the uses to which property in this vicinity is put have been wholly changed. The site is not now convenient for carriers or the public. Of course there are differences of opinion as to where the post-office should be located, and, after going over the available sites with the chairman of the committee, I am not inclined to scold because he and the others of the committee have decided to leave the selection to a commission. After that commission has decided the character of building Jersey City is entitled to, I think it would be well to advertise for proposals for a site; but whether this course or some other is pursued, I am satisfied that a commission composed of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Attorney-General, and the Postmaster-General will recommend that which will meet the approval of the people of Jersey City.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, in the few minutes which I have I only desire to enter my own protest against this method of appropriating public money. I have no doubt but what there are many public-building bills included in this which ought to pass. I am equally certain that there are those without merit, or very little, if any, and in order to secure the appropriation where it is deserved in this bill you are compelled to vote for appropriations which you feel are not meritorious. There would be just as much reason for the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to bring their bill before this House under such a rule, preventing any amendment or change in a single item.

If the Committee on Rules of this House proposes to adopt this system of appropriating the public money, and the members of this body sanction it, the time will come when appropriation bills other than such as this will be put through in such method. It is simply enlarging the powers of the Committee on Rules. All you have to do is to satisfy that committee, or a majority of it, that these items are right and ought to be passed. There is as much justification to adopt a rule for the benefit of the Committee on Appropriations to put through any appropriation bill that comes into this House without any amendment whatever, requiring the members to vote for every item.

Mr. MERCER. Will the gentleman permit me an inquiry?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. MERCER. I believe the gentleman was a member of the Fifty-fourth Congress?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. No, sir; I was not.

Mr. MERCER. The Fifty-fourth Congress passed a river and harbor bill with twenty minutes' discussion, covering $60,000,000.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. That does not make it right. I do not know whether it was open to amendment or not. I was not in that Congress.

Mr. MERCER. It was not open to amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Was it under suspension of the rules?

Mr. MERCER. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Then it was passed under the rules of the House, and two-thirds of the members voted for it.

Mr. MERCER. Two-thirds of the members are in favor of this bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. I suppose if you have two-thirds of the members in the bill, that is true. [Laughter.] But, Mr. Chairman, that does not justify this proceeding. I care not whether a precedent has been established or not, it ought not to be followed. You have often heard of appropriations being logrolled through the State legislatures, but I never have witnessed a system of more public barter in legislation than is now going on in the House of Representatives. What does the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds do when a member introduces a bill? They virtually say we will put your bill on the Calendar. We will report it favorably, providing that you will vote for 175 others that we are going to report. If that is not bribery, what is it in parliamentary language?

Now, I suppose the gentlemen who have public buildings in this bill feel under obligations to support it, and will. I am not prepared to say that in such a case members of Congress do not owe some duty to the public in general as well as to the people of the town or city in which the public building is to be located. Now, you might just as well bunch together all the pension bills that are brought before this House and logroll them through without amendment. Make the good bill pull through the bad bill. The time to stop this practice is in the beginning, and if you continue it this same rule will be adopted by other committees in the appropriation of public money, and I hope, Mr. Chairman, that this will be the last time that 175 or 200 bills appropriating money are linked together in order that those that have merit may pull through those that have none.

Mr. MERCER. Is the gentleman from Illinois in favor of economy in these matters?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. If I thought the gentleman from Nebraska was ever sincere, I would answer him; but my observation is that he simply tries to make a little fun in order to get his bill through.

Mr. MERCER. If I was trying to make fun of the gentleman from Illinois, I would show his picture; I would not say anything about him. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Oh, it is admitted by all the members in the House that the gentleman from Nebraska is one of the handsomest men that ever came to Congress [laughter]; exceedingly handsome; and I do not have to prove it, because the gentleman from Nebraska admits it. [Laughter.] I hope, while I am not as handsome as the gentleman, I have more courtesy than the gentleman showed toward the gentleman from New York this morning.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I ask for two minutes more.

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Chairman, I take pleasure in yielding to the gentleman two minutes more of my time.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. I thank the gentleman. I accept that as sufficient consideration for the compliment paid him. [Laughter.] Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not doubt but that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds are just as careful in their consideration of these matters as any other committee, but it is simply assuming that the bills which they report are perfect and that this House is not capable of improving them.

I am not objecting to the bringing in of the several public-building bills all in one bill, but I say this House ought to have the right to amend, to strike out, and insert, and if there is a place in it where they are trying to appropriate money which ought not to be appropriated, the House ought to have the opportunity to remedy it. I do not know how meritorious they all are. I see one town of 1,800 people where they have an appropriation of $100,000. It may be right. I see another town, in Iowa, of 8,000 people, where the Treasury estimate was $75,000. The committee, in its generosity, has allowed $100,000. Perhaps an examination and discussion of the case would show that the other $25,000 was necessary or ought to be stricken out.

I only refer to this to show that the proper way to deal with these questions is to give an opportunity to amend and to strike out and insert, the same as you do in the river and harbor bill and in other appropriation bills. I say the effect of it is that when you lump together a large number of bills in which a majority of the House of Representatives are interested and put them all into one bill, members are induced to vote for it that you could not induce to do a wrong with any amount of money, and yet it is a form of bribery and nothing else; and I do not believe the people of the United States, when they get an understanding of the reckless methods by which their money is being appropriated in this way, will give it their approval. [Applause.]

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Chairman, as I said at the outset, we have 400 bills before the committee, aggregating not less than $67,000,000, and if we had come into the House with all these public-building bills I am afraid my friend from Illinois would have been sadly disappointed from an economical standpoint, for in that case the authorizations would have been nearer $60,000,000 than the amount in this bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. I had no hope that less money would be appropriated, but it might go where it ought to go if it was considered and appropriated by the judgment of this House.

Mr. MERCER. Now, Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that, so far as I know, no one else desires to address the Committee of the Whole, I desire that the report of the committee be read in my time.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. GROSVENOR). The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent——

Mr. CREAMER. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the proposition and then the gentleman from New York will be recognized to make objection. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that the report of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds be read in his time. Is there objection?

Mr. CREAMER. I object.

Mr. MERCER. I did not ask unanimous consent. I asked that the report be read in my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made; and the Chair will state to the gentleman that when objection is made a paper can not be read in Committee of the Whole except by a vote of the committee. The gentleman is at liberty to make the motion.

Mr. MERCER. Well, Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that the gentleman from New York [Mr. CREAMER] has objected, I desire to say that the following is the report made by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. [Mr. MERCER proceeded to read the report.]

Mr. FINLEY (interrupting the reading). Will the gentleman yield to a motion that the report of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds be read at the Clerk's desk?

Mr. MERCER. I will.

Mr. FINLEY. Then, Mr. Chairman, I make that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MERCER. I desire to thank my friend from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY].

The Clerk proceeded to read the report.

The CHAIRMAN (when the reading had proceeded some time). The time of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MERCER] has expired.

Mr. MERCER. I ask the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] to yield to me so much of his time as will permit the reading of the report to be finished.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will yield the gentleman all of my time except five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will stop the reading at such a point that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] will have the five minutes which he reserves.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the report.

Mr. MERCER (interrupting the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the rest of the report be printed in the RECORD without reading.

There was no objection.

The entire report is as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 14018) to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, and for other purposes, respectfully recommend the passage of the same and report thereon as follows:

Over 400 bills authorizing public building legislation have been introduced and referred to this committee. The sum total thereby requested amounts to over $65,000,000. The demand for public buildings not only comes from the States and Territories, but we have had it from Porto Rico, Alaska, and Hawaii, all of which gives evidence of the fact that the Republic is growing with astonishing rapidity. The business of the Government keeps pace with the general growth of the country, but Congress seems to lag in its relief. It is impossible to meet all the demands of the country at this session of Congress, but let us hope that this effort of the committee will be followed by a general desire on the part of Congress and the country that those cities where buildings are inadequate, or where new buildings are needed and which have not been recognized in this bill, may reap their reward at an early date. This bill carries an increase in the limit of cost of 58 public buildings now erected or in process of erection, providing for additions, repairs, or the purchase of additional ground in order that the present site may be enlarged.

Treasury estimate	10,792,950

Section 2 provides for the erection of public buildings upon ground owned by the United States Government. In San Francisco the present custom-house is an old building, having been erected and occupied in 1856. The importance of San Francisco as a shipping center and customs district justifies Congress in this authorization. Pending the destruction of the present building and the erecting of a new building the customs officials can be temporarily housed in the appraisers' stores building, thus saving to the Government pay for rent of temporary quarters.

In Emporia, Kans., a site was authorized by the Fifty-first Congress. The Fifty-fifth Congress authorized the purchase of sites in Hastings and Norfolk, Nebr., as United States courts are held in these cities.

In Guthrie, Okla., a public square has been reserved to the Government for the use of public buildings.

Total authorized for the above six buildings	$1,236,000
Treasury estimate	2,230,000

Section 3: Several cities in the United States have offered to donate to the Government of the United States satisfactory building sites. This committee has recognized in this section the more meritorious propositions, there being sixteen, at a—

Total authorization of	$1,835,000
Treasury estimate	2,305,000

Section 4 authorizes the purchase of sites and the erection thereon of public buildings within a fixed limit of cost. Seventy-eight cities are recognized.

Total authorization	$8,548,000
Treasury estimate	10,782,000

Section 5: In this section the committee authorizes the purchase of sites in 16 cities within a limit of cost fixed. The committee believes that a public building should be erected in each of the cities named in this section, but not being able to justify an authorization now, thought it advisable to buy sites before they increased in value. It would be economy for the Government to secure building sites in cities where public buildings are contemplated as far in advance of the authorization as possible.

Section 6: The city of Washington, with about 300,000 population and the capital of the Republic, is without a municipal building. Her servants are crowded in rented quarters poorly lighted and overcrowded. Your committee is of the opinion that the time has come to relieve this "long-felt want," and in this section the purchase of a site and the erection thereon of a municipal building is authorized. It is to be located south of Pennsylvania avenue upon the only available vacant square of ground to be obtained in this locality. In this connection the committee desires to go on record as favorable to the improvement of Washington. We look upon this city not simply as a municipality in the District of Columbia, but rather as the capital of the richest nation on earth, and we feel that as our capital it should receive encouragement and assistance from all sections of the nation. Washington belongs to the people of the United States, and they will rejoice at all efforts made by Congress to beautify and improve her surroundings. The few people who live in Washington should not be expected to bear the brunt of taxation for such purposes. Your committee hopes for the time when public-building legislation in Washington will be along broad, not narrow, lines.

The authorization for increases of limit of cost, as provided for in section 1 of this act, are based upon Treasury estimates, but the committee, after very careful consideration, has made allowances below the estimates furnished.

The only large increases are at New York City and Cleveland, Ohio. In the former place the custom-house has a commanding location on the Battery overlooking the bay, and in order to have the material in construction of the same kind throughout the building it is necessary to increase the limit of cost. The building when completed will serve New York City for several generations.

In Cleveland the Government engineer, by borings, discovered a defective foundation. The old building, now razed to the ground, was erected upon a crust of hardened earth and gravel, and a few sky scrapers in Cleveland in the immediate locality are similarly situated. Recent borings show that beneath the crust is a lake of sand about 34 feet deep, and in order to secure a safe and permanent foundation for a heavy building, as is to be the Federal building which will be erected upon the present site, more expensive work will be necessary than originally contemplated. Cleveland has in contemplation a so-called "group plan" for public buildings, and desiring to have the Government building as the corner stone of such a plan, the change in lines of site is authorized. If Cleveland carries out her present purpose of grouping the new court-house, city hall, art gallery, auditorium, and other public buildings with reference to the lake and the Federal building, and surrounds each building with parking, Washington will have a rival city for the reputation of being the most beautiful city in the world.

The city of Richmond, Va., needs relief; but the present building, which is historical as well as permanently constructed, can be made most acceptable by enlarging the site so that it will face both Main and Tenth streets. Your committee provides for an enlargement of the site. When that is done the present building can be enlarged and renovated into one of the best public buildings in America, and in a very economical manner. In this connection your committee includes a brief history of the present Federal building at Richmond:

"Among historic structures owned by the United States the Federal building in this city is perhaps richer in association with notable men and events than any building owned by the Government outside of Washington.

"It was built just in time to be occupied by the Confederate government. President Davis and his cabinet and General Lee and his officers were familiar figures about the building in the war period.

"Afterwards, when the Federals regained possession, an indictment was returned in this building against President Davis, whose final release, under bond, a year later, took place also in this building.

"Recently the Treasury Department asked the custodian of the building for a brief sketch of the structure. In response Mr. John S. Bethel, custodian, has prepared and forwarded to Washington the following history of the building:

"MR. BETHEL'S SKETCH.

"SIR: I have the honor to inform the Department, relative to information asked for by letter dated the 10th instant, that this building is located on Main street, between Tenth and Eleventh streets. It fronts on Main street and also on Bank street. It was finished and occupied in the year 1858. It was extended on the Bank street front, and two wings were added on the Main street front. These additions were completed in 1887. The character of the building is dressed granite, with wood and iron finish on the inside.

"The population of the city when this building was first occupied was 36,000; the estimated population now is 100,000. The Government never owned any building in this city before it built this one.

"HISTORICAL EVENTS.

"When the State of Virginia seceded from the Federal Union, in April, 1861, the State took charge of this building and used it for various purposes until the Confederate government was transferred to this city from Montgomery, Ala., in July, 1861, when they took charge of this building and installed here the treasury department of the Confederate States, from which were issued all the bonds and currency used by the Confederacy.

"Jefferson Davis, the president of the Confederacy, had an office on the third floor of this building, in which he and Gen. Robert E. Lee and other famous generals sometimes met for consultation.

"The secretary of state, Judah P. Benjamin, and the secretary of the treasury, together with the auditor and treasurer, occupied rooms in this building. Room No. 17 was used for cabinet meetings by the Confederate government.

"There was also stored in this building, up to April 2, 1865, the gold and silver of the Confederate States government, which on that date was transferred south. On the following day it was occupied by Federal troops, and afterwards placed under control of the Treasury Department.

"INDICTMENT OF DAVIS.

"In this building, on May 10, 1866, the grand jury of the United States circuit court indicted Jefferson Davis for treason. On May 13, 1867, he was brought into this building on a writ of habeas corpus, and was immediately released under bond given on that date by Horace Greeley, Franklin Stearns, Charles O'Conor, and others.

"Since that time nothing of unusual importance has transpired.

"Respectfully,

"JOHN S. BETHEL, Custodian.

"The SUPERVISING ARCHITECT,
"Treasury Department, Washington, D. C."

Section 6: A new post-office, court-house, and custom-house building has been constructed in Kansas City, Mo., but the needs of the service require space, and as the Treasury Department advises the sale of the old building, it was thought wise to invest the proceeds thereof in completing the new building as originally designed. This can be done without expense for additional ground, as the site upon which said new building has been erected is amply large for that purpose, being bounded on the north and south each 252 feet by Eighth and Ninth streets, respectively, on the west 289 feet and 1½ inches by Grand street, and on the east 289 feet by McGee street. The old building and site located on the corner of Ninth and Walnut streets, in Kansas City, including alterations and repairs, has cost the Government up to June 30, 1901, the sum of $387,600.19, the site having been purchased July 5, 1879. The bill provides that said site and building shall be sold for not less than $300,000.

Section 8: The purpose of this section is to give St. Louis a model post-office building. The post-office has outgrown the space allotted to it in the Government building and must be given relief. The fact that a great industrial exposition will be held in St. Louis, Mo., in 1904, alluring to the city millions of people and increasing the work of the post-office in a marked degree, only aggravates the situation.

The space now occupied by the post-office in the Government building can be occupied to a greater advantage by other Federal offices which are now housed in rented buildings.

Strange as it may seem, yet it is a fact, the best arranged post-office building in the United States—and, for that matter, in the world—is a temporary structure on the lake front in Chicago, and the experience of the postal authorities in that building convinces your committee that in all cities of the size of New York, Chicago, and St. Louis the post-office business should be confined in a separate building, divorced from all association with courts, customs, revenues, etc. An ideal post-office building should have plenty of ground space, good light, ventilation, and high ceilings. It should occupy an entire block or square of ground surrounded by streets and near a union depot. Such a building need not be an expensive one, yet expensive enough to be permanent. A steel frame with brick and terra cotta would serve the purpose admirably, and the economy of such a structure would encourage Congress to duplicate such a building in other large cities.

Section 9 authorizes the purchase of a site for a Federal building in New Orleans, La.

The present site was ceded to the United States June 29, 1848, by the first municipality of New Orleans, and building operations were commenced soon after. In 1860 the walls had been carried up 75 feet above the concrete base to the architrave line of the entablature and all the floor beams of the fourth story were in place. The discovery was then made that the building was slowly sinking, the maximum settlement in 1860 being 2 feet 6 inches, in spite of the fact that a commission in 1851 reported, from borings made, that the site was the firmest, driest, and most reliable in the city. Your committee has unofficial information that the total settlement of the building to date is about 4 feet. At this rate of speed through the earth the Chinese Government may some day occupy a building which housed Gen. B. F. Butler during the civil war. The post-office department should be removed and the space vacated given over to the customs service. The present building above the basement will be serviceable for many years, but a new building is needed for the post-office department and other offices in said city for which the Government is now paying rent.

Section 10: In 1854 the site in Providence, R. I., upon which the post-office building is now located, was purchased for $40,000. The present building was completed in 1857. The total cost of site and building to June 30, 1901, is $328,765.55. The city of Providence offers to donate to the Government as a site for a new building a tract of land in Exchange place, directly opposite a magnificent city hall, and within a stone's throw of a beautiful State capitol building, the site to be donated being worth about $500,000. The postal situation in Providence is bad, very bad, and patient indeed have been the people in that vicinity in waiting until now for relief. The present building and site can be sold when the new building is completed for almost as much as they have cost the Government to date.

Section 11: The present site in Wheeling, W. Va., was purchased September 7, 1855, for $20,000, being 132 feet square in size. Building was completed in 1860. The cost of site and building, including additions and repairs, to June 30, 1901, is $177,362.39, the original cost of the building being $96,618.64. The United States district judge refuses to hold court in the building on account of its condition, and for the further reason that the building being close to the railroad tracks noise from the engines and cars makes the transaction of business impossible, and when there is a rise in the Ohio River the basement fills with water. The situation in Wheeling justifies the action taken by your committee. A new site will be purchased sufficiently large and satisfactorily located to permit the erection thereon of a building that will serve Wheeling for many years to come.

Section 12: In the Fifty-fifth Congress legislation was enacted authorizing an appropriation of $58,000 to enlarge the present site and improve the present building at Macon, Ga. The appropriation followed, but the Treasury Department, owing to a rise in building material, was unable to execute the legislation provided by Congress within the limit of cost thereby fixed. The Treasury Department has submitted another estimate to the committee, and section 12 is responsive thereto.

Section 13: For several years the post-office building in New York City has been crowded, especially in the basement and on the first floor. Temporary relief has been given the Post-Office Department from time to time, but all efforts to relieve the congested condition in the present building have proven futile, and your committee are satisfied that the only permanent satisfactory remedy is a new building devoted exclusively to post-office business.

A building can not be erected until a site is selected, and as it will take from six months to two years to agree upon a suitable site, owing to the divergence of opinion as to location, your committee have decided to authorize the purchase of a site through a commission composed of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Postmaster-General, and the Attorney-General of the United States. The selection of this commission evades local jealousies and bickerings. To create a commission composed of citizens of New York or presidents of business organizations in said city would only involve the selection of a site, where land is valuable and the location of a site uncertain, in quarrels and complications which should be avoided. Until a site is selected the Government can not properly determine the character of building that should be erected. The committee are anxious to help New York and the country, and have provided for a full report by the commission as to style, size, and cost of building to be constructed. As soon as the site is selected a building will be authorized.

Section 14 authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to either purchase a new site under certain conditions or add to the present site in the city of Toledo, Ohio. If the citizens of Toledo will aid the Government in buying a suitable site within the limit of cost fixed it is probable that Congress will provide for the authorization of a new building. Toledo is a large and growing city, and whatever action is taken the effect of it should be to provide ample accommodations for all the Federal offices that may reside in said city during the next fifty years.

Section 15 authorizes the purchase of a site in Des Moines, Iowa. The present site was acquired October 6, 1866, for $15,000. The building was occupied in 1871. Two additions have been made to the building since 1871, the total cost of building and site to June 30, 1901, being $590,038.21.

The post-office in Des Moines does more business than any post-office in the United States in proportion to the population of the city, the gross receipts now amounting to almost $400,000 per annum, and to the credit of the postmaster there this office is one of the most economically managed offices in the United States, as only 28 per cent of the gross receipts are consumed in transacting its enormous business. The net receipts of the office for six months will buy the new site. A new building is a necessity in Des Moines now, and in two or three years it will be an imperative necessity. True economy suggests the purchase of a site now, and the building can follow as soon as the departments are fully decided as to size and character of building needed.

Section 16 authorizes the sale of the old Government building and site in Buffalo, N. Y. This site was purchased January 22, 1855, for $45,000. The total cost of building and site to June 30, 1901, is $553,978.72. The building has been enlarged and renovated several times, as the original cost of construction was $150,839.09. The Treasury Department recommends the sale of the property, as the Government has no further use for it and will be under expense in protecting it. The conservative judgment of business men in Buffalo is to the effect that the site and building is not worth more than $100,000. Your committee, after careful consideration of all information furnished bearing upon values, has decided to make the minimum limit of selling price $125,000. The new Government building in Buffalo is occupied, the old building having been vacated some time ago.

Section 17 authorizes a new building in Los Angeles, Cal. In 1880 about 11,000 people resided in this city; in 1890 there was a population of 52,000; in 1900 over 102,000, and in 1902 about 120,000. The growth of this city is phenomenal, and with the discoveries of oil lately made in that vicinity, added to other conditions which tend to make large cities larger, it is economy for the Government in erecting a public building there to build for the future and along very liberal lines. On January 7, 1887, a site was purchased for $28,635.13, and an addition thereto was purchased May 26, 1900, at a cost of $20,055, total cost of site being $48,690.13, with a frontage of 182 feet 9 inches on Main street. This property is now very valuable. Blunder after blunder has followed legislation affecting the public building in Los Angeles. The first authorization was for $150,000, and work was commenced in February, 1889.

In September, 1889, when the masonry had reached the second-floor level, the Treasury Department suspended work, anticipating that Congress would increase the limit of cost to $500,000 and provide for an enlargement of the site. Congress having failed to act, work was resumed in 1891 and building occupied in summer of 1892. Under appropriations approved March 21, 1895, and June 11, 1896, aggregating $17,000, alterations were made in the building, and a one-story extension, 25 by 60 in plan, was constructed at the south end. An act of March 3, 1899, provides for an extension of building and purchase of additional ground, and limits cost of same at $250,000. This legislation was brought about through a Senate amendment to a bill providing an increase of limit of cost of public building at Stockton, Cal., and was passed by the House of Representatives over the protest of your committee.

Events which have transpired since then justify the action of your committee in opposing at that time the Senate amendment above referred to. To make matters worse, the Federal officials in Los Angeles have moved from the present building to rented quarters, the post-office building has been razed to the first story, and an attempt made to erect a new structure upon the old foundation and first floor. The Treasury Department, satisfied that no suitable building could be constructed within the present limit of cost, suspended work, and requests Congress to legislate with reference to the size and growing necessities of the city. The provisions of this section are so drawn as to encourage your committee in believing that at last justice will be done Los Angeles and the Government at the same time properly protected. Elsewhere in this act provisions have been inserted which will render it impossible to impose upon the Government, as has been done in Los Angeles since 1889.

Section 18 authorizes a new building in Burlington, Vt. The present site, bounded on the north 222 feet by Main street, on the west 316 feet by Church street, was purchased May 5, 1855, for $7,520, and the total cost of building and site to June 30, 1901, is $91,400.52, the original cost of building being $44,714.91. The building is entirely unsuited for its purpose, the Federal court and Federal officials being obliged to occupy a State building. The post-office is so badly crowded that rented offices are necessary to relieve the situation. The net receipts of the business transacted in the Burlington post-office for a period of three years will pay for the new building, which is to be erected upon the present site.

Sections 19 and 20 regulate sizes of sites, rent of buildings, advertising, and inspection of sites.

Section 21 seeks to prevent delays in the construction of public buildings, and in justification of its action your committee submits a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury relating thereto.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, February 3, 1902.

SIR: Considerable difficulty has at times been experienced by this Department in its efforts to enforce, through the courts, stipulations for liquidated damages for delays in contracts for the erection or repairs of public buildings because of the lack of uniformity in the construction of such stipulations by the courts and the want of a Federal statute on the subject.

When contracts are awarded for the construction or repair of public buildings under the control of this Department it sometimes happens that, having a due regard for the convenience of the Government, the moving consideration for the acceptance of a particular bid is the time within which the bidder agrees to complete the work embraced in his bid, and where, under these circumstances, the Government buys time, so to speak, and lets work to a bidder based on the consideration of time being of the essence of the contract, it is unjust to the United States and unfair to competing bidders to say that recovery shall be had for no more than the actual damages sustained by the United States, and that the element of inconvenience to the public and the Government in being deprived of the use of the public building shall not be considered.

The attitude of the courts in favor of construing as penalties wherever possible all stipulations for liquidated damages is founded upon principles which in the main are humane and just, but it results in rendering possible, under certain circumstances, the most vexatious delays, with no other remedy on the part of the Department than the abrogation of the contract and the reletting of the same, a method in itself always attended with more or less delay.

If a Federal statute were enacted bearing on this subject it would put all men on notice that in all contracts for public-building work under the control of this Department persons legally competent to contract would be held strictly to their contract stipulations as to damages.

It seems to this Department that whenever Congress makes an appropriation for a public building or other public work that it should be presumed that a necessity exists therefor, and that being true it lies in the power of neither the Department, the contractors, nor the courts to determine with exactness the damages sustained by the public or the Government in being deprived of the use of such public building or other public work, and hence when parties to a contract agree in advance what those damages shall be such stipulations ought to be subjected to no different construction or interpretation than any of the other stipulations of the contract.

There is inclosed herewith a draft of suggestive legislation which this Department deems would prove effective, and I have the honor to recommend that the same, or some other provision having the like object in view, be incorporated in one of the general appropriation bills, preferably the sundry civil, under the heading "Public buildings."

Respectfully,
L. M. SHAW,
Secretary.

The CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS,
House of Representatives.

Section 22 authorizes an investigation of certain Federal buildings for the relief of which bills are pending before your committee, but the conditions of which are not sufficiently known by your committee to warrant action by it at this session of Congress.

Section 23 repeals an act authorizing the Department of Justice building in Washington. In the Fifty-fifth Congress $1,025,000 was appropriated, $25,000 thereof to pay for the removal of the Department of Justice to rented quarters and for rent of same, the $1,000,000 being for the erection and completion of a Department of Justice building upon the site opposite Lafayette Square in said city, owned by the Government of the United States, it being understood that no part of the $1,000,000 was to be expended unless a suitable building could be erected and completed within the limit of cost fixed.

In the Fifty-sixth Congress the Attorney-General came to your committee for an increase of $900,000, which was refused. As the site referred to is not large enough for a building such as should be erected for the purposes intended, your committee is of the opinion that the law should be repealed and the money heretofore appropriated, save and except the $25,000 allotted for purposes above set forth, should be returned to the Treasury of the United States and a full report made to Congress.

In consideration whereof your committee respectfully recommend the passage of H. R. 14018.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT].

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, this bill contains an appropriation for improving the public building in Macon, Ga., the city of my residence, in addition to that already provided by law. In the Fifty-fifth Congress—in 1899—I secured an appropriation of $58,000 to extend, improve, and enlarge that building so as to provide the necessary accommodations for Government business. Upon investigation by the Treasury Department it was ascertained that that sum was wholly inadequate to carry out the purpose intended, and therefore no part of that sum has been expended.

It was admitted by the Treasury Department and by the Committees on Public Buildings and Grounds of this House and the Senate in 1899 that the present building, which was erected in 1888, was absolutely inadequate and insufficient. But after that appropriation was secured the Secretary of the Treasury, at my solicitation, has not used a cent of it, but has recommended additional appropriation.

At the present session of Congress I introduced bills for the purpose of increasing the appropriation to $300,000 and one to erect a new building if, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury, that was necessary. The Secretary of the Treasury has written three letters on the subject, which I will read—two to the Committees on Public Buildings and Grounds of the Senate and the House and one to Senator BACON. In the one dated February 26, 1902, and which has been read by the chairman [Mr. MERCER], he states that an additional appropriation of $65,000 would be sufficient—at least, that was what was intended. For reasons which are unnecessary to be stated now, the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, while, I am satisfied, desiring to do that which was just and proper to the people of Macon, to give to the city of Macon the additional sum necessary to make that building sufficient to answer the demands of the Government, misunderstood the recommendations of the Treasury Department and included in this bill only $72,000, being only $14,000 more than the $58,000 which was appropriated in 1899.

Finding that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds had made this mistake in the bill now before the House as to his meaning, the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States has written the letter of the 25th instant to that committee stating that after careful investigation he believes that in addition to the sum heretofore appropriated, $67,000 is absolutely necessary to provide the building at Macon with sufficient room and accommodations to carry on the business of the Government. This letter is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, April 25, 1902.

SIR: Under date of February 28, 1902, this Department had the honor, in compliance with your request, to submit for your consideration a report and estimate in connection with H. R. 10590, providing for the acquisition of additional land and the construction of an addition to the public building at Macon, Ga., and H. R. 11094, providing for the erection of a new public building on the present site or upon a new site.

An item of $58,000 was provided by the act of Congress approved March 2, 1889, for the extension and enlargement of the present Federal building at Macon, Ga., and for the purchase of additional land for the site thereof, and in submitting the report above referred to this Department's estimates were based upon such an enlargement of the building as was contemplated at the time said appropriation was made, and included only sufficient money to cover the increased cost of building materials.

The Department has more carefully considered the matter of the proposed enlargement of said building, and in view of the rapid growth of the city and the increase in the volume of the Federal business which is transacted in said building, it is found that $125,000 will be required for additional land and for the erection of a suitable extension, including the necessary changes in the present building; which will necessitate an appropriation, in addition to the $58,000 heretofore provided, of $67,000.

Respectfully,
L. M. SHAW,
Secretary.

The CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS,
House of Representatives.

I present now a letter from the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury to the senior Senator from Georgia, which is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, April 26, 1902.

SIR: In reply to your communication of this date in regard to measures pending in Congress providing for the erection of an addition to the public building in that city and for the erection of an entirely new building I have the honor to advise you that it is the opinion of this Department that the best interests of the public service would be subserved by providing for the acquisition of additional land adjoining the present site, and for the erection on said site, as enlarged by said additional land, of a new building, in order that adequate accommodations may be provided for the present and probable future requirements of the public service.

The Committees on Public Buildings and Grounds of the Senate and House have been advised that a suitable building to provide for the needs of the service at Macon can be erected for $275,000, and that the necessary additional land can be secured for $25,000, making the total estimated cost of new building and additional land $300,000, and the Department is still of the opinion that this amount will be sufficient.

In this connection you are advised that building methods have greatly improved since the present building at Macon was constructed, and it is now feasible to construct a new building for the sum of $300,000, including cost of necessary additional land, which would be much better adapted in every way to the needs of the public service at Macon.

You are further advised that on yesterday the Department reported to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the House that the sum of $125,000 would be required to remodel and enlarge the present building and to acquire the additional land necessary for the purpose, said report having been sent to the committee upon the suggestion of Hon. C. L. BARTLETT, who represents the Macon district in Congress, and who was of opinion that it would be impossible to secure a new building.

Respectfully,
M. E. AILES,
Assistant Secretary.

Hon. A. O. BACON, United States Senate.

So that it will be observed that in the opinion of the officials of the Government the city of Macon is entitled to have appropriated for enlarging the public building there at least $125,000, and that the best business proposition for the interest of the Government would be to build a new building to cost $300,000. I am assured that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds misunderstood the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury contained in his first letter, and when the letter of the 25th was received and read that committee instructed the chairman to amend the bill by striking out $72,000 and inserting $125,000, and the chairman, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MERCER] has assured me that he will do so before this bill becomes a law; that he will ask unanimous consent of the House to permit this amendment to-day, or that he will see to it that the committee of the Senate so amends the bill, and the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the House has by resolution directed its chairman to so amend this bill. So I am satisfied that by the efforts I have made in the interest of the people of my city I shall eventually secure for the improvement of the public building there at least the sum of $125.000, and, while this amount is not sufficient to build a new and more expensive building, it will be such as, in the opinion of the officials of the Treasury Department, will for some time to come answer the purposes of the Government at that city.

While, by reason of the rule under which this bill is now being considered, I can submit no proposition to amend it in any respect, I hope, yes, I know, that an opportunity will yet be given—if not in the House, certainly in the Senate—to so amend the bill as to carry out the suggestion of the Secretary of the Treasury and meet in a measure the wishes contained in the petition which I hold in my hand from the citizens of Macon, which contains 2,240 signatures.

Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to detain the committee, and will ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include certain statements.

There was no objection.

The petition referred to, and a copy of which follows, is signed by all the public officials, both of the United States and the State of Georgia, county and municipal officers, business men, and men of all professions and callings. It was filed by me in the House and presented to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and is as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The petitioners, citizens of Macon, Ga., and of the territory in the jurisdiction of the United States court for the southern district of Georgia, respectfully petition your honorable body to make provision for the erection in said city of a public building commensurate with the dignity of the Government of the United States and convenient for the transaction of its public business.

POST-OFFICE.

Petitioners respectfully represent that the small and insufficient public building in said city was erected in 1888. It was from the first inadequate for the sole purpose for which it was designed, namely, the sessions of the United States courts, and for the local post-office. From the first the post-office authorities have been gravely embarrassed by the narrow and restricted space assigned to it. This was injurious to the service, and jeopardized the security of the mails. The post-office has more than doubled its business since 1888, and is now, in the volume of mail handled, the third in importance in the State of Georgia. In 1888 it had 5 carriers. It now has 22. At that time the free-delivery system covered a small area of the city. It now extends over the greater portion of the county of Bibb, with daily distribution to nearly 60,000 people.

In addition to the carrier force the office contains 13 clerks, besides the postmaster and his assistant, and is the headquarters for 35 railway postal clerks and 1 inspector. Said office receives and dispatches 72 mails per day in a space which, circumscribed and inconvenient in 1888, is now totally insufficient for the purpose to which it is devoted. Should the ratio of increase in business which has been maintained during the last five years continue, the efficiency of the office, unless relief should soon be had, will be seriously affected.

UNITED STATES COURTS.

The space set apart for the United States circuit and district courts and the juries, grand juries, and officers thereof is painfully inadequate. There is but one court room. The referee in bankruptcy is compelled to rent quarters from private parties. The United States commissioner is compelled to hold his hearings in the clerk's office, to the grave interference with the duties of the clerks. There is but one room set apart for the circuit and district judges. This is so small that when a fire is kindled in the fireplace the judge is compelled to screen the furniture to prevent injury thereto and danger of the destruction of the building.

There is but one jury room, and that very small and uncomfortable. When two juries are deliberating, as is frequently the case, one must be sent to the grand jury room in the garret, and if the grand jury is in session and one jury is out, the court is practically compelled to suspend the trial of jury cases. When the circuit judge has visited the district, he and the district judge are compelled to occupy the same small room, about 15 by 16 feet. There is no witness room, and when witnesses are sequestered they are compelled to remain for hours in the hall, with great discomfort and danger to health.

In the many important trials held at Macon, when a large number of witnesses are congregated, it is on this account impossible to preserve decorum in the avenues leading to the court room. The business of the courts has largely increased. The official residence of the United States judge for the southern district of Georgia is Macon, and many cases of the largest consequence are here tried, with great inconvenience to the public and to counsel from a distance and from other States on account of the meager accommodations provided for the court.

This district embraces the large cities of Macon, Savannah, and Augusta, and many other important cities and towns, and the entire seacoast of Georgia. It comprises 68 counties and contains a population greater than that of the entire State of Florida. Its charming climate has induced the settlement of large numbers of people of high character from Northern States, notably at Jekyl Island and Thomasville. It possesses enormous interests in pine lands and the largest naval-stores interest in the world. Notwithstanding its immense resources, and that the exigencies of the public service may often so require, it would be impossible to hold in this building sessions of the circuit and district courts at the same time.

THE CLERK'S OFFICE.

While the provisions for the judges and the court are inadequate, a much more alarming matter is the insecure provision made for the court records. These are of the first importance, and millions of values depend upon their security. There are two rooms, one very small, provided for the clerks. These are already crowded with the files and records. These are rapidly accumulating, and no more space can now be utilized for this purpose.

There are two small vaults on the second floor of the building for the greater security for the records. These vaults are now crowded to their utmost capacity, and besides are in no sense fireproof. They are constructed of brick, and are supported by cast-iron pillars, which would immediately collapse if any considerable fire should break out in the lower story. The condition of these records, in which the public and the Government have so much interest, is therefore precarious in the extreme. To illustrate the importance of these facts, in one case alone there are deposited in the clerk's office original deeds of 200 different parties as evidence in litigation involving 300,000 acres of land claimed by a citizen of New York.

In view of the peculiar features of this case, if those deeds should be destroyed by fire it would pe practically impossible to determine the rights in issue. There is no designated room for attorneys who desire to examine records, no consultation room for counsel, and no place where a lawyer can consult with his client except in the open hall. It is also true that while the judges are in consultation with counsel at chambers that all other attorneys or persons who desire a conference are compelled to wait in the open hall.

THE MARSHAL'S OFFICE.

The accommodations for the marshal's office are even more insufficient than those for the clerical force. To use the vigorous language of the marshal, "the entire space set apart in the present building for the marshal and his deputies can hardly be called a room. From its size and shape it could more properly be denominated an auger hole in one corner of the building." It is, in fact, a very small, circular room, and if one-half of the books of the marshal were opened it would cover the entire space set apart to him. This is the disbursing officer for the court, who pays out many thousands of dollars per annum.

The accuracy of his accounts is of the highest importance and he is compelled to carry his books into the court and the single jury rooms so that his accounts may be spared the interruption caused by the multitude of jurors, parties, and witnesses who seek his office for information. Indeed, the bar tables in the court room are much worn because the marshal has found it necessary, during the recess of the courts, to use them for the purposes of his bookkeeping, and his officers are continually carrying backward and forward from one room to another the heavy books and dockets necessary for the record of his business. This officer should have at least three large rooms, while now he is crowded into a turret as vile in architectural appearance as it is useless and inconvenient for the public service.

THE DISTRICT ATTORNEY'S OFFICE.

In the one small room of the United States attorney there are habitually crowded four occupants—Mr. Erwin, the district attorney; Mr. Akerman, his assistant; Mr. R. E. Storrs, his clerk, and Mr. J. N. Talley, the official court stenographer. The requirements of the department compel him to have three filing cases in his office. His library is in three bookcases. There are two desks, two typewriter stands, a washstand, a stand for a water cooler and another for the letterpress, and with the necessary chairs the room is crowded beyond endurance. Here, too, assemble persons making inquiries, Government witnesses, defendants' counsel, internal-revenue officers, all witnesses seeking discharge on their subpœnas, and many others who have business with the district attorney.

It is therefore wholly impossible for the legal representatives of the Government to do any careful work in this office, and, in fact, the district attorney himself has been compelled, at his own expense, to rent offices in another building in order to secure the necessary privacy. The business of this office has largely increased. The district attorney formerly had no assistant. He now has two. The center of population in Georgia, as indicated by the late census, is fast moving southward, and the business of the office will, in all probability, increase rapidly for many years to come. There should be a room for the district attorney, a room for his assistant, another for his clerk, and a room for the official stenographer.

OTHER DEPARTMENTS.

There are, moreover, several departments of the public service which are represented in the Macon public building which were not here when it was designed. Here is the headquarters for a pension examiner. He has no room whatever. Here is now the headquarters for a division for internal-revenue collections, and the revenue agent with two deputy collectors, with the records, are crowded into a small circular space in the turret above the office of the marshal. There, too, is the stamp collector, the weather observer, and his assistant.

The rooms of these last two valuable officials of the Department of Agriculture are in what was once the cupola of the building, erected, presumably, for the purpose of ornamental architecture and as a coign of vantage from which to float the Stars and Stripes. It is, however, true that the necessities of the Weather Bureau have rendered the amputation of the cupola necessary. The lofty minaret thereon has been removed, the altitude reduced by many feet, and on the flat roof of the abbreviated tower, from which once floated the ensign of our country, there may now be seen from all parts of the city a doubtless useful and necessary wooden structure, bearing a strong resemblance to a chicken coop, and the flag, when exposed at all, must be ignominiously thrust at half-mast out of a window. The building is indeed an architectural monstrosity, and is as discreditable to the Government as it is injurious and inconvenient to the people of Macon and the southern district of Georgia.

COMPARATIVE ADVANTAGES ELSEWHERE.

Atlanta, already possessing a building three times the size of this, through the activity and public spirit of its distinguished Representative and of our distinguished Senators in Congress, has had $500,000 appropriated for a new structure. Augusta, with judicial business trivial in amount to that compared with the business at Macon, has witnessed the erection and has long enjoyed the use of a beautiful and spacious public building about twice as large as that here. In Savannah, where the Government already possesses a massive structure noted for its architectural beauty, more than $400,000 has been expended in the erection of a spacious and exquisite creation of the highest architectural skill for the Government service.

This beautiful building, ample for the public necessities for perhaps a century to come, constructed of marble from our Georgia mines, its walls of Parian white, and its entablatures glowing with the richer and variegated hues selected from those marvelous deposits, is at once an exemplification of our resources, an ornament to our beautiful seaport, a witness to the skill of our national architects, and an example of the generosity of our Government, while here in our own beautiful Macon, a population much larger than that tributary to Savannah, is compelled to suffer from the abortion herein described, which seems to have been carefully designed for the inconvenience and discomfort of its occupants and as a specimen of architecture as irremediable as hideous.

INSUFFICIENCY OF BUILDING RECOGNIZED BY CONGRESS.

The insufficiency of this building at Macon has been distinctly recognized by your honorable body by the appropriation of the sum of $58,000 for its alteration and improvement. With a clear conception of the impossibility of improving the present structure, the people of this community, its governing bodies, its chamber of commerce, the bar association, and the public generally protested against the use of the public money for this impossible and useless purpose, thus presenting, perhaps, the only case on record where a community, with the general welfare at heart, has declined to receive a substantial appropriation which the law had provided should be expended among its people.

This fact in itself, we respectfully submit, should strengthen the present appeal to your honorable body for a judicious and sufficient expenditure from the public funds to relieve us of the inconvenience and embarrassment and dangers to the public safety hereinbefore set forth. In view of these facts, we respectfully pray such measure at your hands as will cause to be set aside out of the public funds the sum of $500,000 for the purchase of a suitable lot and for the erection of a public building in the city of Macon, Ga., at a spot convenient to the public, that such building be constructed according to the best plans of modern architecture, and, if possible, builded of granite or marble taken from the quarries of our own State, and to be designed for the use of the United States courts and post-office in this city, and such other offices of the Government as may be deemed appropriate by the proper authorities. And your petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray, etc.

Mr. BARTLETT. The original is signed by 2,240 petitioners, whose names are omitted here.

The Macon post-office is the third in the matter of receipts in the State of Georgia. The present building was erected in 1888. The following are the postal receipts:

The following letter from the postmaster gives the condition of the room and space used for the post-office and the needs for additional space:

MACON POST-OFFICE, OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER,
Macon, Ga., February 26, 1902.

SIR: I have the honor to report that a special committee from the chamber of commerce, assisting in a movement to provide for this city a larger public building, have requested me to prepare a statement showing the conditions which surround the Macon post-office. Complying with the request, I herewith transmit the following, and ask that a copy of the same be furnished to said committee on application:

The post-office has more than doubled its business since 1888, and is now, in the volume of mail handled, the third in importance in the State of Georgia. In 1888 it had 5 carriers. It now has 22. At that time the free-delivery system covered a small area of the city. It now extends over the greater portion of the county of Bibb, with daily distributions to nearly 60,000 people. In addition to the carrier force the office contains 13 clerks, besides the postmaster and his assistants, and is the headquarters for 35 railway postal clerks and one inspector. Said office receives and dispatches 72 mails per day in a space, which, circumscribed as inconvenient in 1888, is now totally insufficient for the purpose to which it is devoted. Should the ratio of increase of business which has been maintained during the past five years continue, the efficiency of the office, unless relief should soon be had, will be seriously affected.

To enter into details, it may be added that the money-order department of this office is located in a semicircular tower room on the first floor, about 20 by 15 feet in dimensions, which necessarily contains eight pieces of furniture besides chairs and shelving. There is no vault connected with this room, and the records are exposed to the dangers of fire and water. The funds of the Department as well as the money-order blanks are kept in a small safe. This department issued during the last fiscal year about 17,000 money orders and paid about 54,000, besides handling the deposit of many Georgia offices. The total amount of money handled approximated $1,360,000. An assistant has been granted the money-order clerk, but there is no space in the room for his desk.

The registry department is a larger room and about as badly crowded. It is the headquarters for the registry clerk, his assistant, and a post-office inspector. The vault attached to this room is at times too small to hold registers and office supplies. There is insufficient desk and case space, and during the busy season the floor of the room is used for the division and temporary storage of valuable packages. Overcrowding in the closets in the judiciary department, immediately above this room, have from time to time flooded it, endangering the safety of valuables in course of transmission and the health of the clerks employed.

The working room of the post-office is crowded to its limits by the necessary desks and cases of 22 carriers, 13 clerks, and 2 special-delivery boys. The space for opening incoming mails has been reduced by crowding to 12 by 12, and within the last ten days there has been at times as many as 18 sacks of mail piled in it. Within this space four or five men must work. The four rural-route carriers work at little desks that are not sufficient at times to pile their mail on. In this working room are piled at this writing $1,400 worth of stamped envelopes and postals. The office stock of envelopes and postals are so deposited for the reason that the second vault will not hold it. Special-request stamped envelopes for business firms are held until delivery in the postmaster's office for the same reason.

A portion of the working room is cut off by wire screens for scale room, second-class matter to be dispatched, passageway to the registry for the use of railway clerks, 35 in number, and for the general-delivery department.

The postmaster's room is about 18 by 18; is occupied by the postmaster and his assistant and eight pieces of furniture. Here a large amount of business is transacted with the public direct, 65 employees are paid off, all complaints handled, office records kept, and a large correspondence conducted. The assistant postmaster should have a separate and larger room, with four times the vault space. Circumstances growing out of the postmaster's position, his office as custodian, his relation to the public, and his conferences with inspectors make it advisable for him to have the benefit of a private or consulting room.

To sum up the situation, the business of the Macon office has largely outgrown its accommodations, and is necessarily handled yearly with increasing inconvenience and insecurity.

Respectfully,

H. S. EDWARDS,
Postmaster.

Hon. H. C. PAYNE,
Postmaster-General, Washington, D. C.

From this it will be seen how immensely the business of the post-office has increased, and how insufficient the post-office room is for the business of the Government. The net proceeds to the Government from this office was nearly $45,000 for the year ending March 31, 1901.

The two other cities of the southern district of Georgia where court is held are Augusta and Savannah. From the following statement of the clerk of the United States court it will be seen that the business transacted at Macon is more than at either of the other two cities, and in some instances equal to the combined business of both. At Augusta and Savannah the Government has erected handsome and commodious public buildings, costing in the one $200,000 and in the other $500,000. It is but just and fair that the Government should provide quarters for the court and other public officials in some measure commensurate with the needs of the Government and the business transacted there.

It will be noted that the western division of the southern district of Georgia comprises 28 counties, and the eastern and northeastern divisions together comprise 48 counties.

The following table, compiled from the report of the last census, illustrates the marked growth of the population of the western division of the southern district of Georgia, for which the United States court is held in the Government building at Macon:

The increase in the population of Bibb County, in which the city of Macon is situated, as well as of the city of Macon, is shown by the following table, which is also compiled from the census returns of 1900:

To ascertain the population within the delivery limits of the Macon post-office there should be added to the population of the city of Macon the population of the following districts lying outside the corporate limits of the city:

Districts.	1890.	1900.
East Macon	3,777	5,078
Godfrey	4,260	6,489
Vineville	4,547	7,778
Macon	22,746	23,272
Total	35,330	[a]42,626

[a] Gain 7,296.

Macon is a beautiful city, situated very near, if not in the exact geographical center of the State of Georgia; has well-paved streets, lighted by electricity, several handsome public buildings and private residences, attractive parks, a first-class system of waterworks, with a daily capacity of 10,000,000 gallons of pure filtered water; two distinct systems of electric railways, with tracks permeating every section of the city and suburbs.

The population of Macon, as shown by the census of 1900 and as set forth in the table just referred to, is 23,272, but there is a population of 42,626 within the delivery limits of the post-office, the city having a number of populous suburbs which are not within its corporate limits. In 1890 there was a population of 35,330 within the delivery limits of the post-office, showing a gain within the past ten years of 7,296.

Several of the most important educational institutions of the State of Georgia are located at Macon. In Bibb County there are 31 public schools for whites and 18 for colored children, with an average attendance of 3,296 white pupils and 2,200 colored.

Mercer University, for boys, and Wesleyan Female College, the oldest college for ladies in the United States, and probably the oldest in the world, are among the leading educational institutions of the State and of the South.

St. Stanislaus is a Roman Catholic college for the training of priests, and the Mount de Sales Academy is a school for girls under the auspices of the Roman Catholic Church.

There is also a normal school for ladies and a normal school for colored pupils.

The Georgia Academy for the Blind, with two departments, one for white and one for colored pupils, is also located in Macon.

There are three orphanages in the city of Macon—the Appleton Home, under the auspices of the Episcopal Church; the Orphans' Home of the South Georgia Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and the Mumford Industrial Home.

Other charitable institutions are the city hospital, the Julia Parkman Jones Home for indigent ladies, under the auspices of the Episcopal Church; the Roff Home, with hospitals attached, for the poor of Bibb County; the Home for the Friendless, and Door of Hope, etc.

Macon is the terminal point of five important lines of railroads, as follows: The Georgia Southern and Florida, from Macon to Palatka, Fla., the general offices and shops of which are located at Macon; the Southwestern, connecting the city with all the important points of south and southwest Georgia; the Macon, Dublin and Savannah, extending from Macon to Savannah, with shops and general offices located at Macon; the Macon and Birmingham, extending from Macon to Lagrange, Ga., with connecting lines from that place to Birmingham, Ala., Montgomery, Ala., and New Orleans, the shops and general offices of which are located at Macon; the Macon and Northern, from Macon to Athens, Ga., with division offices and general shops located at Macon.

Macon is also on the line of the Southern Railway from Atlanta to Brunswick, Ga., with division offices and shops located at Macon, and on the line of the Central of Georgia Railway, from Atlanta to Savannah, Ga., and owning and operating the Ocean Steamship Company, with a line of steamers from Savannah to New York. Macon is the headquarters of two divisions of the Central of Georgia Railway and of the general shops of the company.

The aggregate value of property in Bibb County is $16,427,686, of which $14,768,000 represents the value of property in the city of Macon.

There are located in the city of Macon 5 cotton mills, 3 iron foundries, 3 cotton compresses, 3 cornice-making establishments, 3 cotton-gin manufactories, 6 cotton-press manufactories, 2 large cotton-oil companies, 1 large fertilizer factory, 1 large candy and cracker factory, 1 large ice plant, 1 barrel factory, 1 harness-making establishment, 1 pants factory, 3 large lumber mills (including sash, door, and blind factories) and 4 flour and grist mills.

Macon has 8 banking establishments, with an aggregate capital, surplus, and undivided profits of $2,063,500.

There are 182 manufacturing establishments, representing a total investment of $5,076,005, giving employment to 263 salaried officials and clerks and 3,700 wage-earners, the amount paid in salaries being $272,138 and in wages $1,047,437. The value of the annual output of these manufacturing establishments is $6,495,767.

I would call especial attention to the notable growth in the population of the following counties in the western division of the southern district of Georgia:

Mr. Chairman, these are the claims of the people I have the honor to represent for fair, just, and liberal consideration at the hands of Congress in the matter of making provision for a suitable building in which to transact the business of the Government, and I feel assured that in the near future their demands will be adequately complied with.

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Chairman, in response to the remarks of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] I desire to submit two letters from the Treasury Department, which I ask may be now read by unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MERCER] asks unanimous consent that certain documents which he sends to the Clerk's desk may be read. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The documents are as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, February 28, 1902.

SIR: Referring further to the request dated the 12th instant, from your committee, for a report in connection with H. R. 10590, providing for the acquisition of additional land and the construction of an addition to the public building at Macon, Ga., and H. R. 11094, providing for the erection of a new public building on the present site, or upon a new site, I have the honor to advise you as follows:

An addition which it is thought will meet the requirements of the service at Macon can be constructed for $65,000. The previous estimate of the cost of contemplated extension was made in 1898, being $58,000; which amount was appropriated under date of March 3, 1899. Owing, however, to the rise in cost of building materials, it is estimated that the contemplated extension will cost $65,000, as indicated above.

In connection with H. R. 11094, providing for the erection of a new building, it is estimated that a building of four stories and basement, with a ground area of 8,000 square feet, will meet the requirements of the service at Macon. A building of the dimensions indicated, of fireproof construction, including heating apparatus, fireproof vaults, and approaches, can be constructed for $275,000, exclusive of additional land. In order to erect a new building on the present site it will be necessary to secure additional land, which it is estimated can be secured for $25,000. You are further advised that it is estimated that an entirely new site can be secured for $25,000.

Respectfully,

H. A. TAYLOR, Assistant Secretary.

The CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS,
House of Representatives.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, April 25, 1902.

SIR: Under date of February 28, 1902, this Department had the honor, in compliance with your request, to submit for your consideration a report and estimate in connection with H. R. 10590, providing for the acquisition of additional land and the construction of an addition to the public building at Macon, Ga., and H. R. 11094, providing for the erection of a new public building on the present site or upon a new site.

An item of $58,000 was provided by the act of Congress approved March 2, 1899, for the extension and enlargement of the present Federal building at Macon, Ga., and for the purchase of additional land for the site thereof, and in submitting the report above referred to this Department's estimates were based upon such an enlargement of the building as was contemplated at the time said appropriation was made, and included only sufficient money to cover the increased cost of building materials.

The Department has more carefully considered the matter of the proposed enlargement of said building, and in view of the rapid growth of the city and the increase in the volume of the Federal business which is transacted in said building, it is found that $125,000 will be required for additional land and for the erection of a suitable extension, including the necessary changes in the present building, which will necessitate an appropriation, in addition to the $58,000 heretofore provided, of $67,000.

Respectfully,

L. M. SHAW,
Secretary.

The CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS,
House of Representatives.

Mr. BARTLETT. As I understand it, that recommendation was for $125,000, whereas this bill carries only $72,000. That is the difference.

Mr. MERCER. Yes; the recommendation of the Treasury Department is that the total authorization should be $125,000. It seems that in the Fifty-fifth Congress legislation was had appropriating $58,000 for this purpose, and, owing to the rise of building material and the increase of expense in other ways connected with building material, the Treasurer was unable to execute the legislation authorized in the Fifty-fifth Congress.

Mr. BARTLETT. And they have not spent a dollar of that money, owing to the fact that it is absolutely insufficient.

Mr. MERCER. So I understand; and the Treasury Department sent an estimate to the committee, making certain recommendations supplemental to a former recommendation, after this bill had been introduced, too late for this item to be changed, providing that the total authorization should be $125,000, rather than $72,000, meaning an increase in this bill of authorization of $53,000.

Mr. Chairman, as no one else upon the floor has signified a desire to occupy the time, I ask unanimous consent that the committee do now rise, as if it had consumed the full three hours allotted for discussion upon this bill, and report the same back with a recommendation that the bill pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with a favorable recommendation, notwithstanding that the three hours of general debate has not yet elapsed, and as though it had elapsed. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GROSVENOR, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 14018) to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the bill has never been read in the committee or in the House, and I think it ought to be read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will please restate his point of order.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The bill has not been read in the committee or in the House, and I submit the bill ought to be read.

The SPEAKER. The bill has been partially read in committee, and unanimous consent has been given by the committee to report the same back.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. To dispense with the first reading in the committee?

The SPEAKER. That was in the report.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. No, sir; the committee dispensed with the first reading of the bill in committee by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can demand the third reading of the bill, if he desires, after the bill has been engrossed and ordered to a third reading.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I do not demand the reading of the engrossed copy at all, but I simply make the point that the bill itself ought to be once read, for mere form, at any rate, before it is passed.

The SPEAKER. That has been dispensed with by unanimous consent given by the committee. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

The SPEAKER. The third reading of the bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I did not hear the ruling of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overruled the point of order.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Then the bill is to be passed without any reading at all?

The SPEAKER. The reading of the bill can be demanded in full now if the gentleman desires.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I submit it is very unusual——

The SPEAKER. But the committee gives unanimous consent for the course pursued, and the order itself——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Unanimous consent was given to dispense with the first reading of the bill in the committee, which is usual, but there has not been any consent given to dispense with the reading of the bill at all.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. We have all read the bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I have never seen a bill of this magnitude passed without it once being read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will please suspend. The Clerk will read the first ruling found on page 647 of the Manual.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill which has been read in Committee of the Whole and reported favorably therefrom is not read in full again when acted upon by the House.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. That is all right, but the bill has not been read in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman knows very well as a parliamentary——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. But, Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman suspend a moment? The gentleman knows very well that the Chair has to assume that the bill has been read, and it comes here by unanimous consent.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I have not made myself understood to the Chair, with all due respect, I think. When we go into Committee of the Whole on the bill, the first motion usually is—or the first request—to dispense with the first reading of the bill; otherwise it would be read in full. Now, that was done. Then in Committee of the Whole it is usual to read the bill under the five-minute rule, and after that, the bill having been read in committee, the rule applies that it is not necessary that the bill should be again read, because it has been read under the five-minute rule in Committee of the Whole. But, Mr. Speaker, that has not been done——

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, there are two answers——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I am not making a captious objection. It is unusual——

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. It is unusual to pass a bill of this magnitude without reading it in the House of Representatives or in committee. Now, it has not been read in either place, and the unanimous consent that was given in Committee of the Whole was that which is usually given to dispense with the first reading, because there always follows a reading of the bill under the five-minute rule. But that was not done because of the special rule. Now we are called upon to pass a bill carrying this amount that never has been read in the House nor in committee.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, there are two answers to the point of order made by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The first is that the time for him to have made this point of order, if it was available, was before the committee rose and reported the bill back to the House. Then a point of order could have been made that it was not in order for the committee to rise and report the bill back, because it had not been read under the five-minute rule. That objection, however, would have been met by the order itself, which cut off the reading of the bill under the five-minute rule, and which binds the House to the action of the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. There is not the slightest difficulty about the situation, as the Chair views it. The Chair is bound to assume that every necessary step has been taken in the Committee of the Whole, including the reading of the bill. The gentleman from Tennessee knows very well that the reading under the five-minute rule is not one of the readings referred to in the rule, but is merely a matter of convenience for the members in case they wish to offer amendments. The rule adopted by the House makes that unnecessary, and the bill comes to the House with every presumption in favor of all having been done that is required to be done by the rules of the House of Representatives, and the House has passed the bill to its engrossment and third reading.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. If I may be heard——

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman now desires to have the bill read in full, the Chair sees no objection to ordering it to be done. The rule requires it to be done if the demand is made. Otherwise, it will be done by its title.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Of course I could demand the reading of the engrossed copy, but I have no desire or inclination to take the time to do that. I would have that right under the rule unquestionably to have the engrossed bill read, but I say I am not making a captious objection. My objection was one that, I think, went to the merits of the proposition, and that is, that the bill should have been once read, either in Committee of the Whole or in the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair assumes that that was done if it was necessary. The Chair does not have the record of the committee before him. The question is on the third reading of the bill, which, in the absence of a demand for the reading of the engrossed bill in full, will be by title.

The bill was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question being taken on the passage of the bill, the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused, 9 members (not a sufficient number) rising in support of the demand therefor.

Accordingly the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. MERCER, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

SECOND CONFERENCE OF AMERICAN STATES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President; which, with the accompanying documents, was ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication from the Secretary of State, submitting the report, with accompanying papers, of the delegates of the United States to the second conference of American States held at the City of Mexico from October 22, 1901, to January 22, 1902.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE, April 29, 1902.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

On motion of Mr. WADSWORTH, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 13895) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, with Mr. POWERS of Maine in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union on the bill H. R. 13895, the Agritural appropriation bill. The pending question is the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts, which the Clerk will now report.

In line 6, page 24, after the word "direct," insert:

"Provided, That the relative proportion of vegetable, flower, and other seeds allotted to any district shall be determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, in accordance with the written request of the Senator, Representative, or Delegate entitled to the same, filed with him at least sixty days prior to the time of advertisement for the purchase of such seeds: Provided, however, That the total cost of the seeds furnished under such written request shall not exceed the cost of the seeds that would otherwise be allotted to such Senator, Representative, or Delegate in Congress; nor shall the allotment of flower seeds of any other district be thereby curtailed."

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is one which several years ago passed this House, but was rejected in the Senate. The amendment was also offered in the last Congress on this appropriation bill, but, as I remember it, it went out on a point of order. I understand that no point of order has been raised against it on this bill. It is a proper amendment. If seed distribution at the expense of the Government is to be continued, there ought to be some judgment and reason in the manner of the distribution. It is perfectly absurd, as gentlemen will concede, no doubt, that a great lot of agricultural seeds, vegetable and farming seeds, shall be sent to members representing city districts.

On the other hand, the number of flower-seed packages that are given to those representing the city and suburban districts is out of all proportion to the demands of their districts. If this appropriation is to be continued, it ought to be so arranged that the members who represent farming districts can have farming seeds—in other words, vegetable and garden seeds—while those who represent city and suburban districts should be excused from the distribution of garden and vegetable seeds, and should be given flower seeds. The object of this amendment is to permit the Secretary of Agriculture, upon the request of Members and Senators, to make such selection of seeds as will meet the needs of their individual districts. Now, I understand that the Secretary of Agriculture——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Do I understand that the gentleman's amendment excludes the country people from having flower seed?

Mr. BROMWELL. No; it does not cut any member off from getting his full quota of flower seeds as he does now. The only thing it does is to permit the city member to obtain flower seeds instead of vegetable seeds.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Why not give him flower seeds as a right and not give him any garden seed at all?

Mr. BROMWELL. The probability is that the city member would not want any vegetable seeds.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That is just exactly what I am saying.

Mr. BROMWELL. If this amendment is agreed to the city member will be able to get flower seeds.

Mr. WACHTER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BROMWELL. Certainly.

Mr. WACHTER. Would that be at the option of the city member?

Mr. BROMWELL. That will be at the option of the city member.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I would suggest to the gentleman that I assume that the Secretary of Agriculture has the right and has the power conferred in this amendment, and it is therefore superfluous.

Mr. BROMWELL. I do not know whether he has the power or not.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. He is willing to do this.

Mr. BROMWELL. But I do know the fact that in the past the Secretary of Agriculture has felt constrained to give each member the same number of vegetable seeds and flower seeds.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. But I understand the gentleman from Massachusetts, who offered this amendment, has a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture proposing to do just what this amendment does.

Mr. BROMWELL. I was going to add, if the gentleman had not made that statement, that I also have had a statement from the gentleman in charge of the seed division of the Agricultural Department, in which he said that arrangements will hereafter be made by which a member can express his preference and get the seeds from the Department possibly without the legislation in this bill, and secure the variety of seeds that he desires.

I want to say, Mr. Chairman—and it may be the last opportunity that I will have—that the present Secretary of Agriculture, it seems to me, has grown with the needs of the service of his Department, and is to-day perhaps the best-qualified man in the country for the position which he holds. The change which has been made since he has taken hold of this work of the Agricultural Department has been in the interest of agriculture in this country, and I believe that as we are so often criticising those departments, when an opportunity comes to pay a little tribute of praise for efficient and valuable service we ought not to hesitate to render it. [Applause.]

Seed distribution is a thing which I have opposed, I think consistently, ever since I have been a member of Congress. I did not believe in it, and I do not believe in it to-day; and yet there is no question at all but what the farmers, and, for that matter, the city people, are all as anxious to get their quota of flower and vegetable seeds as they are to get their share of publications that are issued from the different departments; and therefore, recognizing that this distribution will probably continue, I hope that whenever an opportunity comes for improving the service in this regard that the House will not hesitate to adopt it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, this amendment has for its object just what an amendment had which was offered at the last session of Congress. I objected to the amendment at that time, for reasons which do not exist upon the face of the present amendment. The amendment now is in such shape that I think there can be no legitimate objection to it on the part of members who represent the country districts, because the amendment itself provides that such members as designate flower seed instead of vegetable seed shall not be permitted to get a larger money value of seeds than the country members get, or which they themselves otherwise would get.

The amendment furthermore provides that the number or amount of flower seeds gotten by other members shall not be curtailed because of the selection of flower seeds instead of vegetable seeds by other members. I merely want to say that I see no objection to the amendment.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, since introducing the amendment under discussion, I have received a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, in which he states that if this amendment is adopted and becomes a law, he feels that it will seriously interfere with the securing of proper seeds, for the reason that some of these contracts have to be made one and two years in advance.

The Secretary also states in his letter, which I shall later send to the desk and ask to have read, that arrangements have been made, and will be hereafter made, to provide city members with such amount of flower seeds as their districts will require, and that hereafter there will be no trouble whatever on the part of city members. I ask that this letter be read in my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusettes asks unanimous consent that the letter be read in his time. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., April 29, 1902.

MY DEAR SIR: I notice from the proceedings in the House yesterday that you introduced an amendment providing that the relative proportion of vegetable, flower, and other seeds allotted to any district shall be determined by the Secretary of Agriculture in accordance with the written request of the Senator, Representative, or Delegate entitled to the same, filed with him at least sixty days prior to the time of the advertisement for the purchase of such seeds.

Evidently the object of this amendment is to give city members flower seeds and country members vegetable seeds, if they so desire. Owing to the enormous quantity of seed which now has to be purchased I feel certain that any clause of this kind would seriously interfere with securing proper seed, as it now happens that quite a number of our contracts for seed have to be made at least a year and sometimes two years in advance. All contracts for seed for next year have already been made; in fact, they had to be made in order to secure the seed at all, as it would not have been practicable to await the enactment of the bill by Congress.

Of course, the contracts are subject to appropriations made by Congress. As a matter of fact, however, this very point that you make has been considered fully this year by the Chief of the Bureau of Plant Industry, who is in charge of this work. Arrangements have been made to furnish city members flower seed if they so elect, so that I am sure there will be no difficulty in securing flower seed in the future for city constituencies. The quantity of flower seed given to each member has also been increased and other improvements in the seed distribution made, which will bring it back to its original intent.

In view of these facts I trust that you will not find it necessary to push the amendment you have introduced.

Very truly, yours, JAMES WILSON,
Secretary.

Hon. E. W. ROBERTS,
House of Representatives.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, I had no intention of impeding or embarrassing the Department of Agriculture when I offered the amendment yesterday. In view of the statement of the Secretary that the amendment, if adopted, might embarrass the Department, in view of his further statement that arrangements have been made whereby city members will secure flower seeds the same as if the amendment had been adopted, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment.

Insert after the word "indicated," in line 6, page 25, the following: "And upon request to the Secretary by a Representative or Delegate there shall be placed in each envelope or wrapper such number of small packages of seeds of his quota as he may designate.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Chairman, the object of this amendment is this: At the present time five small packages are placed in an envelope or wrapper and that wrapper is subject to one frank. Now, some of us desire to send more than one of these wrappers or envelopes to a constituent. For instance, I have been sending this session of Congress four to each constituent to whom I send seeds at all. It causes the necessity of directing four different packages, whereas simply upon request made to the Secretary the four packages could be inclosed in the one wrapper, and that would obviate the difficulty and save an immense amount of labor. In other words, in my case it would save three-quarters of the time in directing seeds.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Does not the gentleman think that might encourage other constituents to send for the same amount of seeds and thus embarrass the member?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; I do not think they understand how many packages are placed in a wrapper. They do not know anything about the distribution of the seeds. A great many envelopes that are directed to me are directed in care of the Agricultural Department. You will find that this will save an immense amount of labor in the direction of packages of seeds. In cases where you want to send two it would save one-half, and when you want to send three it will save two-thirds. It seems to me, in view of that fact, and that it is no more trouble to the Department, that this amendment ought to be adopted.

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Chairman, I want to make a suggestion that to my mind is a much better way to get around the difficulty the gentleman speaks of. I have suggested this to Mr. Galloway, of the Agricultural Department, and I think the plan will be adopted. All of us have calls for special kinds of seeds, and the party writes the names of the seed he wants. The seed packages are put up at present and sealed, having five small packages of seed with the name stamped thereon on the outside of the wrapper. When the member gets the request from his constituent it becomes necessary frequently to tear open a great number of these packages and take out the seed packages and rewrap them and mail them.

I have suggested to Mr. Galloway that if a certain proportion of each member's quota could be furnished to him in bulk, with the outside wrapper unsealed, so that he could take the inside packages of seeds and select those called for and put as many as he chooses in the outside wrapper and seal it and mail it, it would be a great convenience for the members and it would accomplish the very purpose to which the gentleman from Colorado speaks. At the same time it would prevent a great deal of waste of inside packages by reason of the fact that frequently a party will ask for one or two of the kinds of seeds inclosed and would not want the other three. According to the plan I have suggested the member can select the two he wants and retain the three to send to some other constituent.

Mr. SHAFROTH. What did Mr. Galloway say?

Mr. BROMWELL. He said he thought there was no doubt that my suggestion could be complied with.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I have no doubt that would be an improvement on the present condition, but at the same time it does not quite meet the condition that arises in my case, where I send all the seeds that are in two or three packages to one constituent. Each one of those packages under the present system must be addressed, but if this amendment be adopted all we have to do is to put the 10 small packages into 1 envelope, so that in directing there will be only half as much work as in directing 2 envelopes each containing 5 packages. There would thus be considerable saving of labor. Under the present system, if you want to send a constituent 15 small packages, you have to write 3 addresses.

Mr. BROMWELL. Oh, no; not under the plan I propose. I would take the entire 15 and put them in one wrapper.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not receive one request out of a hundred asking for any particular kind of flower seed or vegetable seed; consequently I send the writers the regular allotment.

Mr. BROMWELL. Nine-tenths of those sending requests to me specify the seeds that they want.

Mr. SHAFROTH. As to nine-tenths of the applications sent to me there is no request, but simply the names. Now, if the seeds are put in such packages as I propose, one-half or three-fourths of the labor in directing the packages to constituents is saved.

Mr. VANDIVER. Does not my friend think that the work of reassorting would increase the labor much more than would be saved by his plan?

Mr. SHAFROTH. My plan does not involve reassorting at all.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, the suggestion of my colleague [Mr. BROMWELL] does not go far enough to meet the emergency of this occasion. In order that we may become adept and competent distributers of garden seed under that system, the Government ought to furnish a convenient number of tin cans, about the size, perhaps, of tubs, with the proper label upon each and a little tin scoop with each one, so that the member of Congress, in his leisure hours—having nothing else to do—may, aided by his clerk, to read the prescription of the constituent [laughter], shovel the contents properly into the little bags, and send them off.

I am content to do the best I can to distribute the garden seeds that come to me. I take great pains to send the flower seeds that come in my quota to those that I think will appreciate them. As a rule, they are sent to the daughters of farmers or to persons residing in the little hamlets of my district, not to the cities, where the people have hothouses and other facilities for promoting the development of the flora of the country.

Now, I am willing to do all that; but I draw the line on the subject of packing garden seeds into parcels to suit the demands of my constituents. More than one-half of the letters I get start out with a catalogue of the seeds that the writer wants. If such an amendment as now suggested should be put upon this bill, I should be obliged to have a number of cans or tubs, or whatever they might be, larger than any room I can afford to pay for at my hotel.

Mr. VANDIVER. Does not the gentleman from Ohio think that if this business of distributing seeds is to go on in competition with all the corner groceries of the country, so as to supply all the various kinds of seeds to each person who may desire them, it will become advisable and necessary that we furnish members with additional clerks and furnish the Agricultural Department with an additional supply of money—enough to buy seeds for all the people throughout the whole country? I do not see where the limit is to be fixed if we keep on with this business.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I know where I would fix the limit. I would not make the matter any worse than it is now.

Mr. WANGER. The gentleman says he does not want this matter to become "worse." Does he regard it as being bad now?

Mr. GROSVENOR. It is somewhat of a burden, but I am willing to bear my share of "the white man's burden" and the black man's burden, so far as the matter has now extended; but I am not willing, if I can help myself, to go into the business of packing assorted garden seeds into the appropriate parcels.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I am reluctant to oppose anything offered by my friend from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH], but I think that this amendment ought not to pass. It would save very little labor to members of the House. Already they are furnished with slips. After this their franks will be printed upon the slips. It is very little trouble to direct three slips instead of one, or two instead of one; and although the plan suggested might save a little labor to the member, it would put much more labor on the Agricultural Department, because then the Department, instead of dealing with a uniform package, would have to deal with a large number of packages of various sizes, in accordance with the whims of members or their constituents. I do not think we ought to undertake to save a small amount of labor to ourselves at the expense of putting a great deal of labor upon the Department.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. There is another reason, it seems to me, why this amendment should be adopted. It is not only a saving to the members but it is also a saving in the handling of these packages through the Post-Office Department. Each particular package causes as much trouble to be handled, if it is small or double the size, and consequently there will be some saving in that line, but the Department will not be put to much trouble because of the fact that there is not more than one member out of four who will want his seed in different size packages than the regular size of five small packages in a wrapper, and to those who do want them, and particularly to those who have some city constituents, it seems to me that there would be a great saving in the distribution of these packages of seeds if 20 small packages or 10 small packages could be sent in one envelope to one address instead of by two or three or four addresses.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say that if the members will go to Dr. Galloway, I have not the least doubt but he will comply with any reasonable request. Such an amendment as this is entirely unnecessary.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Chairman, before the question is taken I ask that the amendment be again read by the Clerk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the amendment be again read. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and the Clerk again read the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Investigating production of domestic sugar: For all expenses, including the employment of labor in the city of Washington or elsewhere, necessary to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to continue inquiry and ascertain the progress made in the production of domestic sugar from beets and sorghum, including the area of available lands thereto by irrigation or otherwise, and to investigate all other matters concerning the same, $5,000: Provided, That all appropriations herein or hereafter made for the benefit of the Bureau of Plant Industry, and to be expended under the general direction of the Chief of that Bureau, shall be considered interchangeable, and may be used for the work of any of the several branches and offices thereof as the necessities of the service may, in the judgment of the Secretary of Agriculture, demand; and the clerks, laborers, and others appointed to or employed in any particular office or branch of that Bureau may be detailed to perform service in any other office or branch thereof.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Let me make an amendment first.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman makes his amendment it will be too late for me to make my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman state his point of order?

Mr. CANNON. I make the point of order upon all of the proviso from line 10 to line 20, inclusive, commencing with the word "Provided," and particularly do I make the point of order upon the word "hereafter," in line 11, page 26. I call the attention of the Chair and of the committee as well to the fact that this changes existing law. They are not content with putting in this general consolidation provision in this bill, but they change the law and say that hereafter all appropriations in detail, every dollar of it, seeds and everything else—hearken, my fellow-statesmen [laughter]—by means of this provision (I was going to say surreptitious provision), artfully couched in these words, this dominating committee proposes to make available every dollar that is appropriated for our seeds to employ clerks with. [Laughter.]

Now, is that to be submitted to for a holy minute? That is just what it does. Six hundred and one thousand seven hundred and eighty dollars in amount, commencing on page 14, Bureau of Plant Industry, covering every page up to and including 26, covering all appropriations for seeds and everything else by this surreptitious proviso, is all lumped, in the discretion of the Secretary, now and hereafter, into one sum, and made available for the appointment of clerks or laborers or employees. We can not stand it, and in the interests of the horny-handed sons of toil in this House [laughter], and I am one of them, I rise and invoke the point of order upon this whole provision.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, the point of order is undoubtedly well taken, and I will say further that I was on my feet to ask that that proviso be stricken out. We put it in the bill, I think, under misapprehension. It is undoubtedly not good legislation, and I hope the committee will strike it out, but not on a point of order, but on its merits.

Mr. CANNON. Now, just a word in reply. I am still not content. I know I could not overthrow my genial friend from Connecticut [Mr. HENRY] and other gentlemen alone, and as long as this is written in the bill and in the name of the farmer, I am afraid my friend from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] and myself together could not knock this out, bad as it is, and therefore I must adhere to my point of order.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Well, the end justifies the means. It is immaterial which way it goes out. If it goes out on a point of order, I am content, although I would rather have it put out on its merits.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point or order.

Mr. WADSWORTH. One moment, before the Clerk reads. I offer the following amendment:

In line 8, after the word "lands," insert the word "adapted."

It is a mere clerical amendment, and I ask unanimous consent that it be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the bill will be so amended.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total for Bureau of Plant Industry, $601,780.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

"That it shall be unlawful for any transportation company, after July 1, 1902, to offer for entry at any port in the United States, any trees, plants, shrubs, vines, grafts, cuttings, and buds, commonly known as nursery stock, unless accompanied by a certificate of inspection by a qualified expert of the country from which the exportation was made, officially appointed by the government thereof, certifying that the contents have been carefully examined and found apparently free from all insect and fungous or other disease dangerously injurious to nursery stock.

"In case any nursery goods are offered for entry at any port of the United States without said certificate, as herein prescribed, it shall be the duty of the collector immediately to notify the Secretary of Agriculture, who shall arrange for inspection to be made at the expense of the importer, who shall pay therefor a fee to be fixed by the Secretary of Agriculture, and said collector shall not allow them to pass within the jurisdiction of the United States until a satisfactory certificate of inspection has been received. And after the aforesaid date, July 1, 1902, all nursery stock imported in accordance with the aforesaid regulations shall be free from all further inspection, quarantine, or restriction in interstate commerce: Provided, however, That the Secretary of Agriculture may, in his discretion, order specific examinations, and may also, at any time, relieve such articles from inspection by a specific order.

"SEC. 2. That whenever it shall appear to the Secretary of Agriculture that any nursery stock or variety of fruit grown in an infested district outside of the United States is being, or is about to be, imported into the United States, and such nursery stock or variety of fruit is infested by any seriously injurious insect or disease, which insect or disease is liable to become established in the United States and seriously affect any such nursery stock or variety of fruit grown therein, he shall have authority to quarantine against any such importations and prevent the same until such time as it may appear to him that any such insect or disease has become exterminated in the country or district from which such fruit or nursery stock is being, or is about to be, imported, when he may withdraw the quarantine, and this shall operate to relieve all such nursery stock or fruit from such further quarantine or restriction as is provided for in this section so long as the conditions of freedom from seriously injurious insects or disease shall continue.

"SEC. 3. That the Secretary of Agriculture may designate, in each State and Territory and in the District of Columbia, qualified experts, with authority to examine all nursery stock about to be transported from one State or Territory or the District of Columbia into another State or Territory or the District of Columbia, and issue their certificate stating the results of such examinations.

"The Secretary may publish rules and regulations prescribing the terms and conditions under which such experts may act. These examinations shall be made, so far as possible, between June 1 and September 1 of each year, in the manner prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture; and if such nursery stock is found to be apparently free from dangerously injurious insects or diseases, the certificate of the authorized expert making such examination and finding shall be issued to the owner or owners of such nursery stock, a copy of which certificate shall be attached to and accompany each carload, box, bale, or package, and when so attached and accompanying shall operate to release all such nursery stock from further inspection, quarantine, or restriction in interstate commerce.

"SEC. 4. That it shall be unlawful for any person, persons, or corporation to deliver to any other person, persons, or corporation, or to the postal service of the United States (except for scientific purposes by permission of the Secretary of Agriculture), for transportation from one State or Territory or the District of Columbia to any other State or Territory or the District of Columbia, or for exportation to any foreign country, any trees, plants, shrubs, vines, or other nursery stock which have not been examined in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of this act, or which, on said examination, have been declared by the inspector to be infested with dangerously injurious insects or diseases. Any person, persons, firm, or corporation who shall forge, counterfeit, or knowingly alter, deface, or destroy any certificate or copy thereof, as provided for in this act and in the regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture, or shall in any way violate the provisions of this act, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on a conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not to exceed $500 nor less than $200, or by imprisonment not to exceed one year, or both, at the discretion of the court.

"SEC. 5. That the rules and regulations herein provided for shall be promulgated on or before the 1st day of July in each year.

"SEC. 6. That the sum of $50,000, to be available on the 1st day of May, 1902, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to carry into effect the provisions of this act.

"SEC. 7. That this act shall take effect on and after the 30th day of June, 1902.

"SEC. 8. That the provisions of this act shall not apply in interstate commerce to florists' greenhouse trees, shrubs, plants, and bulbs, commonly known as florists' stock."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I must certainly reserve the point of order on this amendment until I can look a little further. On a hasty reading of it I think I shall have to make the point of order that it is new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. CANNON. Well, if there is any necessity for it, although my friend requests me for a moment to reserve the point of order. I certainly have no objection to doing that.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I offered this amendment, which is the same as House bill 10999, to provide rules and regulations governing the importation of trees, plants, shrubs, vines, grafts, cuttings, and buds, commonly known as nursery stock, and fruits into the United States, and rules and regulations for the inspection of trees, plants, shrubs, vines, grafts, cuttings, and buds, commonly known as nursery stock, grown within the United States, which become subjects of interstate commerce or exportation. This bill has been before Congress for a number of years.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Three years.

Mr. HAUGEN. The bill was submitted to the nurserymen of this country, to the Agricultural Department, and the scientific men in the Department before it was introduced in this Congress, and as far as I know it meets with the approval of all concerned. The legislation is very much desired by all parts of the country, especially, I think, by the people of California.

I have been in correspondence with a number of people from different parts of the country, California and New York more especially, and so far as I know this legislation is much desired by all interested in this business. I hope that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] will not raise the point of order. I should like to have the Clerk read the report that accompanies the bill, for the information of the committee, before the point of order is ruled upon.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman ask that it be read in his time?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the report which he sends to the Clerk's desk be read in his time. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk began the reading of the report.

The CHAIRMAN (during the reading). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. I ask unanimous consent to have the report printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the report which the Clerk has been reading be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The report is as follows:

The Committee on Agriculture, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10999) to provide rules and regulations governing the importation of trees, plants, shrubs, vines, grafts, cuttings, and buds, commonly known as nursery stock and fruits, into the United States, and rules and regulations for the inspection of trees, plants, shrubs, vines, grafts, cuttings, and buds, commonly known as nursery stock, grown within the United States, which become subjects of interstate commerce or exportation, report the same to the House with the unanimous recommendation that it do pass.

The necessity of such legislation is of grave importance for the protection of our agricultural and horticultural interests. Scientific men and nurserymen have recommended it for years, and the demand for it upon the part of the people has become so strong that it should be deferred no longer. The pending bill has been indorsed by representatives of entomologists and vegetable pathologists, as well as by nurserymen and fruit growers. The committee is not advised of any opposition to this bill from any quarter.

It is an acknowledged fact that fully one-half of the principal injurious insects now in the United States have been introduced from foreign countries. No effort on the part of the General Government has ever been made to prohibit the entrance of such pests.

The State of California has alone established a horticultural quarantine at the port of San Francisco, but this is the only one of our great ports which is so protected. At San Francisco during the past year 122 steamships and sailing vessels arrived carrying trees, plants, and fruits from Japan, Ceylon, Australia, New Zealand, South Sea Islands, Central America, Mexico, and British Columbia. The quarantine officer destroyed over 3,000 trees and plants infested with insects new to California. Other stock was thoroughly fumigated with hydrocyanic-acid gas.

The estimated annual damage to agricultural and horticultural interests of this country from the attacks of injurious insects amounts to $300,000,000; and it is safe to say that, at a low estimate, at least one-half of this damage is done by imported insects.

As indicated in a later paragraph, a number of foreign countries have quarantined against American plants and fruits, but no such quarantine exists in this country, although the necessity of it, from the facts just mentioned, is obvious.

There exists in Europe, especially in south Europe, and in the countries beyond the Pacific, with which we are just entering into greatly enlarged commercial relations, many insects noted as pests which are liable at any time to make their appearance in this country under existing conditions.

It has been so general an experience as to make it practically a hard-and-fast rule that foreign insects introduced into this country thrive in a much greater degree than in their own native homes.

From the West Indies and from Mexico we are also in danger. For example, there exists in Mexico a maggot which infests oranges and lemons, known as Morellos fruit worm, which has not yet become established in this country. It occurs in all parts of Mexico and Central America, except possibly the State of Sonora in Mexico, and Mexican oranges for the United States have come across our borders and taken their place in our markets during the months of November and December. Most of these oranges have previously been shipped to Northern markets, where there is no danger of an orange pest establishing itself. Of late, however, they have been carried into California, and the extensive citrus industry of that State is in danger. Within the past two months a cargo of Mexican oranges, riddled with this maggot, was stopped at the port of San Francisco, and the oranges were burned under the operation of the State quarantine law.

Louisiana and Florida are not protected in the same way, however, and the danger is a real one. Even in the case of the Mexican oranges shipped to the Northern and Middle States, the empty cars are frequently carried back to California, and perhaps to other orange-growing regions, and thus becoming an additional source of danger.

The success of the State quarantine at the port of San Francisco indicates what may be done and what should be done at other ports of entry of the country by national legislation. It should be said, however, that while the quarantine at San Francisco protects California, it does not protect the rest of the country, because the State officers have jurisdiction over shipments intended for California.

It is safe to say that had such a quarantine service been in operation at all the principal ports of the United States during the past thirty years, the cost of its operation would have compared with the actual saving to the agricultural and horticultural interests of this country as 1 to 100, and it is equally safe to say that such a service in the future would result with equal, and probably, on account of the increased foreign trade, with greater relative benefit to this country.

A seriously destructive insect known as the San Jose scale, introduced a number of years ago into California, possibly from Japan, has been and is being scattered over our country in interstate commerce.

This scale is the worst insect enemy to orchard trees which this country has ever known. Since its accidental introduction into the Eastern States it has spread or has been carried into almost every State in which the orchard industry is a feature. It has done its greatest damage in the States of Maryland, Virginia, New Jersey, Ohio, Georgia, Indiana, and Illinois. It also occurs in Canada, and has been the cause of an absolute prohibition against the introduction of American trees and plants on the part of Canada, Germany, Austria-Hungary, France, Switzerland, Turkey, and Cape Colony, and of fruits as well on the part of Germany.

The worst aspect of this danger is that the insect itself is so extremely minute that it is carried in shipments of trees and plants, and obtains a foothold in many places, and entirely escapes the attention of the uninstructed eye until after it may have done irreparable damage and become thoroughly established and escaped from this as a center of destruction to the regions round about.

In spite of its minute size, it multiplies with such rapidity as to cover the bark of young trees and sap their vitality to such an extent that the trees are killed in the course of two or three years.

For example, in Maryland a peach orchard of 20,000 trees was completely destroyed in two years.

An outbreak occurred on Catawba Island, Ohio, which necessitated the destruction of over 3,000 bearing peach trees and the expensive treatment of an additional area of 1,000 acres.

The peach and plum interests of Georgia are very great. In one county alone the orchards are estimated to be worth over $5,000,000. In certain portions of the State the trees have become infested by the scale to such an extent that within the past few weeks one orchard of 3,000 trees has been condemned and the trees burned. In another orchard 1,000 trees have been condemned and burned the present winter. Thus the orchard interests of this State are threatened, perhaps, with extinction.

In North Carolina a valuable orchard of 60,000 large peach trees was cut down, and the trees were burned the past autumn.

Instances similar to these might be multiplied.

The danger from this insect is greater in this country than in any other country on account of the custom among nurserymen and orchardists of very extended interstate commerce. Nursery stock is bought in small and large quantities in different States and is shipped by freight, express, or by mail to other States, thus spreading the infestation.

The chief danger to the nursery interests of the country is that the different States have passed diverse laws, many of them very drastic in character, practically prohibitory, so that an honest nurseryman is unable to send clean nursery stock into many of the States, while a dishonest man, or a careless one, may freely send infested stock to other States which have not yet protected themselves by State laws. These difficulties can only be reached by a law governing interstate commerce, such as is now proposed.

Moreover, aside from the actual damage which the insect has done in nurseries, the fact becoming known that a nursery has become infested with a scale has, in many cases, operated so severely as to entirely destroy the reputation and credit of the firm.

A single extensive nursery located in the Middle West was forced into bankruptcy on account of having become infested by this pest, which not only necessitated the destruction of many thousand trees, but practically put a stop to further sales of noninfested stock. A loss of $100,000 was thus entailed.

From what has just been said the necessity for a uniform national law becomes apparent. The different requirements of State laws and the entire lack of any law in certain States has produced a condition intolerable to the nurseryman and of great danger to the orchardist.

For example, a man shipping trees into Maryland requires one form of certificate; shipping into Virginia he requires yet another form under present regulations; while into other States, as Ohio, no form of certificate is required, thus making it the dumping ground for infested stock from all districts.

Moreover, in New York the law prohibits sending infested stock outside the State, but does not prohibit its entrance.

Such incongruities as these in State laws indicate most strongly the necessity for a uniform national law.

In the opinion of the committee this bill is a step in the right direction, and is worthy of early and favorable consideration.

The Department of Agriculture has for some time been collecting, with the assistance of the Department of State, the full texts of the regulations of those foreign governments which have, through fear of the introduction of San Jose scale, adopted measures prohibiting the importation of American plants and fruits or requiring inspection before admission. However, the series is not yet perfectly complete. The digests have been made with care.

Austria-Hungary.—Prohibits (decree of April 20, 1898) importation from America of living plants, grafts and layers, and fresh plant refuse of every kind, as well as the barrels, boxes, and other coverings in which such goods or refuse may be packed, and fresh fruit and the refuse of fresh fruit, as well as the packings which may cover the same, when examination on frontier shall prove presence of San Jose scale. Admission limited to Bodenbach-Tetschen, Trieste, and Fiume. Also prohibits transit of such goods through the Empire.

Belgium.—Importation and transit of fresh fruits, living plants, and fresh parts of plants sent from the United States can take place only by ports of Antwerp, Ghent, and Ostende, upon production of a certificate from competent authority attesting that products are not contaminated by San Jose scale. If not accompanied by certificate, products can not be delivered until inspected, and, if not exempt, must be destroyed with packings; cost of all service at expense of importer. Order goes into effect March 15, 1899. Does not apply to shipments in direct transit by railway under supervision of customs authorities.

British Columbia.—Rules and regulations, published June 25, 1897 (under authority of "Horticultural board act, 1894"), provide that all importers of nursery stock, trees, plants, or fruit must give notice upon arrival, and before removal from wharf or station, to a member of the board or to the inspector of fruit pests, who shall inspect the same and, if clean, issue a certificate which shall be good for three months, unless revoked by further inspection. Nursery stock found to be infected shall be disinfected or destroyed. Fruit found to be infected shall be destroyed or reshipped.

Canada.—Prohibits (San Jose scale act, 18th March, 1898) importations of nursery stock from United States, Australia, Japan, and Hawaii. Stock so imported to be destroyed and importer liable to penalty prescribed by section 6 of customs tariff ($200 for each offense).

Exempts:

1. Greenhouse plants, with the exception of roses. (Amended April 25, 1900, by striking out the words "with the exception of roses" after words "Greenhouse plants.")
2. Herbaceous perennials.
3. Herbaceous bedding plants.
4. All conifers.
5. Bulbs and tubers.

Amended (April 7, 1900) so as to authorize importations from April 7 to May 15, through customs ports of St. John, N. B.; St. Johns, Quebec; Niagara Falls and Windsor, Ontario, and Winnipeg, Manitoba, only, where they will be thoroughly fumigated with hydrocyanic-acid gas.

Cape of Good Hope.—Regulations published March 25, 1896, under authority of act No. 9, dated 1876, prohibits importation of any stone-fruit tree, or any fruit, scion, cutting, graft, root, or seed, the growth or produce thereof, from the United States, and anyone importing such article as aforesaid shall be subject to a fine not exceeding £100 sterling or six months' imprisonment, and, in addition, the articles will be destroyed.

Note.—Consul-General Stowe states (February 7, 1900) that proposal is under consideration to relax above as regards States where neither "peach yellows" nor "peach rosette" exists.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, the bill which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] proposes as an amendment to the Agricultural appropriation bill simply provides for the inspection of nursery stock destined for interstate and foreign commerce. It is exactly in line with the inspection now provided for meats and lately provided, in the oleomargarine bill, for process and renovated butter. It probably is subject to a point of order, but it affords a perfect example of how difficult it is to give powers to the Secretary of Agriculture, except on the appropriation bills. This bill has been reported favorably, without a dissenting vote in the committee, three years in succession by the Committee on Agriculture. As it carries an appropriation, it goes to the Union Calendar, and there each time it has slept. I simply call attention to this fact to show you how difficult it is to give the Secretary of Agriculture any powers unless they are granted on the appropriation bill.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, just a word. I am diffident, when I talk in earnest, about injecting points of order that cover material matters of legislation. I have great confidence in the respective committees of this House, especially where they have studied the questions presented. So that it is not in any captious spirit, by any manner of means, that I am thinking about interposing the point of order. I have read the bill in a hop, skip, and jump, and it seems to me to be very severe in its provisions and is liable in the hands of mischievous people to give very great trouble to the citizens. Take section 3:

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of Agriculture may designate, in each State and Territory and in the District of Columbia, qualified experts, with authority to examine all nursery stock about to be transported from one State or Territory or the District of Columbia into another State or Territory or the District of Columbia, and issue their certificate stating the results of such examinations.

Then take section 4:

SEC. 4. That it shall be unlawful for any person, persons, or corporation to deliver to any other person, persons, or corporation, or to the postal service of the United States (except for scientific purposes by permission of the Secretary of Agriculture), for transportation from one State or Territory or the District of Columbia to any other State or Territory or the District of Columbia, or for exportation to any foreign country, any trees, plants, shrubs, vines, or other nursery stock which have not been examined in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of this act, or which, on said examination, have been declared by the inspector to be infested with dangerously injurious insects or diseases.

That is, in accordance with the army of experts that would examine all the plants and trees and shrubs throughout the country, and ought to, costing God knows how much, whether one million, five million, or ten million dollars. Then here comes a penalty—a fine for violation:

Any person, persons, firm, or corporation who shall forge, counterfeit, or knowingly alter, deface, or destroy any certificate or copy thereof, as provided for in this act and in the regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture, or shall in any way violate the provisions of this act, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on a conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not to exceed $500 nor less than $100, or by imprisonment not to exceed one year, or both, at the discretion of the court.

Now, I am not in favor of these pests to nursery stock or trees or plants, but considering the way in which matters run, I am rather inclined to think it is absolutely my duty at this point, on a general appropriation bill, to interpose the point of order.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to state that in the Fifty-sixth Congress a bill somewhat similar to this was introduced in this House and referred to the Committee on Agriculture. Opposition arose to the bill and differences of opinion between the different interests in this country. When I was requested to introduce this bill in this Congress I submitted it to the different parties interested and suggested to them that they agree upon a bill, and told them that until they had agreed upon a bill that would meet the demands of the different interests involved I would absolutely refuse to take it up for consideration in my subcommittee.

This bill was submitted to the Secretary of Agriculture, and the scientific men in the Department, and representative men in the nursery and horticultural business of all parts of this country, representing every State in the Union. The bill as it now stands is agreed upon by those interests. It is possible that the bill may be open to amendment, although I am inclined to believe at this time if we pass the bill we should pass it as it is drawn, and if it should be inadequate to meet the demands it could be amended or further legislation could be had later.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. Not to discuss the point of order, but in line with what the gentleman has said, have you thought you were offering a bill as an amendment to the Agricultural appropriation bill, a bill that has sections and has provisions peculiar to it, where that amendment prescribes certain things shall be done according to section 3? If that goes into the Agricultural appropriation bill, that will mean section 3 of the general bill. The limitation that you prescribe of expenditures of money under this act will mean the general Agricultural appropriation bill. After this bill has been adopted, if this amendment is adopted it will make it apply to the whole bill.

Mr. HAUGEN. I fully recognize that it is subject to a point of order, and if the point is raised there is no use perfecting the amendment. If the point of order is not raised, I expect to amend the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is clearly of the opinion that while this bill is similar to the oleomargarine and other bills of that nature, this is new legislation, and subject to the point of order upon an appropriation bill, and therefore sustains the point raised by the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

Bureau of Forestry, salaries: One forester, who shall be Chief of Bureau, $3,500; 1 assistant forester, $2,500; 1 assistant forester, $1,800; 1 assistant forester, $2,000; 1 stenographer, $1,200; 1 field assistant, $1,500; 1 field assistant, $1,400; 1 field assistant, $1,200; 1 field assistant, $1,000; 1 field assistant, $720; 10 collaborators, at $300 each, $3,000; 1 clerk class 3, $1,600; 1 photographer, $1,200; 1 computer, $1,000; 3 clerks class 1, $3,600; 2 clerks, at $1,000 each, $2,000; 4 clerks, at $900 each, $3,600; 7 clerks, at $720 each, $5,040; in all, $37,860.

Mr. CANNON. I make the point of order on line 25, to the words "thirty-five hundred dollars," page 26.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is one of the increases recommended by the committee for scientists of the Bureau, and is subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York acknowledge that it is subject to the point of order?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes, sir. Now I ask unanimous consent to insert "$3,000" in place of "$3,500." That makes the salary the same as last year.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to make the change that he has just stated to the committee.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk change the total in accordance with the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the amendment? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

General expenses, Bureau of Forestry: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to experiment and to make and continue investigations and report on forestry, forest reserves, forest fires, and lumbering; to advise the owners of woodlands as to the proper care of the same; to seek, through investigations and the planting of native and foreign species, suitable trees for the treeless regions; to collect and distribute valuable economic forest tree seeds and plants; for the employment of local and special agents, clerks, assistants, and other labor required in practical forestry and in conducting experiments and investigations in the city of Washington and elsewhere, and for collating, digesting, reporting, illustrating; and printing the results of such experiments and investigations; for the purchase of all necessary supplies, apparatus, and office fixtures; for freight and express charges, and traveling and other necessary expenses, $245,000, of which sum not to exceed $6,000 may be used for rent, and $700 of the latter amount may be used in payment of rent for the months of March, April, May, and June, 1902. And the employees of the Bureau of Forestry outside of the city of Washington may hereafter, in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, without additional expense to the Government, be granted leaves of absence not to exceed fifteen days in any one year.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I wish the gentleman from New York would strike out the word "hereafter." I reserve the point of order. I do not want legislation on this. Let it apply to the current year.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Line 15?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have no objection to that, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the word "hereafter," in line 15, will be stricken out. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total for Bureau of Forestry, $282,860.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk may correct the total on line 20. It should be $282,360. The gentleman from Illinois suggests that I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk correct all the totals hereafter.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the Clerk correct all totals hereafter. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Bureau of Chemistry, salaries: One chemist, who shall be chief of bureau, $3,500; 1 assistant chemist, $2,500; 1 assistant chemist, $1,800; 1 assistant chemist, $1,600; 1 clerk class 2, $1,400; 2 clerks class 1, $2,400; in all, $13,200.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I must make the point of order on line 23, page 28, on $3,500. I suppose the gentleman wants $500 stricken out and let it stand at $3,000?

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is another scientist, Mr. Chairman, whose salary was recommended by the committee and is subject to the point of order. I ask unanimous consent that it be inserted at $3,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman moves to amend by striking out the words "five hundred." Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate the character of proposed food preservatives and coloring matters, to determine their relation to digestion and to health, and to establish the principles which should guide their use; to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate the character of the chemical and physical tests which are applied to American food products in foreign countries, and to inspect before shipment, when desired by the shippers or owners of these food products, American food products intended for countries where chemical and physical tests are required before said food products are allowed to be sold in the countries mentioned, and fo all necessary expenses connected with such inspection and studies of methods of analysis in foreign countries; to enable the Secretary of Agriculture, in collaboration with the Association of Official Agricultural Chemists, and such other experts as he may deem necessary, to establish standards of purity for food products and to determine what are regarded as adulterations therein, for the guidance of the officials of the various States and of the courts of justice; for the preparation of reports, the purchase of apparatus, chemicals, samples, and supplies required in conducting such investigations, the employment of local and special agents, clerks, assistants, and other labor required in conducting such experiments in the city of Washington and elsewhere, and in collating, digesting, and reporting the results of such experiments; for freight and express charges, and for traveling and other necessary expenses, and for the rent of building occupied by the Bureau of Chemistry.

Mr. CANNON. I make the point of order on page 31, from and including the word "to," on line 1, to and including the word "justice," in line 6. The gentleman from New York asks me to reserve the point of order. I will do so.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Now, Mr. Chairman, that clause was put in after hearings before the Committee on Agriculture of the different manufacturers of foods in various parts of the country It seems that the different chemists of the different States differ as to what constitutes an adulteration of food, and what constitutes poisons in food that would be injurious to health and what not be injurious, and the result is that the food product in one State is declared good and wholesome and in another State declared unwholesome and impure; and the result is that the manufacturers are at sea about what to do in the matter.

They appeared before us and asked us to give the Secretary of Agriculture power to decide on inspection of said foods—what is impure food, adulterated food, or a poisonous food—and that the testimony when taken to our courts would probably regulate the matter. Our understanding is they want to have some central authority to [illegible] State the trees have become infested by the [illegible] are food, to correct [illegible] the past few weeks one orchard of 3,000 trees h[illegible] other orchard 1,000 trees n[illegible] authorities and the food commissioners. This is good legislation; I will say to the gentleman from Illinois, and we urge it, notwithstanding the point of order. It is absolutely in the line of good legislation. If we attempted to pass the bill by itself, where would it be?

Mr. CANNON. It would be subject to full and intelligent consideration upon its merits.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is subject to that now. Will the gentleman state any reason for throwing it out?

Mr. CANNON. Yes; the point of order is that it is new legislation.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am not talking about the point of order, but I mean on its merits.

Mr. CANNON. Let us read it and determine whether it is subject to a point of order, and, incidentally, if the committee will give me their attention, see how much merit it has.

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture, in collaboration with the Association of Official Agricultural Chemists—

Who they are God only knows, I do not—

and such other experts as he may deem necessary—

All becoming experts in the pay of the Government. You can put in a dozen experts from every State in this Union to be constantly in session—and such other experts as he may deem necessary—

To do what?—

to establish standards of purity for food products and to determine what are regarded as adulteration therein, for the guidance of the officials of the various States and of the courts of justice.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I suppose the gentleman from Illinois understands that Congress neither has the power, nor is it the desire by this bill, literally, to govern or control the courts of justice in the States, but to submit to them the determination of scientific men as an argument before the court, as evidence given to the courts of what constitutes adulteration, poisonous adulteration, unwholesome adulteration.

Mr. CANNON. I have great respect for the judgment of the gentleman from Mississippi, able as he is, born under conditions and living under conditions where he would be glad indeed to let the States exercise their police powers within their own jurisdiction. I think I have heard him bear testimony against paternalism in the Government——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The gentleman is certainly right. If I thought this had the slightest tendency in that direction, I would be more opposed to it than is the gentleman from Illinois, but this is merely to collect and announce what, in the opinion of the chemists in the Agricultural Department, constitutes unwholesome adulteration. It controls no State, it controls no State police power; it does not pretend to; it merely gives the standard, which the State court can consider or ignore, whichever they please, but which, in our opinion, would have a persuasive force, if no other.

Mr. CANNON. And yet, under existing appropriations, the chemist of the Agricultural Department has the power to conduct these investigations. Now, then, this is legislation, as it enables the Secretary "in collaboration with the association," whatever that is, "of Official Agricultural Chemists, and such other experts as he may deem necessary;" how many? One thousand?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the gentleman from Illinois allow me to correct him?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is to enable the Secretary of Agriculture, in collaboration with the Association of the Official Agricultural Chemists and such other experts as he may deem necessary. It does not say that these other experts are to be employed; it says in collaboration with them.

Mr. CANNON. It says, "and such other experts as he may deem necessary." Why, all this appropriation for this purpose is available to pay experts.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The actual fact is this: The Association of Official Agricultural Chemists is composed of the State chemists of the various States and Territories, and it is proposed to bring them together and decide upon an agreement as to what constitutes adulterated or poisonous food.

Mr. CANNON. Does not my friend understand who pays the freight?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I want to make this suggestion, if the gentleman thinks there is anything in the idea that these experts are to be employed or paid by the Department. We should have no objection to inserting "not, however, to be paid by the Department of Agriculture." We do not think it is subject to that interpretation, but we have no objection to that amendment.

Mr. CANNON. It seems to me that it would be better to report the provision and let it be considered as other bills are.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. This was considered after a very careful hearing. The chemists of the Department came before us, and the manufacturers and other people were heard on the question by letter and petition and in person and otherwise. I will suggest that if the gentleman will withdraw the point of order we will insert the language, after the word "necessary," "not, however, to be paid by the Department of Agriculture or by the Government of the United States," or "without expense to the Government of the United States."

Mr. CANNON. No; I will make the point of order.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I am not arguing the point of order. I think the gentleman is correct in his position on the point of order.

Mr. CANNON. I think so; and on the balance of the provision you are to have an army of people. I make the point of order on the whole paragraph.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think if the Chair will refer to the law under which the Agricultural Department was created he will see that the Secretary was authorized to make all the investigations in the interest of the people that was necessary, and I claim it comes under that provision of the law.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, it occurs to me that the interpretation of this language by the gentleman from Illinois is clearly not justified by anything that appears on this page. The words "in collaboration" themselves exclude the idea of employment. When two men collaborate for the production of a play or a book it is not the case that one employs the other or hires him as a servant. They work together, and the intention of this provision is to permit the chemist in the Department to work in collaboration with the chemists from the various States, from foreign countries, if that be desired and deemed necessary to arrive at the result. It seems reasonably clear that under the general legislation authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to carry on those investigations the provision in this section could not be ruled out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair regards food products as connected with agriculture. The act creating the Department of Agriculture reads, in the first section, as follows:

There shall be at the seat of Government a Department of Agriculture, the general design and duties of which shall be to acquire and to diffuse among the people of the United States useful information on subjects connected with agriculture in the most general and comprehensive sense of that word, and to procure, propagate, and distribute among the people new and valuable seeds and plants.

Now, while this may not be free from some doubt, yet as food products are closely connected with agriculture "in the most comprehensive use of the word," and as this provision in the bill simply permits the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out a regulation having this end in view, the Chair is inclined to believe, and will so rule, that it is not subject to the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. I bow to the decision of the Chair.

The Clerk read as follows:

To investigate, in collaboration with the Bureau of Animal Industry, the chemistry of dairy products and of adulterants used therein, and of the adulterated products; to determine the composition of process and other treated butters, and other chemical studies relating to dairy products.

To study, in collaboration with the Weather Bureau and agricultural experiment stations, the influence of environment upon the chemical composition of wheat and other cereals, with especial reference to the variation in the content of gluten, and the suitability of barley for brewing and other purposes.

Mr. CANNON. I make a point of order on the provision extending from line 16, page 31, to line 2, page 32. My point is that this is new legislation.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I claim that it comes under the provision of law which the Chair has just read.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois think that the provisions on which he makes the point of order differ materially from those on which the Chair has just ruled?

Mr. CANNON. I think they are clearly legislation. If the Department has the power to do this now, what is the use of putting the provision in? It is put in, no doubt, for the very purpose of giving this power to the Department.

The CHAIRMAN. This is making an appropriation to pay for doing the thing which the law authorizes the Commissioner of Agriculture to do. This case, in the view of the Chair, comes within the reasoning of the former ruling.

Mr. CANNON. Well, there is a Department of Agriculture; I cheerfully make that concession to the Chair. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; and the law creating it is quite broad. The Chair overrules the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

To investigate the chemical composition of sugar-producing plants in the United States and its possessions, and, in collaboration with the Weather Bureau and agricultural experiment stations, to study the effects of environment upon the chemical composition of sugar-producing plants, especially with reference to their content of available sugar, $60,500, $20,000 of which sum, or so much thereof as is necessary, shall be used in investigating, determining, and reporting the proper treatment and process in order to secure uniform grade and quality of first-class marketable table cane sirup.

Mr. CANNON. I rise to a point of order, and I call the attention of the Chair to the last clause of this paragraph, providing an appropriation of $20,000, of which so much as may be necessary "shall be used in investigating, determining, and reporting the proper treatment and process in order to secure uniform grade and quality of first-class marketable table cane sirup."

Is there anything in that except a police regulation? Of course it is not authorized by existing law. If the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] or anybody else thinks that he can torture the general grant coming from the mere creation of a Department of Agriculture into an authority to exercise police regulations to determine what is "first-class marketable cane sirup," I will yield to him to do so.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Why, sir, the gentleman does not understand the language. I think the clause of the law, as read by the Chair, covers this point also.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] class cane sirup as an agricultural or a manufactured product? [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. Ask me something easy. [Renewed laughter.] I regard it as tolerably important that we should save, if we can, $20,000 that it is proposed to expend upon a matter of doubtful wisdom and not authorized by law—an expenditure that ought not be made except by virtue of a law fully considered.

The CHAIRMAN. Now let the Chair read to the gentleman from Illinois again what he read before; and the committee will please be in order so that the gentleman may hear.

There shall be at the seat of government a Department of Agriculture, the general design and duties of which shall be to acquire and to diffuse among the people of the United States useful information on subjects connected with agriculture in the most general and comprehensive sense of that word, etc.

Now, it seems to the Chair that cane sugar or cane sirup may be deemed a "subject connected with agriculture in the most general and comprehensive sense of the word."

Mr. CANNON. Will the Chair indulge me in a single remark? Upon the reasoning adopted by the Chair it would also be in order to make investigations from a scientific standpoint touching the propagation of the human race, because there can be no agriculture without human beings. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. That is where the Chair has the misfortune to differ with the gentleman from Illinois. The Chair overrules the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total for Bureau of Chemistry, $73,200.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 15, page 32, after the word "dollars," insert the following: "Provided, That all chemical work in the Department of Agriculture of every description shall be done under the direction of the Bureau of Chemistry and in collaboration with the various bureaus, divisions, and officers requiring such investigation."

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on that amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that in substance this amendment was offered by me to the committee, and it was substantially agreed to by that committee. The suggestion, however, was made at that time that it should not be pressed, because there were already chemical laboratories in other departments in operation, and that for that reason a general bill should be reported by the committee; but since that discussion I have reflected upon the proposition, and it seems to me that those things would not in any manner interfere with the enactment of this provision.

Now, what is the situation? A Bureau of Chemistry is established in the Department of Agriculture, and the inference is that that Bureau should have charge of everything of a chemical character in the way of chemical investigation that belonged to the Department of Agriculture, and the fact is that that Bureau today makes chemical analyses and does whatever is necessary in that direction for the Treasury Department, the War Department, the Department of Justice, and the Post-Office Department, and yet for the sole purpose of giving people jobs, for the sole purpose of having new bureaus and chiefs of new bureaus the chemical department in the Department of Agriculture has been duplicated five times, and three out of five of those chemical bureaus are as absolutely unnecessary and useless as it is possible for them to be.

Take, for instance, in the Bureau of Animal Industry. There has been established a bureau for the consideration of dairy products, and new apparatus, and new chemicals, and new appliances, absolute duplicates of the same department in the Bureau of Chemistry for the investigation of dairy products were installed. There are two, involving expenditure of large sums of money, and the Secretary of Agriculture admitted himself that he had no knowledge of the existence of at least one of them; it had got in there in the night—got in there without his knowledge—and that is the way these bureaus grow, and here they are. In the Department of Animal Industry there are the biochemical laboratory and the dairy products laboratory, both of them now existing the Bureau of Chemistry proper, both of them in charge of competent men.

There is no reason in the world, the Secretary himself says, why the whole thing should not be done under the general bureau. And what next have we? Here is the Bureau of Soils, and in the general chemical bureau there is a man in charge of soil investigation, with assistants and with clerks. He does everything in the nature of soil investigation that the Department of Agriculture would like to have done or desires to have done; and yet this man at the head of the chemical department in the Bureau of Soils is not a chemist even. The chief of that bureau is not even a chemist, and yet he has a bureau there with some assistants.

Mr. CANNON. Does not my friend think it is desirable to carry on this bureau for the purpose of educating this man?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Michigan be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. I will say, in answer to the gentleman from Illinois, that it is my opinion that that man can not be educated either at public or private expense. [Laughter.] He was before our committee, and the conduct of the man after he went back to the Department and reported who voted in favor of the bill and who voted against the Department of Agriculture, and the discussion that he wrought up there, is an indication that he is far from being in a position to be educated. In that connection I want to call the attention of the members of the House to another thing, and I am not saying anything against him. You have been furnished with a little card from the Chief of the Bureau of Soils, advising you where he is going this summer, where he is going to survey—a card published at Government expense.

Now, those cards are sent out for a lobby, to indicate to you and to me that he is going into our territory, and he wants our support for his entire department. What other bureau is there? In the Bureau of Soils there is a chemical laboratory. What else? In the Office of Experiment Stations they do chemical work. Then, there is another at Middletown, Conn., and another in Maine, and another at the State College in Pennsylvania. The Secretary of Agriculture said before our committee that every bit of this work ought to be done here in the city of Washington, and that it ought to be done by the Chemical Bureau at the Department of Agriculture; that the tendency of it would be to make the men in charge of the Bureau more proficient and would enable the Department of Agriculture to get better men.

And what else? In the Bureau of Plant Industry there is another chemical laboratory with appliances and material, and chiefs and assistant chiefs, and clerks, and assistants, and stenographers; and upon the proposition of consolidating these chemical bureaus the only answer that the chief of this Bureau could make, reduced to writing, and the only argument that he could make to sustain it was that it would be just as reasonable to have all the stenographers and all the typewriters under one head, and if you wanted any typewriting done or any stenographic work done that you should go to that one department of stenography.

Now, I submit, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, that it is absolutely useless to have these chemical bureaus in these various departments, and that the chemistry of this Government ought to be under one controlling and proficient head, and that we ought to put a stop to this increase of bureaus and this duplication of work.

That is all I care to say.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HENRY] makes the point of order against the amendment, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

On motion of Mr. WADSWORTH, the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. POWERS of Maine, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. Whereas the several railroad organizations, as representing the men in the railroad service in the United States, have, through their joint representative, Mr. H. R. Fuller, supported and urged the passage of Senate bill 1118, known as the "Hoar-Grosvenor anti-injunction bill;" and

Whereas by some influence at this time unknown to your petitioners the Committee on the Judiciary has reported out a bill known as Senate bill No. 4553, as a substitute, and which not only defeats the ends sought in the original measure, but which would bring new evils to bear upon our craft: Therefore, be it unanimously

Resolved by the officers and members of Trenton Lodge, No. 38, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, That we deprecate the act of this committee in ignoring the interests of labor, in placing in the hands of unscrupulous jurists an official sanction of the now unlawful and arbitrary use of the writ of injunction, which is always used by the servile, mercenary, corporation judge as a club with which to keep working men in subjection; and, be it further

Resolved, That we firmly believe that this substitution has been accomplished through the instrumentality of unfair discrimination, a thing in itself so despicable, that no representative of workingmen seeking for their rights would for an instant stoop to it. Finally, be it

Resolved, That we want Senate bill No. 4553 defeated, and that we desire to have you urge the passage of the original measure—Senate bill No. 1118—in order that the rights of labor may be preserved.

Given under our hands and the seal of our lodge, in the city of Trenton, N. J., this 20th day of April, A. D. 1902.

CENTRAL ARIZONA RAILWAY—VETO MESSAGE.

Mr. BURTON. From the Committee on Public Lands I report back the message of the President of the United States, returning with his objections the bill (S. 4363) granting the Central Arizona Railway Company a right of way for railroad purposes through the San Francisco Mountains Forest Reserve, with the recommendation that the bill do pass, the veto of the President to the contrary notwithstanding. I ask that the report be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Reported back with the recommendation that the bill do pass, the veto of the President to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. BURTON. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill at this time, and that it be passed notwithstanding the objections of the President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill and the President's message vetoing the same. The message of the President will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

I return without approval Senate bill No. 4363, entitled "An act granting the Central Arizona Railway Company a right of way for railroad purposes through the San Francisco Mountains Forest Reserve."

The Secretary of the Interior writes me as follows concerning the attached bill:

"I inclose a copy of the report on the bill by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, dated the 5th instant, for your full information.

"He states therein that it is questionable whether or not this company could be required to supply a bond to protect the Government from damage by reason of occupancy of the right of way provided for by this bill should it become a law.

"He also states that this company could acquire the right of way under existing laws, as other companies have done, by complying with the usual requirements, one of which is the filing of a bond for the purpose mentioned, and that he knows of no reason why this company should be exempted from such requirements."

In addition thereto I have had the Commissioner of the Land Office before me. He informs me that in its present form it would be impossible to exact the guaranty from the railroad that would insure its making good damages resulting from fire or any carelessness on the part of the railroad company in the forest reserve through which this railroad is to pass. He further informs me that there is at present a law which will permit the railroad, if it chooses to take advantage of it, to go across forest reservations under proper safeguards, and that there is no reason why this railroad should be singled out to be favored beyond all other railroads by being excepted from the necessity of complying with the departmental regulations with which all other railroads are forced to comply.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE, April 23, 1902.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will now be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

D. B. HENDERSON,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
WM. P. FRYE,
President of the Senate pro tempore.

I certify that this act originated in the Senate.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming submitted an amendment providing that in granting permits for grazing on the Uintah Forest Reserve no preference shall be given to the flocks or herds of one State over those of another, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment relative to the use of timber procured from forest reserves created under section 24 of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1891, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut submitted an amendment authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to assemble in the office of the permanent census all the schedules of the several decennial censuses of the United States taken from 1790 to 1900, both inclusive, and to cause them to be preserved in the office of the permanent census, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

He also submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 14018) to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

MILITARY ORDERS IN THE PHILIPPINES.

Mr. CULBERSON. I submit a resolution and ask that it be considered at the present time.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to send to the Senate the following information:

1. Whether the orders of Brig. Gen. J. F. Bell, dated Batangas, December 8, 1901, on the subject of reconcentration, addressed to all station commanders, have been officially received by the War Department, and if so, when they were received, by whom they were forwarded, whether they were issued by authority of the major-general commanding in the Philippines or were approved by him, and whether they have been approved or acquiesced in by the War Department.

2. A copy of the order or orders issued by Brig. Gen. Jacob H. Smith to Maj. L. W. T. Waller, United States Marine Corps, pleaded by the latter in defense before the recent court-martial which tried him at Manila, if the same were in writing, or the date and substance thereof if they were verbally given. Also (a) whether said order or orders were authorized or have been approved by the major-general commanding in the Philippines, and if so, when they were so approved; (b) when said order or orders were received by the War Department, if they have been received, or when it was first known to the War Department that such order or orders were issued, and (c) whether said order or orders have been revoked or countermanded, and if so, when and by whom, giving the terms of the order of revocation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I ask for the reading of the last part of the resolution; I did not catch it.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to have the first portion read. My impression is that I am entirely favorable to the resolution, but I should like to have it go over in order that I may have an opportunity to examine it.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. That course will be satisfactory.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will go over and be printed under the rule.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 14018) to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

AGREEMENT WITH INDIANS OF ROSEBUD RESERVATION.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is a little bill——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will wait one moment. Under the unanimous consent given yesterday, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the South Dakota reservation bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will wait until that is concluded.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2992) to ratify an agreement with the Sioux tribe of Indians of the Rosebud Reservation in South Dakota, and making appropriation to carry the same into effect.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] is the pending amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be read again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 3, page 6, line 18, after the word "acre," strike out down to and including the word "that," in line 25, and insert the word "and;" so that the additional proviso, if amended, would read:

And provided further, That the price of said lands shall be $2.50 per acre, and homestead settlers, who commute their entries under section 2301, Revised Statutes, shall pay for the land entered the price fixed herein.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. President, this bill was under consideration some days since, and perhaps it might be proper at this time to restate to some extent the conditions of the agreement which it is proposed to ratify by the pending bill.

The amount of land within the area proposed to be ceded under the agreement is 521,000 acres. There should be excluded from that amount 105,000 acres already held by Indian allottees within the limits of the proposed cession. In addition to that, the reservation for school purposes, as provided by the enabling act, and covered by the amendment already adopted, amounts to 29,000 acres, leaving to be opened to actual settlers 387,000 acres.

This reservation, as was stated in the discussion yesterday, is located in the southern part of South Dakota about midway upon the southern border. It is bounded on the west and partially on the north by the permanent reservation already existing of the Rosebud, and on the east by the Missouri River and a limited settlement upon the southeastern border.

I do not propose, Mr. President, to enter into any extended discussion of this measure, but I do feel I ought to refer to some of the statements made by the distinguished Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART], the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, in regard to the policy proposed to be inaugurated by the Government in dealing with Indians for the cession of their reservations. I believe that each tribe and each reservation should be considered separately and our rule of action governed by the existing conditions surrounding each particular reservation. We should have regard for the law by which the reservation was created and our obligations based upon the treaties in force with the particular tribe.

In 1868 a treaty was entered into between the United States and the Great Sioux Indians occupying this region, and they were circumscribed and limited under the provisions of that treaty so as to reduce them in their possessions and occupation to practically that part of South Dakota lying west of the Missouri River. It was provided in that treaty that this reservation so defined should be and was set apart for the absolute and undisturbed use and occupation of the Indians named therein.

Following that, in 1889, another treaty was entered into between the Government and the Great Sioux Nation, wherein it was proposed to segregate the reservation and divide the Indians of that reservation into different bands or tribes as they had theretofore been known and incorporated. It was not in the form of the usual treaty, but it was a solemn act of Congress. The entire nation was subdivided into bands or tribes, and they were then placed upon separate reservations and the limits of these separate reservations described.

Under that act they were confirmed in all the title which they had under the treaty of 1868, and were guaranteed and assured that they should retain the permanent use and sole occupation of their respective reservations thus defined. In addition to that, the Indians relinquished and ceded to the Government upward of eight and one-half million acres, which on February 10, 1890, were thrown open to settlement under the conditions stipulated in the treaty.

Following that and in line with the policy already inaugurated the act itself provided that at any time when, in the judgment of the President, it was thought to be to the best interests of the Indians that a part of their surplus lands should be ceded to the Government the Secretary of the Interior might negotiate with the Indians for the cession, and upon terms and at a price mutually agreed upon between the Indians and the Government. No agreement, however, which might be entered into between the Indians and the Department should have any force until ratified by Congress.

Mr. President, the rule pursued in this case is in line with the law of Congress, and the law to which I refer did not become operative until it was ratified by solemn act of the great Sioux Nation. It not only has the force of a law, but of a treaty as well, and we should have the highest consideration for each and all of its provisions. Simply because we may have the power to do so, we certainly can not justify a breach of any of its manifest conditions or provisions.

I therefore submit, Mr. President, that the discussion entered into in regard to the general policy of the Government in treating with Indians upon the Western reservations generally has no force, nor is it entitled to consideration, as applied to this particular reservation. In this case we must comply not only with the law enacted by Congress, but with the treaty itself. We should take up this agreement for consideration dissociated from the general question and treat it as it comes here in conformity with the act of Congress governing the subject and with the provisions of the treaty by which the parties thereto are honorably bound.

I do not feel, therefore, it is necessary to enter into a general discussion of the future policy of the Government toward Indians upon the Western reservations. Nor do I feel it is pertinent in the consideration of the pending measure. Nor do I feel that any action now taken will bind Congress in its interpretation of other laws or other treaties which may be entirely dissimilar from the present. This must be governed and controlled by the existing treaty and the law itself.

Another subject to which I should refer was suggested by the distinguished Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], for whom I have the highest respect, not only for his ability and high character, but for his eminence as a lawyer. The amendment already agreed to in regard to the school lands was suggested when the bill was pending before the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The bill had not that provision in it as prepared by the Department. My own judgment was, and now is, that such amendment was unnecessary, because under the enabling act admitting South Dakota as a State it was clearly provided that sections 16 and 36 in each township were granted to the State for school purposes. This provision, however, did not apply to the then permanent reservations within the State. As soon, however, as those reservations were opened, as in this case, and became a part of the public domain, then an additional provision of the enabling act became operative, and it certainly, in my judgment, granted to the State sections 16 and 36 without further legislation upon the subject.

The argument, therefore, made by the Senator from Connecticut, that the State of South Dakota would, on the ratification of this treaty, derive a special benefit, is untenable. It relates back to the law of 1889, and we would be entitled to it under the provisions of that act, rather than by the bill now under consideration. All States recently admitted were granted lands for the benefit of the common schools. Simply because 29,000 acres may be reserved under this bill for school purposes, aggregating in value substantially $75,000, is no argument that we are specially interested in the provisions of this bill, because it inures to the State and was conveyed by virtue of the act of 1889. Our right thereto was long since determined by existing legislation.

Mr. President, in the discussion of this measure I do not think that the mere financial consideration should be solely considered. Other considerations, independent of the price fixed, should receive attention as well. Great benefits accrue, not only locally, but to the nation at large in the development of natural resources and adding to our material wealth. If in the opening of the Western domain to settlement by purchase of the Indian title we are to compute it by dollars and cents alone, the Government has been a great loser.

I do not have a recent statement from the Department, but I observe from a report made in 1880 that counting up the cost of lands by purchase, and in extinguishing the Indian title, their maintenance, and the maintenance of the Land Department, the Government as an investor in land had expended at that time over and above its receipts upward of $121,000,000.

Mr. President, other high considerations should have weight, and we should not be entirely and solely controlled by the money consideration necessary to extinguish the Indian title. I submit that the surplus lands in these reservations not necessary for the use of the Indians in the Western States should and ought to be opened to settlement and the advance of civilization and material development and to provide homes for an industrious population. There is no logical distinction between a reservation now existing and one that heretofore existed.

The Government since its foundation has recognized the title of the Indians and has always treated with them for its relinquishment. It should be assumed a fair price was always paid them for that relinquishment. If it be proposed to pay the Indians $2.50 per acre for these lands, it is only a question of degree and not a question as to the reversal of a policy. All the lands in the western part of the country, and I might say practically in the entire country, have been purchased from the Indians at varying prices.

The homestead law enacted in 1862 certainly brought wonderful results, not only to the Western people but to the entire country. That law is in existence to-day, and I do not believe its policy should be reversed. It was sought to be reversed, as applied to Indian reservations, within the past ten or twelve years by compelling the settlers upon these lands to pay the amount the Government was required to pay the Indians for the extinguishment of their title.

I believe, Mr. President, these provisions were unfair and unjust and worked a great hardship upon this class of settlers. The measure passed two years ago, known as the "free homes bill," it seemed to me, repudiated that policy, and we went back again to the general homestead law and policy of 1862. I do not believe it is wise at this time to reverse the policy established by the passage of the free homes law of 1900. That law was fully considered, and I believe it expressed the judgment of the country and of all parties.

I do not understand that there has been any proposition to change or reverse that policy in any bill introduced during the present Congress. I call to mind the bill for the opening of the Crow Reservation in Montana to free homes, involving, I think, about 1,000,000 acres, the bill for the opening of the Lower Brulé Reservation of between fifty and sixty thousand acres to free homes, the bill introduced by the senior Senator from North Dakota for the opening of the Devils Lake Reservation.

This was prepared by the Interior Department, was submitted with its recommendation, and provided for the opening of the lands to free homes. It was so recommended by the Committee on Indian Affairs. I call to mind also the bill introduced by the junior Senator from Minnesota, opening the Red Lake Reservation in that State. The bill as prepared by the Department and as introduced provided for opening the reservation to free homes. It was modified as to this provision by the Committee having it in charge. The Department itself recognized that it was the policy established by the Government, and followed that policy in the preparation of these measures for submission to Congress.

It was thought wise, Mr. President, that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut should be acceded to as affecting the lands in North Dakota. These lands are valuable, and settlers are eager to take them at the prices proposed. I quite agree with the suggestion made by the Senator from Minnesota, that these reservations should stand individually upon their merits and be judged by the conditions surrounding each. The reservations in Minnesota and North Dakota to which I have referred are lands of high quality and are surrounded by well-settled and richly developed communities.

The conditions surrounding this reservation are entirely dissimilar. We have only to refer to the opening of the great Sioux Reservation in 1890. The lands are adjacent to this reservation on the north. The lands, however, proposed to be opened by this bill are much more desirable. By the act opening that reservation it was provided that all lands opened to settlement, the settler filing thereon within the first two years should pay $1.25 per acre; during the succeeding two years, 75 cents per acre, and thereafter 50 cents per acre. Within the first ten years of the opening of that reservation only 5 per cent of the lands were taken by settlers under the conditions of that act. This in itself plainly indicates the quality of the lands for agricultural purposes. For grazing purposes it is valuable and very desirable.

Some of these lands have been taken up by settlers during the past two years in consequence of the pressure of population and the increased value of the lands to the east of the reservation. Conditions in many other respects have been much more favorable to settlement. Immediately upon the southeast of this reservation is what was formerly the Fort Randall Military Reservation. This was opened to settlement by an act of Congress in 1895. There was a provision in that act permitting the State of South Dakota to select her school and indemnity lands within the limits of that reservation before filings from settlers should be received. It was carefully examined by the officers of the State, and they refused to make the selections of their lands within that reservation because they considered the lands undesirable.

Mr. President, here is a reservation removed from railroad communication and remote from substantial settlements, without opportunity for rapid development unless conditions are changed. It takes a long time for settlement to advance and develop these new sections. This reservation ought not to be classed with other reservations or to be controlled by any general policy, as has been urged, and ought not to be judged by the conditions existing and surrounding other reservations in North Dakota or in Minnesota, where conditions are entirely dissimilar.

Within the limits of this reservation, as I have already stated, 105,000 acres of land have been reserved for 452 Indian allottees. In other words, 20 per cent of the lands within the limits of the proposed cession has been retained by the Indians. The lands thus selected are the best and most desirable. They have made their selections and they hold them under patents from the Government and from which they can not be dispossessed.

I have here a map of the reservation, furnished me by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, which indicates upon its face the allotments held by the Indians. It will be observed from this that they have secured practically all the lands along the streams, which in every sense are the most desirable.

I believe some substantial consideration ought to be shown by Congress to the settlers who take up these lands and assume the responsibilities of building up such a community. Unusual responsibilities which are clearly apparent must necessarily be assumed.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. GAMBLE. Yes, sir.

Mr. STEWART. After they have taken the lands along the streams—the best lands—are we not paying a pretty high price for the remainder? Is not $2 an acre rather an extravagant price to be paid for such lands, not to be settled for some time to come?

Mr. GAMBLE. I will say, in reply to the Senator, that I have been over a part of this reservation—not over it entirely—and also on its eastern border, and from my information as well as knowledge I would say that the price named is fair, equitable, and just, both to the Indians and to the Government.

Mr. STEWART. How about the country farther west, the higher lands?

Mr. GAMBLE. As to the lands farther west, I should say that $2.50 an acre would be too high, for the reason the farther west you go the rainfall grows more limited. On the east is the Missouri River, and across the river it is settled. There is a railroad projected from the south, so that the people within this reservation will soon, I hope, have outside communication.

I was speaking of the hardships imposed upon the settlers who went in and opened up new communities.

Mr. STEWART. Are we not paying too much for those lands?

Mr. GAMBLE. No, sir; I think not. I say this is a fair and just price. They asked, in the first instance, an increased price for the lands—$5, $10, and $15 an acre. I, however, think this is a fair and just agreement as between the Indians and the Government itself.

As I was saying before being interrupted by the Senator from Nevada, I believe consideration should be shown to the settlers who go upon these lands and develop homes there under new and trying conditions. The Indians are the wards of the Government, and on this particular reservation they have already secured 20 per cent of the lands.

Under an act of Congress those lands are not subject to taxation and are inalienable for a period of twenty-five years. The personal property of Indians, of course, will be inconsiderable. The settlers will be obliged to meet unusual conditions and bear heavy and onerous burdens. It is no light or easy task to open and develop a new community. The settler, as a rule, is possessed of limited resources. In this case he will be practically unaided by the Indian. He will be obliged to bear his own burdens as well as that of the Indian. I am informed there is only one schoolhouse within the entire limits of the reservation.

The settlers will be compelled not only to develop this new community, but they will be obliged to build schoolhouses and maintain schools without any assistance from the Indians. The settlers, in addition, will be compelled to build highways and bridges and maintain them. They will be compelled also to maintain courts, and provide and supply all the machinery of local government. The settlers will be doing service for the Government in helping to civilize, cultivate, and develop the Indian, and to make of him a good citizen. I submit, Mr. President, some consideration should be shown them by the Federal Government when they assume these burdensome duties in behalf of the Government.

It was suggested that this involves the Government in a large outlay. I do not pretend to know what may be the final outlay that will have to be made by the Government in the extinguishment of the Indian title for the surplus lands in the existing reservations. It was said by the distinguished Senator from Connecticut that in his judgment—and I think that he advanced it simply as an opinion—it would require $50,000,000. In the same connection he stated there were yet remaining 8,000,000 acres of Indian reservations within the limits of the State of South Dakota. If they were to be opened to settlement at the rate of $2.50 per acre, it would involve the expenditure by the Government of practically $20,000,000.

Mr. President, I think if the first statement is as inaccurate as the second the Senator must be very wide of the mark. Within the limits of the reservations in South Dakota there have been reserved for the Indians, in addition to their allotments, a large amount for general purposes and the use of the tribes. So that, while there may be additional lands opened in South Dakota, I do not believe they will amount to more than 1,000,000 or perhaps 2,000,000 acres.

Mr. President, we respectfully submit that the bill now under consideration should receive the approval of Congress. We insist there ought not to be a discrimination made against settlers upon Indian reservations in comparison with the settlers upon other lands.

Why should not the settlers upon these Indian reservations be entitled to the same consideration as those who settled in Iowa, in Nebraska, in Minnesota, in North and South Dakota, and elsewhere? Those lands were purchased from the Indians; the Indian title was extinguished in like manner and the lands were opened under the homestead and preemption laws, and why should not these settlers receive the same consideration, and why are they not entitled to even better treatment than the settlers to whom I have referred?

These Indians have been crowded into South Dakota from other States, and we have within the limits of our State between twenty and twenty-five thousand. We are asking that they be treated with equity, with fairness, and with justice; but there is no denying the fact that Indians there located materially impede the progress and development of our State. We desire, Mr. President, that no injustice shall be done to the settlers who go in and assume and carry all these burdens. We ask that the settler, alike with the Indian, be treated with fairness and with justice.

I submit, Mr. President, that the bill should be passed as it has been reported from the committee; that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut ought not to receive favorable consideration, and that we ought not to reverse the policy of the Government in the application of the homestead law, and that its principles should be maintained and preserved with uniformity in our statutes.

Mr. TILLMAN obtained the floor.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Will the Senator from South Carolina allow me a word before he begins?

Mr. TILLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do not think any policy that we would give free homes by the act, which was called the free-homes act, was established, because that act was expressly limited to lands which had been already opened to settlement and acquired prior to the passage of the act.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the date of that act?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. May 17, 1900, page 179, Statutes at Large, volume 31. The act was expressly limited to what had been done before the time of its passage. That, as I understood, was in order that it should not be taken as the settled policy of the Government to do it hereafter.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, there is only one phase of this subject that I wish to discuss, and that very briefly.

As a general proposition, I believe in opening our public domain to settlers upon as reasonable and as liberal terms as possible. Therefore, if I remember aright, I voted in favor of the passage of the bill which has just been quoted by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT]. In fact, I do not think there was any opposition to it.

But in that very matter of opening Oklahoma, I found last year in visiting that section the condition of affairs which I mentioned yesterday. When those Indian reservations were thrown open to settlers there was such a flood of applications for homesteads—the number so far exceeded the amount of land that was available—that the Department, in order to have any show of fairness, established a lottery, by which the several claimants, amounting to over 100,000, if I recollect aright, for about 16,000 homesteads, were to put their names into a wheel and draw for the privilege of location.

Were those 100,000 who made application for homesteads bona fide homeseekers? Were they men who were endeavoring to get a foothold on the soil, make their settlement, and go to work to create a home and become citizens? No. There were speculators there from all portions of this country, men who were well to do, who had no purpose whatever of going to that country to locate permanently, but who went in, made their applications, filed their papers, and paid the little fee, whatever it was, to get the right to have their names go into this wheel and draw for the right to locate. I know men in my section of the country—although there were very few in that section who made any effort to get to Oklahoma—but I do know of instances in which men who were well to do and better off than I am, finding that there was a chance to get some valuable land for nothing, went out there, put in their applications, and drew. The one individual I have in mind just now did not draw a prize, but he might have drawn it.

But the question which presents itself to me as a practical man here is what right we have as legislators to throw open these lands that we are going to buy at five, or seven, or whatever number of dollars it may be an acre, out of the public Treasury—what right have we to repeat the Oklahoma scheme? What right have we to tax the general taxpayers of the country, the ordinary people everywhere, to buy these lands and then give them to the gamblers who will go there and try to get land? I do not believe in such a policy, and therefore I shall vote for the amendment to make every man there pay whatever the Government pays for these lands.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, this discussion brings up the original question, the great question that is before Congress in dealing with these reservations, whether the United States is bound to give the Indians what they ask for their executive-order reservations. The Indians have been treated as wards of the nation. They have been fed; most of them have been cared for; they have been put on these reservations, and the reservations have been made valuable, not by their labor, but by the labor of the whites. The Government in setting apart a piece of land for them and reducing it to cultivation has acted as a guardian would by his ward.

The town-site speculators give away lots for the purpose of enhancing the value of the remainder of their lands, and the Government should do substantially the same thing. When it opens up a part of a reservation and settlers go in there, the remainder of the land is worth ten times as much as all of it was before. The very land referred to in the bill here was not worth 5 cents an acre originally when we were dealing with the Indians. It was worth but a mere nominal sum, and now we are to pay two dollars and a half an acre for it. Who has made it more valuable? The Government has made it so by opening the reservations and bringing the whites nearer to the Indians. The Indians have all the benefit; they still have a possessory title to the lands given to them for temporary purposes, and they are taken care of as wards of the Government.

Originally, under the decision of Chief Justice Marshall, they did not have any title which the Government was bound to respect, except as a matter of humanity and charity to take care of them. We assumed to act as their guardian. I am in favor of taking care of them, and, where necessary, feeding them, but not feeding them too much, so as to make paupers of them, thereby destroying them. If that policy is to be pursued, if we are to be responsible for taking care of the Indians, and we set apart a piece of land and say to them, "You may stay within these large boundaries, containing a million or two million acres of land, and the Government will take the balance and open it to settlement," we thereby raise the value of all of the land; and if they are to be put upon it, so as to block settlement, the Government meanwhile supporting the Indians, it is going to take many million dollars.

The question is, Has the Government any power rightfully to open these lands to settlement? I do not mean legal power, because the Government undoubtedly has the right to deal with any of these reservations in any way it pleases. The courts have decided that question. We have opened reservations by acts of Congress, and we can give good title to the land within them. The power to do that has never been questioned; but I am speaking of the moral obligation to do it, and that is all the obligation we have in this matter. It is a moral obligation to recognize their possessory right. It is best for the Indians to take the best lands, but to take them in small quantities, if you want to civilize them. We can not civilize them by allowing them to roam over millions of acres of land. If we are going to civilize them—that is our mission—we can only do so by putting them on small tracts of land.

There is nothing so damaging to the civilization of the Indians as a large reservation, with the right to roam over it without working. Whenever you open a reservation you are going to bring in settlers and double and treble and quadruple the value of the remaining land. Are you going to do that and then let the Indians set the price? There ought to be some limitation, some discretion on the part of the Government. Perhaps the courts will decide that in the settlement of the country the procuring of lands for settlers is a public use. If the courts so decide, then the way to open these reservations will be for the Government to appoint a commission and adopt some method, so as to secure equity between the Government and the Indians for the benefit of the Indians, as well as to secure the Government against its Treasury being raided.

We are going on to send our agents to treat with the Indians. We have entered into treaties with them and opened reservations, on which we have expended a great deal of money. After we have done all that and donated the Government money for that purpose, shall we give the land to the bona fide settlers or to the boomers that go there to grab the land? If we follow out that scheme, it will take a great many millions.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will state, in addition, a fact which has been brought to my attention. I was told of cases in Oklahoma in which men who already had homes in other parts of the Territory previously opened rushed into the new reservation that was opened and proceeded to preempt, showing that the claim that you want to get bona fide settlers to go to that country does not hold good, and that speculators will be the main beneficiaries of this policy. It is a question of making somebody pay some money, and then you will get the bona fide settlers; otherwise you will have boomers and speculators and other such people who do not need this benefaction on the part of the United States.

Mr. STEWART. If the United States can not be protected from the payment of fancy prices put on these lands by the Indians, on the plea that the land adjoining is improved—I say if there is no way to relieve the United States of that burden, and we must pay those fancy prices, then we can hardly excuse ourselves for giving the land away.

Mr. QUARLES. Mr. President, I have a profound respect for the distinguished Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GAMBLE] and a desire to vote in accordance with his wishes, for I have no doubt he honestly believes that the interests of his State may be promoted by this measure, and I would cheerfully do so, sir, if the measure stood alone—if it did not affect and practically shape the future policy of Congress in regard to this matter of free homes. But we are standing at the opening of a new era in regard to this matter. As was well pointed out by the distinguished Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] on yesterday, it was all well enough while the Government had a great amount of surplus land, and while the honest settler was struggling to obtain a home upon that land, that the former policy should obtain. I will not be outdone by anyone in the admiration I feel for the honest man who takes his wife and family and all the possessions he has in the world in a covered wagon and travels West to find a home and a shelter for his little flock. But, Mr. President, things have changed, and I am persuaded that this legislation is not intended, or, if intended, that it will not have the effect of reaching the honest settler who travels in a prairie schooner—as was done years ago—but that the effect of it will be to reach another class who are not deserving of the confidence of this body.

What have we done in this great Western country? By the opening of these large domains to public settlement under the free-homes scheme we have really developed a new class of people out in that Western country. They are not settlers at all. As the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] well says, they are speculators, and they have become a class that are exerting a distinct influence in that section of our country. Now, as soon as it is rumored that a reservation is going to be opened those men come and they cluster about that reservation; an agitation is commenced, the Indians are stirred up, and that agitation becomes so rife that it is felt here in the halls of Congress. Free homes is a very attractive and enthusiastic proposition here. Western Senators and Representatives participate in the feeling, and practically we have been stampeded into measures of this kind several times. That free-homes business, after all, rests on the proposition of obtaining something for nothing, and there is no proposition in this world that is so attractive to a large class of people as that. If they can get something for nothing, they will spend more money to do it than the object which they seek is worth.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. In these cases they generally do spend more money than it is worth.

Mr. QUARLES. Very likely so.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. They spend more money than if they bought the land in the first place.

Mr. QUARLES. Very likely; and I am prepared to say to the Senator that, in my humble judgment, the settler who actually makes his home, who brings his family, and helps to build up a State and augment its prosperity, is not the man who will receive this exemption. He comes later. Your professional speculators and settlers are there. They are there by the thousands. They come from all parts of the country; they gather like birds of prey and are ready to make a rush or to take a chance at the wheel or anything else to get something for nothing. Then what happens? After they have made the rush or have taken their chance in the wheel and have got a claim, they simply get a foothold there long enough to sell out to an actual settler afterwards, and he pays them five or ten dollars an acre as the case may be, and then they go away.

These men are not settlers, Mr. President. You could not tame one of them any more than you could domesticate a cyclone. They go from one frontier to another, and as soon as immigration advances they retire. They are children of the frontier, and we have educated them up until they have now become a class out there who are there ready to take the benefits of these acts, which are withheld really from the actual settler, who comes afterwards and pays his money to these fellows, takes his position there, and then, of course, the country is settled in that way.

Now, why should we not do business here on behalf of the Government on business principles? Why should the benevolence of this great Government blossom out in lotteries, or why should it degenerate into such a rush as they had in Oklahoma? I think the time has come to stop that thing, and have the Government do business on business principles. Let us deal with the settlers. Let them have this land at what the Government has paid for it, $2.50 an acre, and close it up there.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. QUARLES. Certainly.

Mr. DUBOIS. If it will not interrupt the Senator, I should like to call his attention to the fact that the bill provides for selling the land at $2.50 an acre, or for homesteaders to go on it. Now, how is the homesteader going to be a speculator? He has to live on the land five years among the Indians. Which proposition would sooner invite the speculator, $2.50 an acre, or the homestead proposition in the present bill?

Mr. QUARLES. Theoretically, of course, they are homesteaders. They come in possession and stay until they can dispose of their claims, and if they stay there five years under the land laws they are not obliged to plow a furrow. I ask my distinguished friend what good is to come to the State of South Dakota by having these professional speculators go in there and hold these lands for this period of time?

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. QUARLES. Certainly.

Mr. DUBOIS. I will answer the question if the Senator from Wisconsin will allow me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. QUARLES. I yield to both Senators.

Mr. DUBOIS. No; the Senator asked me a direct question, which I will answer. No good could come to South Dakota by having speculators go there and take this land, and speculators will not go there if they have to become homesteaders; but they will go there if you sell them the land for $2.50 an acre. That is the experience we have had all through the West among those who are familiar with the opening of Indian reservations. I have had it in my own State.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. QUARLES. With pleasure.

Mr. GAMBLE. Is it not true that the settler upon these lands, or upon any Government lands under the homestead law, that being the only law now in force, is obliged to live upon the land, to maintain a permanent residence thereon, to cultivate the land, and if he does not he thereby forfeits his right? Is not that the existing law?

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. QUARLES. Directly, after I have the pleasure of answering the distinguished Senator from South Dakota. I wish to answer him. I would not want to do him the discourtesy of failing to answer his question even to yield to my distinguished friend the Senator from Nevada.

That is undoubtedly true theoretically, as stated by my friend from South Dakota. Theoretically, the settler has to go in and he has to put up a habitable place for a man to live. That costs very few dollars. He comes in there and puts that up and he has a foothold. He has not put a plow into the furrow at all, and in a year's time, for instance, an actual settler comes along and he makes an arrangement with him, and out he goes. My proposition is that the State of South Dakota is not benefited by the intervention of these people, who come in not with the intention of settling, but with the intention of speculating on the land; that it is a positive detriment to the State; that it would be better for the Government to deal in the first instance directly with the permanent settler.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin has answered the question substantially as I should have done. I merely wish to emphasize it. It is very easy for a man, if he gets the land, which there is a prospect will be worth more than $2.50 an acre, to hold on, and he will find somebody who wants it, and he commutes, and gets the deed. That is the practice.

Mr. QUARLES. Certainly.

Mr. STEWART. It may not be true, but my information is that it has been done in almost the majority of cases where reservations have been opened. Wherever the land is worth more than $2.50 an acre, all he has to do is to hold on and a man gives him money to commute, and he commutes and he gets the deed.

Mr. QUARLES. When the President has issued his order for the opening of this reservation, I guarantee you can go out on the confines of the reservation and find the same fellows located there who were in Oklahoma in the great race they had there or who were at the opening of the Kiowa and Comanche strip when it was done by the instrumentality of a wheel of fortune.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. QUARLES. Certainly.

Mr. GAMBLE. Is it not true that where a settler has once filed upon a piece of land he is precluded from making a second filing, and in order to avail himself of a second filing he must make oath that he has not received the benefits of the homestead or other law, or any benefits? And, enlarging perhaps upon the interrogatory, how can it be that there is so large a number of speculators as the distinguished Senator states? I live out in that region, and have lived there for twenty-five years, and I have not observed the conditions to which the distinguished Senator refers.

Mr. QUARLES. My friend might live in the quiet seclusion of South Dakota for many years and never see the faces of the class of speculators to whom I refer any more than we would see them in Wisconsin; but once let the President of the United States issue his proclamation that this great reservation in South Dakota is going to be opened, and I will guarantee that my distinguished friend will see those people to his heart's content, for they will certainly be there.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President——

Mr. QUARLES. I do not feel at all proud at the idea that the benefactions of this great Government are to be dispensed with a wheel of fortune. I never have, and I insist that business principles are far better. Their influence is more wholesome on the public. Let us sell these lands to the actual settlers in the first instance for exactly what they cost us, and then we will be following true principles, business principles, and it will be better for the Government and better for the State of South Dakota.

Mr. STEWART. The practice of using dummies to evade the land laws has been in vogue under all systems. The preemption laws were frequently evaded in that way. Good land, worth much more than the Government price, is very tempting to speculators. It is alleged that dummies are sometimes used under the homestead law where the right to commute exists, and under that law any person who will take the trouble may claim a homestead, hold it until some bona fide settler wants it, obtain the money from him, and commute it and convey it to the settler at a profit to the speculator.

Mr. QUARLES. Just one word.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Will the Senator from Wisconsin allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. QUARLES. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Do I understand the drift of the Senator's argument to be in opposition to the homestead laws altogether?

Mr. QUARLES. Oh, not at all.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In what, then, does this differ from the ordinary homestead laws? Under the homestead laws on any land belonging to the Government of the United States a citizen who has not had the benefit of the homestead law may locate a homestead. Now, as I understand, under this bill he can do exactly the same thing. What difference does it make to the Government whether the land is derived by purchase from France or from an Indian tribe? If the land is a part of the public domain, and the law stands as it has been for years, why not allow any citizen who has not had the benefit of the homestead law to locate a homestead on any land, no matter whence it comes? I do not understand the Senator's idea—why this land should be differentiated from the public domain in other places.

In the matter of commutation there is this difference: A person can commute ordinarily under the law at a dollar and a quarter. It is put at two dollars and a half in this bill. I think that is wise. My own idea would be to strike out the commutation feature so far as this reservation is concerned, and require the people to live for five years on the land and not allow them to commute, and to permit them to get their deeds at the expiration of the five years.

Mr. QUARLES. The suggestion of the Senator from Arkansas may have value. His suggestions usually have. I do not know but that the proposition to prevent commuting entirely is worthy of attention.

Not to take the time of the Senate unduly, I wish to say in conclusion that this is a matter of policy; whether we shall tax the people of this country from $50,000,000 to $75,000,000 in order that land may be given away. That is the proposition. I am not willing to subscribe to it. I think the policy is vicious. It is a paternal system of doing things which does not increase the industry of any section, and in my humble judgment the better way would be to let the people pay for the land what the Government has paid for it.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. But, if the Senator will permit me to make a suggestion—of course, I do not want to make a speech—the United States Government did pay $15,000,000 for certain lands, most of which, or a very large part, have been given away for homesteads under the policy of the Government of undertaking to provide homesteads for all classes of citizens who have no homes. It seems to me it should make no difference whether the land is derived by purchase from France or from Indian tribes or however it may become a part of the public domain. If the homestead laws are wise and beneficent and proper, there is no reason why those homestead laws should not apply to all public domain, it makes no difference whence it comes.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. In reply to the suggestion of the Senator from Arkansas, I do not think he can show that this Government ever bought lands and thereby extinguished the Indian title with the particular intent of giving those lands away to anyone.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas rose.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I will explain myself a little further. We did pay $15,000,000 for the Louisiana purchase, as we have paid for all the land we have taken from other countries; we did pay trifling amounts of money to extinguish the Indian title over a large portion of the Louisiana purchase; but at that time we were not giving away land, and we neither paid France for it nor extinguished the Indian title in order to give away the land. The laws then provided that the land should be paid for, and so on up to the time of the homestead law, and since the homestead law we have never been buying lands for the particular purpose of giving them away. We made a new departure in our policy——

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. We have extinguished the Indian title for the purpose of making the land a part of the public domain.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Yes, sir.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The general law provides how the public domain shall be disposed of, and when we have extinguished the Indian title and made the land a part of the public domain there is no reason that I can see, and the Senator does not point out any, why it should not be treated as are other lands.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. When we extinguished the Indian title we extinguished it in order to sell the land to the people, and that is what should be done now.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, I could not quite understand the contention of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. QUARLES], speaking to the bill under consideration. It clearly to my mind would invite speculators more surely if the land was to be sold for $2.50 an acre than if the settler was to go there and take up the land under the homestead law. I fear that some Senators are confusing the very rich lands of Oklahoma with the lands in Indian reservations in the West. There is not going to be any very great rush, I imagine, for these lands in South Dakota. I know it is true of Indian reservations in my own State, and the lands there are quite rich. In Oklahoma it was an extraordinary occasion. Anyone who will go out there and live on a piece of land among the Indians and suffer the privations of the frontier for five years is entitled to have it for nothing; and if anyone will take up a homestead and undertake to do this, and at the end of five years can sell it at a profit, goodness knows he ought to be allowed to do it.

Now, in regard to the matter of policy, the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] says the free-homes bill did not establish any settled policy; that it expressly provides that it shall apply to reservations which have already been opened. That is true; but it sets a precedent which, in my judgment, we ought to accept as a settled policy. I do not see how anyone in this Chamber who voted for the free-homes bill can, with thorough consistency, refuse to extend the homestead act to reservations which are to be opened in the future.

I can see the confusion and the struggle going on in the minds of members of the Indian Committee, and I understand the dilemma in which the chairman is placed, and if he will agree to protect me from the Indian Rights Association, I will say what I think ought to be our settled policy.

It should be founded on the free home. Then we should send out agents, not to treat with the Indians, but to go out there and to do the very best thing for the Indians. They should make a proper appraisement of their land. Take an Indian reservation containing a million acres, which is the case in a number of instances, with not more than a thousand or fifteen hundred Indians on it. The Indians are not doing anything with the land at all. It is useless. Their treaties are expiring, so that they will not have annuities any longer. The treaties are expiring by which we feed them, and they are coming to starvation. Let these men appraise part of their lands and sell them for the benefit of the Indians.

I am opposed also to giving the Indians money directly. That is a new policy, a policy of recent years. It does more to demoralize the Indians than anything else. It does them no good. The proceeds of this land, when it is appraised and sold, should be put aside for the benefit of the Indians.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. DUBOIS. Excuse me for just a moment. Then the land should be thrown open to homestead settlers. In some instances, of course, you will find reservations near towns and cities or for some other reason where the lands will be very valuable. In that case the agents of the Government could fix the lowest price at which the lands should be sold, and in an extraordinary case of that sort you could reimburse the Government and give the balance of it to the Indians.

Now, generally that would be my policy, and I think we have about come to the time when we should cease to go through the farce of treating with the Indians. Every Western man and some Eastern men who are familiar with it, like the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], know this to be true. I stated it yesterday, and I will state it again. When a commission is sent out to treat with Indians for a cession of their land there is a pressure from all sides to get any sort of an agreement, no matter what it is. The Indians are pretty cunning. They understand that and put the price up way beyond what the land is worth or ever will be worth, and they insist now in addition in these later days that the money shall be paid to them directly. I think it ought to be stopped.

Mr. TILLMAN. I was going to direct the Senator's attention to a condition of affairs which occurred in Oklahoma, to this effect. The city of Pawnee, which is about seven or eight years old already, has about seven or eight thousand people in it, and there is a very rich farming country behind it. But just across a big road running on one edge of that city is an Indian reservation, and the proposition will soon come from the pressure of whites to get onto that land and get a title of some kind to it that the United States must extinguish that Indian title, and either open the Pawnee Reservation to homesteads or provide some other method by which the white man may get his grip on it.

Undoubtedly this land, lying right across a street, you may say, on the edge of a city, is worth already $3 or $4 or $5 an acre, $300 anyway, and land a little ways back, in fact land all around for miles and miles, is worth from $20 to $50 an acre to farmers who can go in and make their crops.

Now, the Senator says the Indians ought not to have the money direct; that it is an injury to them; and all that kind of thing. You speak of having a commission appointed who shall sell the Indian lands for the benefit of the Indians, as I understood the Senator said.

Mr. DUBOIS. Yes. Of course, as I said, there are some exceptions. I was speaking more particularly with reference to the Western Indians and their reservations.

Mr. TILLMAN. There are Indian reservations and Indian reservations. The Oklahoma situation of course is different from almost any other, because of the exceeding fertility of those lands and their very valuable character and all that kind of thing.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Of what reservation does the Senator from South Carolina speak?

Mr. TILLMAN. I do not know its name. I suppose it is the Pawnee, because the town is called Pawnee. The Indian reservations are dotted about there yet. I saw one at Shawnee, where I went to the Indian school or the mission or whatever is there. They told me that the braves were out on some creek 3 or 4 miles off holding a corn dance, praying to the Great Spirit to come and drive away all the white men who were interfering with them.

The question I want to have settled is whether the taxpayers of South Carolina are to be made to put their hands into their pockets to provide money to buy land which is to be given to somebody. That is what I am after. The general theory of homesteads to be donated to bona fide settlers was very good in the past when this great domain was wilderness and people were rushing over from Europe to advance our flag of civilization across the continent. But we have gotten to the point where we have taken up all of the land desirable for farms. We have reached the arid region where agriculture needs irrigation, and the Senator and his colleagues here proposed and we all, without any opposition, passed a bill a little while ago providing that the proceeds of the sales of public lands should be devoted to a fund for developing irrigation.

Yet you propose to give away the land in the Rosebud Reservation, which is so near the border of the rain belt that people are willing to risk the danger of going in there and trying to establish a farm, although they may lose one crop out of three, or two out of three, or one out of two. But the general proposition which faces me is what are we going to do with these millions of acres which are in reservations scattered from Wisconsin westward. Are we going to continue to buy the lands and then open them and give them away?

Mr. DUBOIS. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator from Idaho says certainly, because he lives there. I will ask the Senator where he is going to get the money for his irrigation scheme if he is going to give all the lands away? What was the use of our passing the bill providing for the setting apart of every dollar received from the sale of public lands for irrigation purposes? Under the Senator's programme there would be no money coming in at all.

Mr. DUBOIS. Does the Senator from South Carolina pretend to stand there at his seat and say all the public lands in the West are embraced in Indian reservations?

Mr. TILLMAN. No; I am not that big a fool, although I am a pretty big fool at times.

Mr. DUBOIS. Then the proceeds will come from the sale of lands not in Indian reservations.

Mr. TILLMAN. Ah, yes; but all of those lands which are fit for homes are pretty well taken now. There are millions of acres of arid lands out there, on which there are buffalo grass and sagebrush and other growth, that will furnish a bare living for a cow or a sheep on 4 or 5 acres; and they will be there in the sweet bye-and-bye. They will be there forever, without any chance for anybody to get a living on them except by fencing them in or having a few herds roaming about.

Mr. DUBOIS. I will say to the Senator from South Carolina that there is more agricultural land in the Snake River region, Idaho, outside of Indian reservations, than there is in South Carolina.

Mr. TILLMAN. You mean land that will produce a crop?

Mr. DUBOIS. Every year.

Mr. TILLMAN. Every year?

Mr. DUBOIS. Yes.

Mr. TILLMAN. What is the matter with it, then, that people will not go to it?

Mr. DUBOIS. They will go to it when the irrigation bill is in operation.

Mr. TILLMAN. Oh! You have to help God Almighty and furnish some water. You must have money to do it, and you have to put the water over the land before it becomes agricultural land. I consider land that will not make a crop without artificial help as not agricultural land. You can not pretend to claim that land which needs irrigation is arable. It is not arable, because while you may put the plow into it, the crop is the true test of arable land.

Mr. DUBOIS. I should like to ask the Senator from South Carolina if he considers land covered with timber agricultural land?

Mr. TILLMAN. When you clear it it is.

Mr. DUBOIS. Oh!

Mr. TILLMAN. It is forest first.

Mr. DUBOIS. Yes.

Mr. TILLMAN. But one is an artificial and the other is a natural condition. The mere effect of the labor necessary to clear away the forest is one operation in preparing the soil, but irrigation is an artificial condition, produced by the use of large capital, for the purpose of furnishing water, something that God or the climate or meteorological conditions furnish elsewhere.

But the point I wish to have settled is this: Here are these reservations, containing three or four or five—I do not know how many—million acres, but I see the maps we get from the Land Office dotted about with squares and circles and other shaped patches of yellow or red or something of that sort, indicating how many of these Indian reservations still remain.

Undoubtedly the Indians, when they were corralled or pushed into a location instead of roaming at will, selected the best lands—lands that suited their purposes best. They usually went where the timber was, and land will not grow good timber unless there is water. So we may say that all the Indian reservations remaining in the arid region are the best lands out there, and they are going to cost us money. The question is, Are we going to buy them, the United States furnishing the money from the taxpayers of the country throughout the United States, in order to give them away? I do not believe there is any justice in that proposition myself.

Mr. CLARK of Montana. Mr. President, there seems to be considerable misapprehension in the minds of some distinguished Senators in this Chamber with regard to the operations of the laws which are now on the statute books of this country allowing the acquisition of title to the public land. It has been said by several of the gentlemen who have spoken upon the question that all sorts of fraud are perpetrated. This is no doubt to some extent true. I believe there is scarcely a law enacted by the Government or by the respective States in which there is not an attempt at fraud in the operations of the law. But we have upon the statute books to-day a law regulating homestead entries, and, as I understand it, any qualified American citizen can go upon the public land and locate 160 acres under the homestead law and by a residence of five years he can acquire title to it.

These lands that it is suggested we shall purchase from the Indians—for undoubtedly they belong to the Indians to-day, in most cases at least—are no exception to the general rule. As it has been said, when the proclamation of the President shall have been made throwing open the lands for public settlement men may rush in there in great numbers. I have no doubt that will be the case, because most of these Indian lands of which I have by personal observation acquired a knowledge are very valuable for grazing and for agricultural purposes. But the law relating to the acquisition of title by homestead or by any other method has most stringent provisions whereby fraud can not be practiced except through perjury and subornation of witnesses. Now, there is a remedy for this. There is a penalty for it, and I can not understand why in the endeavor to secure title to homestead interests under the provisions we are now discussing there should be any more latitude for the practice of fraud than exists to-day under the laws providing for homestead entries.

I know nothing about the operations of the lottery system to which the Senator from South Carolina has alluded, but I do believe that any man or woman who may be privileged to make a selection of that kind by lottery would have to show a proper qualification just the same as he or she would have to do if they attempted to make a location under the laws existing to-day.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It is to be done in accordance with the laws.

Mr. CLARK of Montana. It is to be done in accordance with the laws on the statute books. I have lived for the greater part of my life in the Western country; I have seen the endeavors of citizens of the United States to acquire title under the preemption laws, under the desert-land act, and under the homestead act, and I have never yet found a condition of things existing such as has been graphically described by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. QUARLES].

Mr. President, there may be some speculators who would attempt to locate some of these lands for the purpose of selling them to others who might succeed them, but if they did they would violate the laws of the land, and that entry would be canceled by the General Land Office. Practices of this kind are occurring, but universally they fail of accomplishment. I have known a great many entries to be canceled for that reason. After the first filing on a location under any of the above-mentioned acts relating to the entry of lands on the public domain the right of the locator is exhausted, and any attempt thereafter to repeat it would subject the individual to criminal prosecution.

There is a part of the Crow Reservation, in the State of Montana, which was thrown open to settlement a few years ago, the title to the lands having been relinquished to the Government by the Crow Indians. It embraces a territory some 5 or 6 miles in width and 20 or 30 miles long, lying on either side of Clarks Fork of the Yellowstone River. That land was lying there, just as the land lies in most of these reservations in the Western country, uncultivated and unused and unnecessary for the wants of the Indians. It was thrown open to settlement and homesteaders came there and made locations, and they have made that desert blossom as the rose. For 15 or 20 miles a visitor may go and see the land reclaimed and brought under a successful state of cultivation. The most beautiful wheat fields and other cereal fields may be found there flourishing to-day. They have built up a large and a useful community, contributing their share to the world's wealth. I know personally a number of those people, and I believe that they represent a type of manhood and of citizenship as high in standard as can be found anywhere in this country. Of those men, all that I know, and all concerning whom I have ever heard—and I am very familiar with that part of the country—took up the land in good faith, and they have settled on and improved it and made it worth from $15 to $30 an acre.

It is true that a number of them commuted their homesteads after two or three years, when they became able to do so, by selling the product of their farms; but generally it was not done for the purpose of selling out their holdings, but in order to be sure about the titles and have them confirmed, so as to know that for their little holdings, upon which they had been struggling for some years to make homes for themselves and their families, they were to have a tenure that was durable and permanent to them.

Now, Mr. President, as to the purchase of these lands from the Indians by the Government of the United States, I think generally it is provided that the proceeds shall be applied for the amelioration of the condition of the Indians, to enable them to buy live stock, to enable them to build grist mills, and to fence their premises, where there is danger of invasion, and for other useful purposes. If the Government did not purchase their lands, I think in most cases it would be obliged, as it is now doing to-day in many instances, to pay annuities to these Indians and to feed them and to clothe them, and, really, in many instances, to pauperize them. We had better, by far, give them the implements of agriculture and horses and cattle for breeding purposes and let them work out a living for themselves.

So I take it that the money which will be expended in the relinquishment of the titles to these Indian lands will be held in trust, or will be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior for the benefit of the Indians, and it is not a parallel to a case where the Government would go outside and purchase lands for the purpose of throwing them open to free settlement. Having once acquired the title to these lands, whether by purchase or by any other means, I believe it to be the duty of the Government to throw them open to settlement as free as any other portion of the public domain. Why should they discriminate as to the manner of entry? If it is thought wise to buy these lands at a reasonable price, let them be thrown open and let the law be uniform as to all the holdings of the United States. In this respect the constituents of the distinguished Senator from South Carolina have as fair and equal opportunity as those who live in the immediate vicinity of the lands to obtain homes for themselves, where they may rear and educate their children. I believe in the policy of throwing open these lands for free entry to the struggling yeomen of the country, where they may establish happy homes, enjoy the fruits of their own industry, and thereby contribute to the advancement of civilization to the great empire of the West and likewise to the wealth of the nation and of the world.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President——

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It is very evident that this discussion can not be completed this morning.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is nearly 2 o'clock.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I simply rose for the purpose of asking that the same order with reference to the bill might continue to-morrow morning that existed this morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that after the routine business of the morning hour to-morrow the Senate shall proceed to the consideration of this bill.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I think it can be disposed of in another morning.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to give notice of an amendment which I shall offer at the proper time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Connecticut? The Chair hears none.

Mr. TELLER. I think the Senator from Wisconsin who addressed the Senate can avoid all danger of appropriation by these traveling settlers he talks about, which I suppose exists somewhere, but I have never seen any of them in my experience in the West, by not allowing any homestead commutation at all on these lands. If the settlers are required to live five years, the people who ought to have the lands are sure to get them. I wish to move an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut by striking out, on page 6, all of the twenty-fifth line after "entry," and lines 1, 2, and 3 on page 7, and then inserting:

No person taking a homestead under the provisions of this act shall be allowed to commute under the provisions of section 2289 or section 2301 of the Revised Statutes.

I ask that the amendment be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. TELLER. I will have something to say on the subject to-morrow morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 2295) temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes.

COURTS IN MISSOURI.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a little bill, being the bill (S. 3316) to amend an act entitled "An act to create a new division in the western judicial district of the State of Missouri," approved January 24, 1901. It simply changes the time of holding court. The bill was prepared by the United States district judge.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a bill which will be read to the Senate for its information.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MAJ. CORNELIUS GARDENER.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the unfinished business, which was temporarily laid aside, be again taken up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment.

Mr. PATTERSON. I ask permission of the Senator from Massachusetts to offer a resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. PATTERSON. I offer a resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado asks unanimous consent to present at this time a resolution for consideration.

Mr. LODGE. Before I assent to temporarily laying aside the bill again I should like to hear the resolution read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Whereas the regiment of Maj. Cornelius Gardener has been ordered to the United States, but the exact time of its return is not known, but is stated to be somewhere from May 15 to June 1 proximo; and

Whereas Major Gardener is an important witness as to conditions in the Philippine Islands and other matters connected therewith and has resigned as civil governor of the province of Tayabas, that he may return with his regiment to the United States, but he can not probably reach the United States if he awaits his regiment's return until after the adjournment of the present session of Congress; and

Whereas the Philippine Committee, by a partisan vote, has declined to request the Secretary of War to request Major Gardener by cable to return immediately to the United States to testify as a witness before the Philippine Committee: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, directed to immediately cable the said Major Gardener to return to the United States without delay to give testimony before the said Philippine Committee.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. I can not yield for that resolution at this time. It will give rise to debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made. Objection is made to the reception of the resolution, the Chair understands.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; the resolution is not in order at this time.

Mr. SPOONER. Nor at any other time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The objection the Chair understands is to the reception of the resolution for consideration.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly, I object to laying aside the unfinished business for that purpose.

Mr. PATTERSON. I suppose the Senator from Massachusetts has no objection to the reception of the resolution and to its going over under the rule to be called up.

Mr. LODGE. I have no objection to its going over under the rule.

Mr. PATTERSON. And to its being printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the resolution would be received and would lie on the table under the rule.

Mr. LODGE. I have no objection to that course.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be received and printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be received and printed.

Mr. McCOMAS. Before that is disposed of, let me inquire if it is in order to offer a resolution for consideration here reflecting upon the action of a committee of the Senate on matters coming before the committee? The resolution recites some partisan action of the committee.

Mr. PATTERSON. That is not a reflection on the committee, as I understand it. I suppose that no member of the committee will say that that was a reflection. It is simply a fact.

Mr. SPOONER. It is simply the Senator's opinion of a fact.

Mr. PATTERSON. Well, that is the way we divided.

Mr. McCOMAS. That is not what the resolution states. They divided on it.

Mr. PATTERSON. The committee divided on partisan lines.

Mr. TILLMAN. On party lines.

Mr. PATTERSON. Well, party lines.

Mr. ALLISON. It was the misfortune of the majority that they could not bring the partisan minority into accord with their views.

There is another matter, Mr. President. I wish to protest against the numerous whereases of the resolution. Of course the Senator will have no objection to my suggesting that there are very many things in the preamble which are merely conjectural.

Mr. PATTERSON. No; not according to the testimony we had before the committee.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not care to discuss the question now. If the resolution goes over until to-morrow morning, we can look at it in print.

Mr. PATTERSON. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution is not before the Senate; it is on the table.

Mr. COCKRELL. And ordered printed.

Mr. ALLISON. Let it lie there for the present.

Mr. McCOMAS. I reserve my objection, Mr. President, pending that disposition of it.

Mr. SPOONER. I suppose the Senator from Colorado might have unanimous consent to strike out the word "partisan" and insert the word "party."

Mr. PATTERSON. If the Senator from Wisconsin desires to make that serious motion——

Mr. SPOONER. I do not care anything about it.

Mr. PATTERSON. When the resolution comes up I will then make no objection, but I am satisfied with the resolution as it is.

Mr. ALLISON. I object to the resolution, Mr. President, because it implicates the majority in a partisan view, whereas it is the minority, according to my view, that is acting in a partisan sense.

Mr. PATTERSON. It is but due to the minority to say that it is the minority that is endeavoring to get a well-informed and a competent witness here to give to the committee and to the country his knowledge of the question that we are investigating, and it is the side with which the honorable Senator from Iowa happens to be acting that is opposed to it.

Mr. ALLISON. Well, Mr. President, if I may be permitted by unanimous consent to say another word, I understand there is no difference in the committee as respects this witness when available. It is only a difference as to whether we shall have him to-morrow or a few days hence. That is the only question.

Mr. PATTERSON. Oh, there is this difference. It is conceded, I think, that if the witness waits to return with his regiment, according to the information we have his regiment will not arrive earlier than the 15th day of May, probably not before the 1st of June, and not even then. We have the further information that Major Gardener has resigned his position as civil governor of the province of Tabayas, that he may return with his regiment. Now, his regiment being ordered to return and he having resigned his civil functions, the minority of the committee went upon the theory that no hurt could befall the service in the Philippines by requesting Major Gardener to come here immediately so that he would reach here before the present session of Congress should end. All we want to do is to get the testimony of Major Gardener as to affairs in this province before Congress adjourns. We would probably have to do without it for a year or six or eight or ten months unless we do that.

Mr. ALLISON. That depends upon many circumstances. If the Senator from Colorado knows when Congress will adjourn he has reached a height of knowledge that I think very few of us have. What is proposed in this resolution is to segregate this officer from his regiment by a cable, whatever part he plays as an officer of the regiment, and allow him to come home in advance of his regiment.

Mr. PATTERSON. Yes; that is it.

Mr. ALLISON. The regiment will, I believe, be here long before Congress adjourns at this session.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator from Iowa permit me to ask him a question? I ask only for information.

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator from Iowa has been a member of the Senate and in public life a great many years, and is very much experienced in public affairs. Has he ever known the proposition to be made before that the Senate shall assume to displace the Commander in Chief of the Army of the United States under the Constitution and issue orders to Army officers?

Mr. ALLISON. I have never known such a proposition to be made before; but of course that is a matter for further consideration.

Mr. SPOONER. We will talk about that to-morrow.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. PATTERSON (to Mr. SPOONER). You did not ask me or I would have answered.

Mr. SPOONER. I will ask you.

Mr. PATTERSON. I will wait until to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PERKINS in the chair). Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the junior Senator from Colorado.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will yield to either Senator, if they want to continue their colloquy——

Mr. SPOONER. I will ask the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. TILLMAN. Before I break into it.

Mr. SPOONER. You will break in anyhow, and you are welcome.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has recognized the junior Senator from Colorado.

Mr. PATTERSON. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. TILLMAN. I was going to ask the chairman of the committee whether after the high pressure which he is exercising to have this bill passed it would not be fair for us to wait until Major Gardener gets here, if it is August, before we vote on the bill, and why should not the committee, with power to send for persons and papers, yield to the desire of the minority to get the truth from Major Gardener himself as to the situation in Tayabas.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. TILLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. How would it do to pass the bill with an amendment providing that it shall not go into effect until Major Gardener gets here?

Mr. TILLMAN. That would not do any good, because we might not pass the bill in the form in which it is now presented if we could get Major Gardener's testimony.

Mr. McCOMAS. We have it.

Mr. TILLMAN. No; we have not. We have not cross-examined him. I am waiting to hear from the chairman of the committee as to whether he is going to dragoon us into a vote or force us to talk before we hear from Major Gardener.

Mr. LODGE. I wish I could dragoon the Senator into a vote; but the Senator knows very well I can not do anything of the kind.

Mr. TILLMAN. I say dragoon us into a vote or into talking.

Mr. LODGE. There is not much dragooning into talking; the talk seems to go of itself. As far as I am concerned personally, and I can only speak for myself, I should not propose to hold the bill up for any one witness. It would be preposterous to do such a thing.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President——

Mr. PATTERSON. I do not know why the Senator from Wisconsin is so solicitous about this.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator has made a request of me, and I always like to comply with his requests. He asked me why I did not ask him the question I asked the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. PATTERSON. Then you concluded to ask it?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes; I did ask it.

Mr. PATTERSON. I have a very distinct recollection of the Secretary of War directing officers to go, and I know that they went, and to come, and I know that they came.

Mr. SPOONER. Of course.

Mr. PATTERSON. And if the Secretary of War has not got authority to direct an officer to come, then I am inclined to think the Secretary of War has been usurping authority he ought not to usurp.

Mr. SPOONER. Is that the answer?

Mr. PATTERSON. That will do for the present.

Mr. SPOONER. It will not do at all, Mr. President. It will not do for the present nor the future. There is no question between the Senator and myself that the Secretary of War or that the President has power to direct an officer to come and to go. That is not the question. The question is whether the Senate has the power to direct the Secretary of War to order an officer to come and to go.

Mr. PATTERSON. Yes; that is the trouble, I think, the Senator has——

Mr. SPOONER. That is the trouble the Senator has.

Mr. PATTERSON. But the real trouble is that the Secretary of War declines to act. Then that will be an issue we shall be ready to settle when the necessity arises.

Mr. SPOONER. Oh, no; the Senator asks the Senate to pass a resolution.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I suggest if the objection made by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] is the only one he has, the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON] will doubtless gladly change the resolution so as to read "requested" instead of "directed."

Mr. SPOONER. It would be very much more in harmony with the Constitution, which seems to have been forgotten for a moment on that side of the Chamber.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President——

Mr. SPOONER. I can only listen to one at a time.

Mr. CULBERSON. Would the Senator be satisfied if the language of the resolution were changed to "requested" instead of "directed?"

Mr. SPOONER. I would withdraw that particular objection.

Mr. PATTERSON. Through an excess of politeness not long ago I worded a resolution to the effect that the Secretary of War or the Attorney-General—I forget now which—should be requested to communicate certain facts to the Senate, and Senators upon the other side immediately informed me that that was not nearly peremptory enough. So I modified my resolution by using the word "directed" instead of "requested." It seems hard to please some Senators in a matter of manners.

Mr. SPOONER. I am quite amazed at the lack of discrimination indicated on this occasion, and only on this occasion, by the Senator from Colorado. When we want information from the Secretary of War or any other Cabinet officer, except the Secretary of State, we generally direct him to furnish it; but this is the first instance of which I have ever known where it was proposed that the Senate should pass a resolution directing the Secretary of War to issue an order of a particular character to an Army officer. My point does not go to the matter of etiquette, but to the matter of power.

Mr. PATTERSON. We will not stand upon trifles.

Mr. SPOONER. Oh!

Mr. PATTERSON. What we are after is the testimony of Major Gardener. What we want is to have Major Gardener in the United States as soon as he can properly get here, and if the word "requested" will get him instead of the word "directed," I will use the word "requested," and ask where the word "directed" is used that the word "requested" be inserted; so that we shall have no further controversy over it.

Mr. WELLINGTON. Mr. President, I would suggest that possibly the objection of the Senator from Wisconsin would be met if the Senator from Colorado would change the resolution to read that the President of the United States be requested to direct.

Mr. SPOONER. We have a right to request the President.

Mr. WELLINGTON. I think that would be the proper thing to do.

Mr. SPOONER. We have a right to request the President. The President is the Commander in Chief.

Mr. WELLINGTON. It ought to go to him with a request from the Senate.

Mr. SPOONER. A proposition to direct the Secretary of War or to direct the President—for you have the same right to direct one as you have the other in this matter—that he issue a particular order to an Army officer is as palpable an invasion and as unconstitutional an invasion of the constitutional prerogative of the President as it is possible to imagine. It is not a question of politeness or a question of etiquette; it is a matter of substance.

I am amazed, Mr. President, that the Constitution should have been even for a short period forgotten——

Mr. DUBOIS. Temporarily laid aside.

Mr. SPOONER. Temporarily laid aside on the other side of the Chamber. [Laughter.]

Mr. PATTERSON. If there is one condition any more than another in which we find the Senator from Wisconsin, it is that of amazement. I am afraid that he is so constantly amazed that his mind may take wings some time.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator need not be too much alarmed about my mind. Senatorial courtesy will not permit me to say how often I am amazed.

Mr. PATTERSON. I was going to say that if the Senator from Wisconsin is amazed oftener than he says he is amazed, then indeed he is perpetually amazed.

But, Mr. President, there was no controversy in the committee over the form or over the language of the resolution. It was a matter of substance. The minority of the committee want the presence of Major Gardener as speedily as we can have it. I will not say that the majority of the committee do not want Major Gardener, but I do say that the majority of the committe declines by its vote to expedite in any way the coming of Major Gardener; and what we want is expedition, so that the Senate and the country may have the benefit of Major Gardener's knowledge of the conditions in the Philippines before this Congress adjourns.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator from Colorado is a good lawyer, and I should like to ask him a question. Does he think the Senate has power to pass a resolution directing the Secretary of War to issue an order to an Army officer?

Mr. PATTERSON. We have passed that stage, Mr. President.

Mr. SPOONER. Oh, no.

Mr. PATTERSON. And I do not desire to enter into a colloquy with the Senator from Wisconsin, because I have had enough of colloquy with him to learn that——

Mr. SPOONER. I am not amazed that the Senator does not want a colloquy with me. [Laughter.]

Mr. PATTERSON. However convincing the answers of Senators may be to the numerous questions propounded by the Senator from Wisconsin, he never acknowledges his error; so that it is quite idle to enter into a controversy of that character with the Senator. We have passed that stage. We have agreed that the resolution shall be amended in any way to conform to the rules of etiquette or to the Constitution, we care not——

Mr. SPOONER. Which.

Mr. PATTERSON. We care not which. That will do. It is a matter of substance. What we want is the adoption of a resolution that will secure by cable the presence of Major Gardener here.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I should like to get some light from some source, and as the Senator from Wisconsin is shedding light on the Constitution this morning, I presume I had better direct my inquiry to him.

What is the force and effect, and what power does it confer, when a committee is appointed by the Senate, or when one of its standing committees is authorized by a vote of the Senate to investigate affairs in the Philippine Islands, and to send for persons and papers? Are military officers exempted from that power?

Mr. SPOONER. Has there been any military officer subpœnaed by the committee?

Mr. TILLMAN. It is a question of trying to get a subpœna issued. The committee, as I understand, refused to issue a subpœna, and the minority—the partisan minority, if we must be particular about our phrases——

Mr. SPOONER. I will not quarrel with the Senator about that expression.

Mr. TILLMAN. I say the minority, feeling that they were being muzzled, or that the investigation was being suppressed, or smothered——

Mr. SPOONER. I did not understand the word used by the Senator from South Carolina. Did he say "muzzled" or "muddled?"

Mr. TILLMAN. Muzzled.

Mr. PATTERSON. If the Senator from South Carolina will permit me, his statement does not do exact justice to the committee. The committee has not refused to issue a subpœna, but the committee has refused to expedite the coming here of Major Gardener in the way that has been suggested.

Mr. TILLMAN. The resolution itself having been brought into the Senate, and the statement having been made that the minority of the committee have been refused by the majority the securing of witnesses whom the minority considered essential to this investigation——

Mr. PATTERSON. We want to get the witnesses here as speedily as possible.

Mr. TILLMAN. Well, everything, you know, goes along leisurely here; and if there is an effort to smother—the Senator from Wisconsin was particular a while ago about my pronunciation of the word "muzzled" and tried to make it "muddled"——

Mr. SPOONER. I did not understand you.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator is not ready to pursue the question of "muzzled" or "muddled," we will take it that the committee are muzzled.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not think the Senator ought to ask me to pursue that question.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am indifferent. What I am after, as a member of the Senate, is to have a thorough, complete, and searching investigation of affairs in the Philippine Islands. If Major Gardener is the witness now most desired by that committee, which has so ably been pressing the inquiry thus far, I think the Senate owes it to the committee to pass such a resolution as will expedite the departure of Major Gardener from Manila and his arrival within the reach of the committee. I take it that that is all the Senator from Colorado had in view when he offered the resolution. I do not think the majority can afford to appear before the country in the attitude of refusing to get this man here before this bill is voted on.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, it is perhaps due to the committee that a word should be said respecting the byplay on this resolution as indicated in this debate. No one objects to the testimony of Major Gardener, or to his appearing before the committee as a witness.

It was disclosed on yesterday—I will not say where or how, for I believe I am not permitted under the rules to do so—that Major Gardener's regiment is likely to depart from the Philippines at any time after the 1st of May——

Mr. CARMACK. Oh, no, Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. One word, if the Senator from Iowa will allow me to interrupt him.

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. The language that was used by Major Gardener in the letter which he wrote was "My regiment may not leave Manila before May 15 or June 1." It may leave before; it is quite possible it has already left.

Mr. ALLISON. I think that language, which I understand is an exact quotation, will be accepted. But what does that imply? It implies that this regiment may leave at any moment, but it may not get away until the middle of May or even until the 1st of June. We do not know, as the Senator from Massachusetts suggests, whether this proposed witness——

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. ALLISON. I do.

Mr. TILLMAN. Is it possible that the Secretary of War can not inform the Senate committee, or the Senate, as to the limit of time within which that regiment will leave Manila?

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, the Committee on the Philippines and no member of the committee has yet had an opportunity to see the Secretary of War. This matter was brought into the committee, if I may say so, on yesterday for the first time, and we were all called upon to exercise our judgment this morning upon that question. It, of course, is very easy to ascertain from the War Department when this regiment will depart from Manila, and when it is likely to arrive here; but that does not happen to answer the purpose of this resolution, which is, that Major Gardener may be decorated by having a cablegram sent to him to bring him here in hot haste, in the face of the controversies which are existing respecting various matters in the Philippines, which I shall not enter into, in order that he may testify before a committee of this Senate, when it is perfectly well known and believed by me—I only speak for myself—that, as indicated in the letter of Major Gardener, if cabled for, he will come in advance of his regiment, showing, of course, at least a willingness to appear here before this Senate committee and state what he knows.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. ALLISON. I do.

Mr. TILLMAN. I trust no one supposes for a moment that I or any other Senator here has anything to impute to Major Gardener that he is unwilling to appear and testify. It is the committee that we feel is not using due diligence in getting the witnesses the minority want.

Mr. ALLISON. I am very glad to see the Senator from South Carolina vindicate Major Gardener before he is assailed by anybody; and also glad that the Senator takes such an intense interest about this matter, now for the first time brought to the attention of the Senate, and only known to me for the first time within about twenty-four hours.

Everybody who knows anything about this investigation knows what there is in it and the scope of it. Whether or not this body will authorize the committee to pursue the investigation after this session shall close, I do not suppose it is within the purview of the committee, or any member of the committee, to summon the Army of the United States, or that portion of it which is now in the Philippines, to come here and testify before the committee; but if we are to summon one witness from the Philippines, who is taking or has taken a part in the great affairs going on there, we must summon other witnesses, members of the Army, for a like purpose. It is a grave and serious question whether we shall summon one governor of a province who, by accident or otherwise—which I shall not now discuss—has been, more or less, brought before the committee, the Senate, and the country. If a minority of the committee, or a member of the committee, may summon the governor of one province, another member of the committee may summon the other 34 governors who are performing their duties in the civil government of the Philippines.

Whilst we expect, and I have been willing and, so far as I know, every member of the committee has been willing, that any witness who has information upon these subjects should be summoned to appear before the committee, yet it is a grave question as to whether we shall summon one witness after another, who may be for the time being 7,000 miles away, or, if this investigation is to be as thorough as the Senator from South Carolina intimates, whether or not a committee of this body should not go where the facts regarding these matters may be ascertained and where the responsibility for what has been done must be assumed by somebody.

For one, knowing and believing, as I know and believe, that Major Gardener, according to his own statement, can come here long before this session will adjourn, I am not, as one member of that committee, willing to order a cablegram to be sent to him to come here in hot haste in advance of his regiment, in order that he may appear before the committee and testify. I am willing that he shall come, and I am anxious that he shall come before we adjourn, and I am sure he will come. Therefore I am opposed to asking the Secretary of War to send a cablegram to him when we know that he will come in time to testify.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. And Major Gardener's statement is already before us.

Mr. ALLISON. As the Senator from Indiana very properly suggests to me, we have already before us a long statement from Major Gardener respecting what he has done and his observations in the Philippines.

Mr. President, whatever may be the motive of my friend from Colorado—and I am sure it is a proper and just motive—there is no haste to have this witness here within two weeks or three weeks or four weeks. Therefore it is that I am opposed to sending off a cablegram to Major Gardener, or instructing or requesting the Secretary of War to cable for him. It is a play to ask for it, and it ought not to be done.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, the only question presented by the resolution offered by the Senator from Colorado is whether or not we shall have the testimony of Major Gardener before the committee. According to Major Gardener's letter, which has been read, he may not leave the Philippines before the 1st of June; he may not leave then; he may not leave before the 1st of July; and all the chances are, in my opinion, that he will not get to the United States until after this Congress shall have adjourned.

Now, the question presented by this resolution is simply whether or not his testimony shall be had before the committee. He will be coming home some time during the summer. This resolution will simply expedite by a short time his coming home, but within a time which will enable the committee to have the benefit of his testimony.

If the committee or if the Senate want the testimony of Major Gardener, it will vote for this resolution. If it does not want his testimony, it will vote against it.

In my opinion, if this committee had been at all eager to secure information; if it had been at all eager to carry out the purposes, the objects, and the duties with which it was charged, it would have asked the Secretary of War or the President to cable for Major Gardener to come to the United States.

Major Gardener has presented a statement of unusual and exceptional interest. There is no sense in attempting to place every other officer in the Philippine Islands upon the same footing as he. He has presented a statement of such importance and gravity that the Secretary of War deliberately suppressed it and sought to keep it from the knowledge of this committee and from the knowledge of the American people.

Now, sir, under those circumstances, I say it is a matter of the gravest importance that Major Gardener's testimony should be had and that the statements he has made in a general way should be made more in detail. This Congress and the people of the country should have the benefit of his knowledge. To refuse to have him summoned here is simply to say that this committee shall not have the benefit of his testimony. That is what it means, for I repeat that, in my judgment, unless this resolution is passed Major Gardener will not get to the United States until after this Congress shall have adjourned.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, this testimony is exceedingly important, and if we are going to have an investigation to find out the condition of affairs in the Philippines, we ought to do so in a manly and a fair way. Simply to subpœna three or four officials from the Philippine Islands to come before this committee, who have declared all along that they are in sympathy with the policy which we are pursuing in those islands and leaving out those who lean toward the other side and who could give that side of the question is manifestly unfair and unjust and will not enable us to reach an intelligent conclusion.

I have before me a short synopsis of a report which Major Gardener laid before the Secretary of War in 1901, and the Committee on the Philippines had this statement before them on the 10th of April, 1902. The Committee on the Philippines knew the contents of this statement two weeks ago and had ample time to send for and to get this witness and to have him here in a few days. Now, let us see briefly what he says:

> The attitude of the Army, thereby meaning most of its officers and soldiers, is, however, decidedly hostile to the provincial and municipal government in this province and to civil government in these islands in general. In Manila especially it is intensely so, even among the higher officers.

This is a very important witness. He continues:

> The work of the Commission in the establishment of provincial governments is ridiculed, even in presence of the natives. It is openly stated that the Army should remain in charge for the next twenty years. Outrages committed by officers and soldiers against natives in an organized municipality and province, when reported by the presidente or governor to the military authorities, are often not punished.

This is from the governor of a province, stating to the Secretary of War the condition of affairs existing in his province and existing in the Philippine Islands. He says further:

> This, in my opinion, is unfortunate, because loyal natives begin to fear that local self-government promised them will not last long, and that any slight disturbance in a province may at any time be made the pretext to again place it under military rule, and this is just the thing the insurgents at heart most desire.
> It has been stated that a Filipino or any Oriental does not appreciate just or kindly treatment and that he considers it an evidence of weakness, and that severe and harsh measures are the only ones that are permanently effective with Filipinos. I have found that just and kind treatment, uniform and continued, is the only way by which these people can be made permanently our friends and satisfied with United States sovereignty.
> Having been stationed six years on the Rio Grande, I am well acquainted with the natives of the State of Tamaulipas, Mexico, and while stationed in the province of Santa Clara, Cuba, I visited every town in that province, and was able to observe the intelligence and education there. > CORNELIUS GARDENER,
> Major, Thirteenth Infantry, U. S. Army, Provincial Governor.

This statement is dated Lucena, P. I., December 16, 1901. That is only a part of the matter addressed to the Secretary of War, and this letter was before the Secretary of War within a few days after December 16, 1901, and was before the Philippine Committee on the 8th of April, 1902.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator from Georgia permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. CLAY. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Does the Senator from Georgia or any other Senator upon the other side attack or question any statement made in this letter and report?

Mr. CLAY. In which letter and report?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The one the Senator has been reading from and to which he has referred.

Mr. CLAY. The letter I have read?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; Governor Gardener's letter and report.

Mr. CLAY. No.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Does the Senator know of anyone upon the other side who does?

Mr. CLAY. I do not know. I desire——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Then I desire to ask the Senator from Georgia this question. Since the Governor's statement and letter are before the Senate and before all the Senators upon the other side, and since they do not question it and they do not assail it or attack it, why make a special distinction by sending by cable for this man whose statement is already before them and which they do not attack?

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. CLAY. With pleasure.

Mr. CULBERSON. In answer to the Senator from Indiana, as a member of the Committee on the Philippines I will state that we want the testimony of Gardener because the truth of his report is attacked by Governor Taft and the Secretary of War. That is the reason why we want his testimony.

Mr. CLAY. This report was made in December, 1901. It is simply a short letter addressed to the Secretary of War. The witness could come before the Committee on the Philippines, and he could give his experience previous to that time and since that time, and go over the entire situation, and, I hope, would be able to convince my friend the Senator from Indiana of the cruelty and outrages which we have committed in those islands.

Now, it should not be said that simply because he wrote a letter a year ago to the Secretary of War he ought not to be brought here. He ought to be brought here, and he ought to be required to give a statement from the beginning to the end as to our method of conducting the war in the Philippines. If we have not been cruel, let us clear our country from the charge that has been made against our Army.

Mr. President, it does seem to me that our friends on the other side of the Chamber and on both sides of the Chamber should be perfectly willing for any truthful and upright witness to come before the committee and make a statement and give the truth as to our transactions in these islands. All we want is the truth. I am not here for the purpose of assailing any Army officer, and for one I would say nothing against an Army officer until he was tried and until the proof was before us and we could see exactly what the testimony was; but the Philippine Committee ought to have the right and privilege of hearing both sides of this question, presented in an intelligent and fair way.

Mr. MCCOMAS. Mr. President, this is an empty controversy. This witness will be here. He may be on his way to-day or to-morrow. He will be here before this bill is passed and long before the committee finish their investigation.

As has been well said by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], he is one civil governor, and there are other civil governors, and we should send for all and examine all if we send for one. The one whom the minority profess to want so much will be here very soon and will be examined.

This four-page report, as was said by the Senator from Indiana, covers the whole sweep and scope of his experience in the islands as civil governor of Tayabas; and my purpose in rising was to remind the Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY] that he happened to omit a pertinent part of the report, which I desire to read as a supplement. It is not the sentence in which Major Gardener complains that "almost without exception soldiers, and also many officers, refer to the natives in their presence as 'niggers,' and the natives are beginning to understand what the word 'nigger' means." I think the Senator from Georgia and I understand how that offense might be committed if the soldiers happened to come from a slave State.

Then he speaks of the other conduct of some of the soldiers over there. Here is a sentence which makes the majority eager and anxious to secure Major Gardener's attendance. It is found on the fourth page of the long report:

> The work of the Philippine Commission and the laws that have been enacted by it are everywhere favorably commented upon by the natives. The efforts being made for the general education of the people are appreciated by all. The provincial government and municipal governments established are slowly bringing order out of chaos and anarchy, and there begins to be visible everywhere in this province progress and prosperity.

That is the testimony of this soldier, who has been made civil governor, and who therefore has a feeling against the remaining power of the military in his province. He is eager, instinct with the American sense for liberty and freedom, that there should be more of the civil and less of the military there, and he informs us, and when he comes here he will tell us, that the current has been one of progress and prosperity, peace and happiness, not only in the province where he has been governor, but wherever he has been in the Philippines.

We, too, want him here, but we do not want to squander unnecessary money or to consume unnecessary time in sending a cable to a man who may be coming here now, and whose story will be one of credit to the country and faith in the future of civil government in the Philippines. I wish he were here to give his testimony on this most important question, when the military is being taken away and the civil authority is everywhere coming to the front. I wish he were here now to testify as he will testify in behalf of this very government bill. It might persuade some of the Senators, who seem eager that there shall not be a temporary civil government established by Congress, to cease their delaying and hasten the time when this government bill may become the law and be put in force, with all its beneficence and with all the progress and prosperity which he will testify will follow.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I never for a moment supposed that there was anything partisan or partial in the attitude of Major Gardener. I never heard of Major Gardener until his suppressed report was given to the country, and upon reading that report I became quite convinced that if there was a military officer in the Philippines who looked upon the situation from an impartial standpoint and impelled by patriotic motives, that man is Major Gardener. I have no doubt in the world that he will give his countenance and support as a military officer to the civil government under the Philippine Commission in the Philippine Islands. We want to hear him talk upon that subject, as well as upon the others.

I was more than pained when the usually serene and impartial senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] closed his remarks by suggesting that the effort to get Major Gardener here was a play upon the part of somebody. Senators upon the other side will not deny for a moment the importance of the information that Major Gardener can give to the country. Surely when he tells his superior officer that 33⅓ per cent of the population of a province which before the war contained 300,000 people have disappeared from the face of the earth as the result of war and famine and sickness we, as part of the legislative body of this nation, should not be content with that simple statement. If it is a fact, we want to know it. If it is a fact that 100,000 people out of 300,000 are resting in graves, brought there within the past two or three years by war and famine and sickness, we want to know the particulars. We want to know the details of the circumstances that have resulted in that horrible end. We want to know if there is anything that can be done by the Congress of the United States to arrest the mortality; whether or not help is needed in the nature of food or medicine or medical attendance; whether that mortality is continuing or not. We want to know all about it in a perfectly fair, impartial, and nonpartisan way.

If it is true that the civil government is to bring peace and prosperity to the islands, we want to know it. But, Mr. President, we also want to know whether or not it is the promise that has been held out to the Philippine people of self-government, of the right to make their own laws, of a voice in the disposition of their lands and their money and their taxes, which is making the Philippine Commission and its government pleasing to many of the Philippine people. If it is, we know and we will be able to point out that the measure which is now before the Senate takes from the Philippine people the last vestige of self-government, for it is a measure which deprives them of participation in their own domestic affairs and places the disposition of the lands and mines and all the property in the Philippine Islands and the taxes those people will be compelled to pay under the sole control of a band of foreigners—foreigners to them, foreign in civilization and foreign in feeling.

It is important to have this Army officer here before the bill is disposed of in the Senate, not only that we may obtain information of the dreadful mortality which has swept over that island within the past two or three years, but with respect to what the real expectations of the people of the Philippine Islands are as to the kind and character of the government that the Congress of the United States will give to them.

It is not a question of decorating Major Gardener with a cable. Again, if the Senator from Wisconsin will permit me to use a word which if he has not coined he seems to have taken out a copyright for, I was amazed that the genial, the prudent, the conservative senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] should urge an objection such as that. One reason stated why he and those who believe with him do not desire to secure the prompt attendance of Major Gardener was that they did not want to decorate him with a cable message to him.

Mr. President, I do not understand that there is any decoration in the summoning of any witness, wherever he may be. It gives him no particular distinction. The people of the Philippine Islands and the Army and the people of this country know that Major Gardener, as governor of the province of Tayabas, made a report, probably without any expectation upon his part that it would even receive publicity, or that it would be commented upon by the press or by the people or by the Congress.

As governor of one of the civil provinces of the Philippine Islands, Major Gardener was requested by the Philippine Commission to send to the Secretary of War or to it a report from the province of which he was governor, and it was in response to that command from his superior officer that he sat down in the field of his labors and his observations and penned the report and forwarded it to the president of the Commission, and the president of the Commission delivered it to the Secretary of War. Major Gardener was hardly known to any considerable number of the people of the country at the time when, in his honest and straightforward and, I am inclined to think, uncolored manner, he told his Government the condition of the province of which he was appointed civil governor.

This is the condition in which the senior Senator from Iowa, and I do not believe I transgress any rule of practice or propriety when I say that this is the condition in which the majority of the Philippine Committee, place this investigation. We are denied access to residents of the Philippine Islands as witnesses, and we are permitted to call no one as a witness who has not been in the Philippine Islands.

Requests have been made for subpœnas for persons who live in the Philippine Islands and they have been denied. Suggestions have been made to call witnesses who have not been to the Philippine Islands and they have been denied. So the minority of the committee is practically confronted with this condition on the committee. It is prohibited from calling anybody here as a witness who has not been in the Philippine Islands, and it is prohibited from sending to the Philippine Islands by the process of the Senate for any witness who is in the Philippine Islands.

We are compelled to rely upon the witnesses whom the majority of the committee will call before the committee, or upon such information as is voluntarily supplied to the minority of the committee by testimony and facts that may not be palatable to the majority. We desire to break these chains. We desire to have the shackles stricken from the limbs of the minority of the committee. We want to get testimony from the Philippine Islands, and we do not wish to be retained in the condition of being compelled to rely upon those alone who have been in the Philippines and be limited alone to those with information who happen to be in the United States.

Now, Mr. President, recurring again to the resolution, no man can say that Major Gardener will return. Major Gardener, in the letter that is spoken of—it was not a letter to any of the minority of the committee—states that his regiment may sail by the 15th of May. It may not until the 1st of June and, for aught that appears in the letter, it may not sail until the 1st of July.

Why should the Senate balk at the cost of a cablegram? The Senator from Maryland [Mr. MCCOMAS] urges seriously as his objection to sending by cable for Major Gardener the cost that the Government would be put to in sending a cablegram to him. It may relieve the Senator from Maryland to know that the Government of the United States has special rates over ocean cables, that the Government of the United States does not pay nearly so much for cable messages as do private citizens, and that the cost, therefore, of cabling to bring the Major here probably would not exceed two or three or four or five dollars; and if that is in the way of absolutely securing the presence of Major Gardener before Congress adjourns for the present session, then I can speak for the minority of the committee when I say we will advance the sum of money necessary to send the cablegram.

Mr. WELLINGTON. Mr. President, I should like to understand the parliamentary status of the resolution offered by the Senator from Colorado.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. As the Chair understands it, objection being made, the resolution went over.

Mr. WELLINGTON. Then I presume the whole debate has been by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The whole debate is——

Mr. WELLINGTON. I should like further to ask whether the Senator from Colorado has consented to the modification of his resolution?

Mr. PATTERSON. I have consented to modify it so as to request the President to do so by cable.

Mr. WELLINGTON. Then, I believe neither side can afford to object to the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the senior Senator from Maryland that the discussion is upon the bill for the establishment of civil government in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. WELLINGTON. I understand that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The discussion has been on that bill, which is now in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. WELLINGTON. However, the whole debate which has been going on has not been with respect to the Philippine bill, but as to the resolution of the Senator from Colorado. I desire to say only one word concerning the resolution.

Having been modified, as the Senator from Colorado has consented to have it modified, I believe neither side should object to it. If it be true that the majority of the Committee upon the Philippines are anxious for the testimony of this officer, then they should not object to it, and I am sure that the minority does not object to it. I believe the majority can not afford to object to it. If the majority intend to pass the bill now before the Senate, they owe it to themselves; they owe it to the country to have a full and fair and just examination of all the light that can be offered upon this great question.

I believe that Major Gardener will be an important witness. I believe he should be brought here as quickly as possible, and the absurd objection made by one member of this body that the expense should stand in the way is positively not to be considered. But if the majority are in earnest about this matter, then they owe it to themselves not to object to the resolution.

The Senator from Wisconsin objected to the resolution, and, I think, very properly so, because it was not worded as it should have been. I do not believe the Senate has the right to direct the Secretary of War to summon an officer, but I do believe that the Senate has the right to request the President of the United States to direct the Secretary of War to do that thing.

Now, then, if that be the situation, there should be no more words about it. Let us pass the resolution and say that we are all engaged in the same matter—engaged in finding light upon this great question, without which the present bill should not be passed.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, in my short service in the Senate I have never known it to be the practice to drag the affairs of committees in here for discussion. That is a pleasing fashion which the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON] has originated. However, in defense of the committee, as it has been brought in here, I desire to make a few statements of fact to the Senate.

The committee began on the 31st day of January its hearings under a resolution passed on the 29th day of January. Between that time and a week ago Monday, when I made up the figures, there had been 67 working days when the Senate was in session. We had sat and held hearings on 43 of the 67. I think, in view of the great pressure of business on Senators, that is a very creditable record in the work of the committee, for in addition to the 43 days of hearings we prepared two bills and the subcommittee on the matter of coinage involved in this bill held a number of hearings which are not included in the 43 I have mentioned.

We have called a large number of witnesses. With the exception of Governor Taft and Mr. Barrows, who had been assistant superintendent of education in the Philippines, every one of the witnesses was asked for by the minority. The minority submitted lists of names. One name has been refused. He is a gentleman, a citizen of this country, who has never been in the Philippine Islands, whom they desire to have come here and give his opinions, no doubt of exceeding value, upon the Philippine question. The committee decided, as I think wisely, that if they were going to admit as witnesses citizens of the United States who had never been in the Philippine Islands, and who had no more knowledge than that which the committee itself had or the Senate had or any man had who could read, if they were to open the door to endless argument and discussion of that kind, all witnesses from whom facts could be obtained would be driven out and the committee would become a mere debating ground for advocates of the opposing sides. He is the only witness for whom a summons has been demanded with respect to whom the request has been refused, with the exception of the list of to-day, to which I am coming.

Major Gardener's report was made in December, and reached this country at the end of February. It made some sweeping attacks upon officers of the Army in the Philippine Islands. The Secretary of War thought, in justice to the officers thus attacked, it was proper that the matter should be investigated by the commanding general in the Philippine Islands, and that both the charges of Major Gardener and the defense of the officers and soldiers within his province whom he had attacked should be laid before the Senate together. The existence of the report was subsequently made known by General Miles. It was asked for and was sent in. It contains, as I have said, reflections of a general character upon the conduct of our soldiers and officers there. I think Major Gardener ought to appear before the committee. I have every intention, so far as I am concerned, to bring him before the committee.

A private letter was written by Major Gardener, I think before the question of his report had been raised in this country at all, to a member of the majority of the committee. In pursuit of their policy of suppression, that private letter to one of the members was laid before the committee in order to give the committee knowledge of Major Gardener's desire to testify and of the period at which he expected to return. He stated in that letter that his regiment was ordered home and that he was coming with it, and had resigned his civil governorship for that purpose. But he said the regiment might not start until the 15th of May or the 1st of June. The committee does not know, it has not had time within the last twenty-four hours to inquire and has not apparently desired to know as a committee, where that regiment is, when it is going to start, and when it may be expected here. All we know is that some sixty days ago Major Gardener thought it might not start before the 15th of May or the 1st of June. As a preliminary to sending for him it seems to me it would be well to find out where the regiment is and when it is coming home.

Now, I desire to have Major Gardener here, and I desire to have him here before Congress adjourns. I want to hear his testimony and every word he has to say. If we can get him here in the usual manner, by his return with his regiment, I think it is much better that it should come about in that way. If we are going to send a special cable to Major Gardener and bring him over here to testify, then I want the other 30 governors and more whose reports are printed brought here by cable to testify.

Of course Senators on the other side think Major Gardener is of enormous importance. Every witness is of importance who happens to agree with them. No witness is of importance who happens to think that the United States civil government and military government has done well in the Philippine Islands. I think the testimony of those men who think well of the government and make good reports is just as important as that of the man who had charges to make. I want to hear both sides and all sides. I am not here to bring out one man alone or one side alone. If we are going to cable for the one man among the thirty-odd governors who has got an attack upon the Army in his report and we ought to hear him, then I want to hear from the rest of the 30 governors whose reports are here, and not one of whom has made such an attack. Let us have them all.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Massachusetts whether he has made any suggestion about bringing the other governors here or not?

Mr. LODGE. I make it now.

Mr. PATTERSON. Very well. I want to say, and I know I speak the sentiments of the majority, from frequent conversations with them, that so far as the minority is concerned in the case of any and every man whom the honorable Senator from Massachusetts and the majority of the committee desire to have before the committee, whether he is in the Philippine Islands or in China or at the furthermost parts of the earth, we will vote with them to bring them here, however expeditiously they may desire to have them.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, now that we know the position of the minority, I may be allowed to proceed. I say if we call one governor we must call all. If we are going to enter on that course, we are entering on a very large field, and one which I think the Senate ought to consider very carefully. I think before we enter upon it at all we want to consider very carefully the question whether we are going to bring 10,000 miles many, many witnesses here, as we should have to do, or whether we should send a special committee there. I think that is a matter which ought to be carefully considered. I do not think that the question whether Major Gardener gets here a week sooner or a week later is of any special importance. I do think it is of great importance whether we enter upon the policy of cabling out there to have civil governors and other officers of the Army brought over here, or whether we should intrust that work, if the Senate thinks it ought to be done, to a committee to go into the islands. It was for that reason that the majority of the Committee on the Philippines decided that it was not worth while at this time to cable to Major Gardener alone, as he was coming home in any event.

Mr. President, as I have said, we have called all these witnesses already—every one with the approbation of the minority, all but two at their request. We have a list of seven or eight witnesses, who are requested by the minority, whom we are now endeavoring to get in various parts of the country, from California to Massachusetts. The committee has agreed to summon Admiral Dewey and General Anderson, both requested by the minority of the committee. The minority of the committee also requested that we should bring Aguinaldo from Manila, Mabini and Pilo Del Pilar from Guam, Howard W. Bray, an Englishman, who has done most of the writing for the Philippine junta and has been their adviser, from Hongkong, Sixto Lopez, who is in this country, and two Associated Press correspondents, one of whom is in Pekin and the other of whom is in Venezuela, I believe, watching the revolution there. Those names were submitted to the committee.

Supposing at the time that the two Associated Press correspondents were in this country the committee agreed that they should be called. The others the committee voted not to call. One of them was a British subject. I think there was no great desire to hear what a British subject, resident in Hongkong, had to say about our Army or our management in the Philippine Islands, especially as he was the manager of the Filipino junta. As to the others they are prisoners of the United States, with the exception of Lopez, who has carried on his part of the revolution in this country.

Now, Mr. President, the feeling in the committee after a great deal of discussion was that it was not desirable to invite men who had been in arms against the United States, and who were now prisoners of war, to testify; that in any event, even if it was desirable to bring men who had been recently in arms against the United States to testify as to the conduct of the American Army, it was not worth while to bring them to this country; that if we were going to enter upon that inquiry and hear witnesses of that character it had better be done by a special committee sent to the Philippine Islands. There are witnesses now on the list and names of witnesses suggested who are coming before the committee which will occupy the committee in all the time it can give (and it has been sitting as a rule every day in the week) from now until adjournment, whenever that adjournment occurs.

Mr. President, I have made a perfectly fair statement of the business of the committee, of the action which has been taken, of the witnesses we have called and have refused to call. I think the committee has been diligent in business. There has been no desire on the part of any member of that committee on either side to suppress any testimony whatever. There is no desire on my part or on that of any member of the majority to suppress the testimony of Major Gardener. We want to hear from him. I expect we shall, without any doubt, before the present session ends. The reason why we refused to cable to him, the reason why we have refused to enter upon the consideration of witnesses in the Philippine Islands, is that it opens up so large a field at such vast expense and brings in so many other questions that the majority of the committee did not feel that we ought to enter upon it at this time.

If the Senate desires to continue this investigation and get the testimony of all the witnesses in the Philippines, in my judgment the only proper way to do it is to send a subcommittee out there. I do not think that it is physically possible to bring before the committee here from islands 7,000 miles from our shores this shoal of witnesses, for they would be very numerous, and get any practical result. You can not hear more than a certain number of witnesses in a week. We all of us are obliged to be in the Senate; we all of us are obliged to attend to meetings of other committees, and the time that we have is limited. If the inquiry is to be carried into the Philippine Islands to hear the natives, to hear the insurgents, then we ought to have a special committee for that purpose to go to those islands and devote months to the inquiry. Here we have to keep the inquiry within some practicable and possible lines.

With the exception of last week, when, owing to the absence from town of three of the members of the committee, who asked for a postponement, desiring to hear the completion of General MacArthur's testimony, we have been sitting, I repeat, every day when it was practicable for us to do so. There has been no loss of time. We have taken, together with the material that we have asked for and received from the War Department, a record now of more than 2,000 pages. We are ready to go on with the work. We are ready to do the best we can and get all the testimony that is possible. But if the Senate is going to broaden this inquiry into all officers of the provinces there, into the leaders in the insurrection there, among all the Army officers there, and hear the accused as well as the accuser, then the Senate must take that decision upon itself and must decide whether it desires to enter upon that larger field. Every moment of time that this committee can give or that any committee can give to this inquiry here and now, in the midst of the session, will be occupied by the witnesses already on the list and by those who are obviously to come forward still.

Mr. President, the names of that committee are before the country and before the Senate. I do not believe that anyone who will take the trouble to read the names of the majority of that committee will suppose for one instant that there is any man on it who wants to suppress testimony or hide facts. There is no sense in that. If it is to be a political question merely, the poorest kind of politics is the politics of suppression. It would not only be wrong to suppress facts; it would be inconceivable stupidity; and there is no desire on the part of any member of that majority to suppress facts. I feel that I have done wrong to my colleagues of the majority in even saying thus much in their defense.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts, with a good deal of heat, charges that we are influenced by some partisan motive in seeking to secure the testimony of Major Gardener and in not demanding the testimony of every other provincial governor in the Philippine Islands.

The fact is that Major Gardener has disclosed a state of affairs that demands investigation by the Senate. He has made a statement which constitutes a grave accusation against the military conduct of our officers in that particular province, and that demands investigation. Where governors of other provinces make no statement of anything wrong, bring no charges and no accusation, there is nothing in particular to investigate. But here is something to investigate. Here is a statement made by a military officer, acting at the time as the governor of a province, who says that the conduct of the military officers in that province has done much to incite the natives, to destroy their kindly feeling, and to perpetuate their hostility to the United States.

Now, that presents a statement which demands investigation. If the governor of another province makes a report which does not disclose any state of affairs demanding investigation, there is no particular reason why the governor of that province should be summoned here to testify.

So far as this investigation is concerned, Mr. President, the scope of the investigation has never been fixed either by the Senate or by the committee itself. It is simply just as wide and just as narrow as the committee chooses to make it. It may say, "We will hear this witness upon this question and we will not hear this other witness upon the other question;" not because it is not pertinent to the inquiry, because the scope of the inquiry has never been defined. You can not say that any question or any particular line of investigation before the committee is not pertinent, because the committee itself has never defined what is to be the scope and character and purpose of the inquiry.

The Senator from Massachusetts spoke of the exclusion of a witness who was presented to the committee. I am not going into the action of that committee, which I believe I have no right to discuss in the Senate, but I say it was distinctly understood, I believe, by every Democratic member of the committee that every member, upon his own responsibility as a Senator, had a right to direct that any witness should be called or subpœnaed and offered to the committee as a witness. Of course, the competency of his testimony was to be passed upon by the Senate.

The Senator says that a certain witness had been excluded because he had nothing but opinions to offer. Why, Mr. President, the committee excluded that witness—refused to have him called or subpœnaed—without any knowledge whatever upon the part of any member of the committee as to what his testimony would be.

Mr. BURTON. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. CARMACK. Certainly.

Mr. BURTON. What witness was that?

Mr. CARMACK. I will inform the Senator. Mr. Edward Atkinson, of Massachusetts, was the gentleman whose testimony was to have been offered before the committee as a witness.

Mr. BURTON. Oh!

Mr. CARMACK. The committee decided, without any knowledge whatever as to what his testimony would be, that it should be excluded on the ground that it would not be competent, if they did know what it was, simply because he had not been to the Philippines. And yet, Mr. President, we have had witnesses before that committee who had been to the Philippines but whose testimony had no more to do with any information they acquired or could have acquired by virtue of their presence in the Philippines than any testimony that I might give before the committee. General MacArthur has been testifying to a philosophical disquisition before that committee. If a man has simply touched at the city of Manila in the night, according to the rules of this committee he can come before the committee and testify to a treatise on political economy or to a chapter of statistics, or on the science of war, or upon the policy of expansion and colonialism.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. CARMACK. Certainly.

Mr. BURTON. I notice that the statement was made by the Senator from Massachusetts that all of these witnesses except, I think, two or three had been called for by the minority of the committee.

Mr. CARMACK. That is not so. That is a mistake.

Mr. BURTON. Who called for the witnesses who you say did not know anything, like General MacArthur and others? Did the majority or the minority call for them?

Mr. CARMACK. There has been no call made by the minority for anybody.

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. CARMACK. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. Do I understand the Senator to say that no witnesses have been asked for by the minority?

Mr. CARMACK. I do.

Mr. LODGE. I have it in writing.

Mr. CARMACK. I do not say that they have not been called for by certain Senators who you say belong to the minority, but I do say, and the chairman must remember it, when the suggestion was put, I believe by himself, that the minority should submit a list of witnesses, I for one instantly objected to any members of the committee being put in the category of a minority, and the Democratic members of the committee as a minority had no witnesses to present to the committee, and then——

Mr. DIETRICH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. CARMACK. No; not now. Then it was agreed upon that any member of the committee should submit the names of any witnesses he wished subpœnaed. We did not care for the committee to be put in the attitude of a majority upon the one side and a minority upon the other, as though we were conducting a trial or taking depositions in a court with the Republicans representing one side in a lawsuit and the Democrats representing the other parties in the lawsuit. So it was agreed upon then that any member of the committee should submit the names of any persons whom he wanted subpœnaed as witnesses.

Mr. BURTON. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. CARMACK. Certainly.

Mr. BURTON. Then do I understand that the names of all the witnesses except the two or three mentioned by the Senator from Massachusetts happened to be suggested by members of the minority of the committee?

Mr. CARMACK. I do not think the members of the majority have been suggesting any witnesses at all, so far as that is concerned.

Mr. BURTON. Then these witnesses the Senator was speaking about who did not know anything happened to be suggested by a member of the minority of the committee?

Mr. CARMACK. I do not know what the Senator is talking about. He may know, but I do not.

Mr. BURTON. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that he said a moment ago that several witnesses, or a number of them, who had been called before the committee did not know a single thing about this subject-matter.

Mr. CARMACK. I have never said anything of the kind, Mr. President.

Mr. BURTON. The RECORD will show.

Mr. CARMACK. The RECORD will show that I have not said anything of the kind.

Mr. DIETRICH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. CARMACK. Certainly.

Mr. DIETRICH. I believe the Senator said the committee should not be considered as a majority or a minority committee?

Mr. CARMACK. Certainly.

Mr. DIETRICH. Then why did the minority make a minority report?

Mr. CARMACK. Oh, Mr. President, I was talking about the investigation. Of course every committee has a majority and a minority. It may be that a part of the majority may be composed of Democrats and Republicans, and similarly the minority may be composed of Democrats and Republicans. I was talking about the investigation. I was not talking about the report made on the bill.

I did not say, as the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BURTON] suggested, that General MacArthur did not know anything as to what he was talking about. What I did say was that, in addition to his testimony as to what he himself saw and what he himself knew, he went on with a long, elaborate, partisan, and academic essay on the question of colonial expansion. He discussed the Philippine Islands with reference to their geographical situation, their strategic value, their value from a commercial point of view, and their value in order to enable us to establish our power and to extend our commerce in the Orient. It was simply an elaborate argument in favor of the policy of the Administration, which had absolutely nothing whatever to do with his own observations and his own experience in the Philippine Islands.

I say if a man, simply because he has been to the Philippines, can be allowed to come before this committee, and, instead of testifying to facts from his observations and knowledge, present magazine articles, academic essays, and philosophical disquisitions with reference to matters of expansion or about our holdings in the Philippine Islands, then the committee in common fairness ought to hear the views of some other people who hold different opinions. If it will not do that, then it ought to have the fairness to say to every witness who appears before it, even if he has been in the Philippines, "You must talk about something as to which you know, and not simply testify by furnishing literary essays and academic disquisitions on the general question of expansion." General MacArthur went back to the time of the French Revolution. He traced the growth of the democratic idea in the French Revolution to Spain, and how it had gone from there to the Philippine Islands. He had learned all that, I suppose, before he ever went to the Philippines; and if he had not, he might have learned it.

Mr. President, so far as the action of this committee is concerned, I have not said that the committee is suppressing information; but I did say that, in my opinion, a majority of the committee is not very eager to get information. I did say that the committee without any good reason recently took an adjournment for eight days, with a witness on the stand and other witnesses here in the city of Washington ready and willing to testify.

The governor of Idaho had come here from his home, and was here in the city of Washington ready to testify before that committee; and he left the city of Washington and went home because the committee took a recess for eight days. He was a brave officer, who had been in the Philippines and had made a record for gallantry there. The committee adjourned simply because my friend from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] wanted to go home to make a "keynote" speech—a very good one, too, I will say, for my friend from Indiana always makes a good speech.

I noticed, by the way, in one of the newspaper reports of that speech that when it got down to the part of the speech about the Philippine question it said, "Mr. BEVERIDGE discussed the Philippine question with great ability;" and that is all it said about it. [Laughter.] I knew that he did that, of course, but I should have been very glad to have known whether the speech of the Senator from Indiana made before that convention bore any resemblance to the speech he made here two or three years ago on the floor of the Senate of the United States. I refer to the speech that was circulated in the Philippine Islands which incited the people over there to insurrection.

Mr. President, I want to send to the desk and have the Secretary read a statement prepared by Mr. Edward Atkinson, of Massachusetts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The junior Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, before the Secretary reads that pamphlet, I should like to add one or two words as to the calling of witnesses. I mean to be accurate, and I think I am.

Governor Taft was, of course, called by the general desire of the committee. Every member of the committee desired that he should be the first witness to be heard from, he being the governor-general of the Philippines. Mr. Barrows, who was, as I have said, the assistant superintendent of education, was called at my suggestion. We had before us General Otis, who was also governor-general, and we had General MacArthur.

I have here in writing a request from the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS] to call Sergeant Riley, J. J. Davis, and Captain McDonald, all of whom have been called, and two of them heard. Captain McDonald we have not yet been able to find with a subpœna. I have here a list of five witnesses, three asked for by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and two by the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS], and I have a letter from the Senator from Texas suggesting another witness in California, all of which I submitted in due course to the committee, who alone have authority to call witnesses. All have been called and are to be heard.

I have here also in the handwriting of the Senator from Texas the list of witnesses that I have described: Mabini, Sixto Lopez, Pilo del Pilar, Howard W. Bray, Robert M. Collins, and Harold Martin.

Mr. President, when I said that all the witnesses we have had except Governor Taft and Mr. Barrows had been called at the suggestion of the minority, I thought I was stating the exact fact. All of the committee desired to hear General Otis; all desired to hear General MacArthur. I do not need to place the suggestion of those two names on any particular person, for it was the unanimous agreement of the committee that we ought to hear the governor-general among the first.

As to the adjournment of the committee for eight days, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] was obliged to be away, the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] was obliged to be away, and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] was obliged to be away. The committee had been sitting from the 31st day of January three or four days, and sometimes six days, in a week. Those three Senators all expressed to me their hope that a short interval would be allowed, as they were anxious to be present at the hearing of General MacArthur and at the hearings that were to follow.

The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK] says there was no reason for adjourning over eight days. The reason, and the only reason I had—and I dare say that may be no reason at all in the estimation of the Senator—was a desire to oblige my colleagues and to show that courtesy to their convenience which is usual in this body. The adjournment was taken, of course, by the committee itself.

Now, as to General MacArthur and his opinion, he was asked to make a general statement, as all the witnesses were, of his views as the result of his study and observation in the Philippine Islands. He made one such general statement at the outset of his testimony, and he made another brief one this morning, I am informed—I was absent in the Committee on Foreign Relations. His first statement struck me as an extremely interesting one. General MacArthur is a very able and cultivated man and has given great thought to this subject—something which has not always been employed upon it—and he made a statement which I consider to be of great value. The Senator from Tennessee, against whose preconceived notions General MacArthur's statement runs, or against whose views General MacArthur's statement runs, thinks that statement is of no value. That is a difference of opinion.

Mr. CARMACK. I did not understand the Senator.

Mr. LODGE. I say the Senator thought the statement of General MacArthur was of no value. I think it was of value. I think it was appropriate, coming from a man who had been long in the Philippine Islands, and I do not think we ought to pass upon what witnesses present simply on the ground of whether they are the kind of statements we want them to make.

Mr. CARMACK. That is what you have done.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, have I the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts will proceed, and must not be interrupted without his permission.

Mr. CARMACK. I will say that the Senator has the floor by my courtesy. I have the floor.

Mr. LODGE. I beg the Senator's pardon. I thought I was recognized in my own time.

Mr. CARMACK. No; you were not.

Mr. LODGE. I rose before the reading of the paper which had been asked for by the Senator, and that can not be read without unanimous consent.

Mr. CARMACK. Very well, then; I will read it myself.

Mr. LODGE. I beg the Senator's pardon. If the Senator thinks he has the floor, I will yield the floor.

Mr. CARMACK. I yield the floor very cheerfully to the Senator.

Mr. LODGE. I supposed I was speaking in my own time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands unanimous consent was given to the Senator from Massachusetts to proceed.

Mr. LODGE. Unanimous consent was given to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so understands.

Mr. LODGE. If unanimous consent was given to me I will wait for the floor in my own time.

Mr. CARMACK. I yield the floor to the Senator from Massachusetts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee now yields the floor out of courtesy to the junior Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. I am perfectly willing to wait until the Senator from Tennessee has concluded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will then read the paper which has been sent to the desk.

Mr. LODGE. That can not be done except by unanimous consent, Mr. President.

Mr. CARMACK. Very well, then; I will read it myself.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator is going to continue, as he has the undoubted right to do, to read Mr. Atkinson's pamphlet, I will wait until he has concluded; but if he is going to ask unanimous consent for the Secretary to read it, then I object until I have an opportunity to finish what I desire to say about this matter.

Mr. CARMACK. I will read it myself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made to the reading of the paper sent to the desk, and it will be returned to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator is entitled to read it, of course.

Mr. CARMACK. I have the right to read it, and I have not the slightest objection to reading it, so far as that is concerned.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator will understand that I have not the least desire to make him read the paper if he will allow me to conclude the statement I was making.

Mr. CARMACK. I understand the Senator simply wants to be a little disagreeable.

Mr. LODGE. Well, Mr. President, I am sorry the Senator——

Mr. CARMACK. I object to any interruption by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. CARMACK. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. I hope the Senator from Massachusetts will withdraw his objection and let the Secretary read the document.

Mr. LODGE. I have no objection to the Secretary reading it; none in the world, and never have had.

Mr. TELLER. I rise to a question of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state his point of order.

Mr. TELLER. The rules of the Senate require that when an objection of that kind is made, the Chair shall submit the question to the Senate without debate whether the Secretary shall read the paper or not. That is the rule of the Senate. I suppose by unanimous consent the Senator can withdraw the request for the reading of the paper at the desk and read it himself, if he chooses to do so.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts to withdraw his objection to the reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that unanimous consent has been granted for compliance with the request of the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK], that the Secretary proceed with the reading of the paper which the Senator has sent to the desk. If there be no objection, the Secretary will proceed with the reading.

Mr. SCOTT. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia moves that the Senate adjourn. The question is on that motion. [Putting the question.] The "noes" appear to have it.

Mr. DUBOIS. I call for the yeas and nays, Mr. President.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MCLAURIN of Mississippi (when Mr. MONEY'S name was called.) My colleague [Mr. MONEY] is unavoidably absent because of sickness.

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 6, nays 50; as follows:

YEAS—6.

Bate,	Daniel,	Heitfeld,	Scott.
Clark, Mont.	Dubois,

NAYS—50.

Allison,	Dillingham,	McEnery,	Rawlins,

Burton,	Frye,	Mitchell,	Stewart,
Carmack,	Gamble,	Patterson,	Teller,

Clay,	Jones, Ark.	Platt, Conn.	Vest,
Culberson,	Kean,	Platt, N. Y.	Warren,

Cockrell,	Hale,	Mallory,	Taliaferro,
Depew,	Hansbrough,	Martin,	Wellington.

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President——

Mr. BATE. Will my colleague yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CARMACK. Certainly.

Mr. BATE. I rise to a parliamentary question, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee will state the question.

Mr. BATE. My colleague [Mr. CARMACK] was on the floor, and a motion was made to adjourn while he had the floor. I desire to know if it was in order to submit such a motion at that time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks that perhaps he was in error in recognizing the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT], but the Chair was misled by the fact that in the interim some papers were being passed to the desk, and the Chair lost sight of the fact that the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK] was on the floor. The Chair, therefore, thinks he was in error in recognizing the Senator from West Virginia without the consent of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. BATE. I am sure, Mr. President, while it is understood that a motion to adjourn is always in order——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so understands.

Mr. BATE. Neither my colleague nor any other Senator can be taken off the floor by a motion to adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks he was in error, for the reason he has stated, that some papers were being sent to the desk, and recognizing the fact that a motion to adjourn is always in order, the Chair was misled into recognizing the Senator from West Virginia for a motion to adjourn.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, with the permission of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK] who has the floor, I want to say a word.

Mr. CARMACK. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to say that the reading of a document by the Secretary at the request of a Senator occupying the floor is as much a part of that Senator's speech as if he were reading it himself; and no Senator can be taken from the floor when he is making a speech or having a document read, unless he consents to an interruption for some particular purpose—not even by a motion to adjourn. If the motion had been withheld until the reading of the paper had been concluded, and the Senator on the floor had yielded it, the motion to adjourn would have been in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the paper which has been sent to the desk.

Mr. CARMACK. I want to say, Mr. President, that I knew, as a general matter of parliamentary law, that the Senator from Massachusetts could not be taken from the floor by a motion of that sort, but I might be treated in that way, and consequently I did not raise the point.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I take it for granted that this is a paper pertinent to the matter in hand. If so, I suggest that it be printed in the RECORD without being read.

Mr. TELLER. Oh, no; let it be read.

Mr. CARMACK. I ask to have the paper read.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well; I only made the suggestion to save time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the paper.

The Secretary proceeded to read the paper referred to:

Mr. CARMACK. I ask unanimous consent that the rest of the paper may be printed in the RECORD without being read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the remainder of the paper will be printed in the RECORD without being read. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The entire paper is as follows:

BRIEF OF STATEMENT TO BE MADE BY EDWARD ATKINSON BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON THE PHILIPPINES.

The expenditures of the United States for twenty years, 1878 to 1897, under the Administrations of Presidents Hayes, Arthur, Cleveland, Harrison, and Cleveland—three Republican and two Democratic—averaged $4.97 per capita, varying but little from this constant. (For reference to the figures see The Cost of a National Crime, Senate Document.)

The expenditures of the civil service, the War Department, the Navy, including the construction of the new Navy up to that date, Indians, and postal deficiency amounted to an average per year of $2.57 per head; but deducting the return of the direct tax and the premiums paid for the purchase of bonds, the annual normal cost of the Government during this period was less than $2.50 per head; pensions, $1.51; interest, 89 cents. It may therefore be considered an established rule that the cost of the United States Government with the normal expenditures for war and the Navy in time of peace, under an average economy in appropriations, such as that represented during the twenty years of varied party control and administration, can not exceed $2.50 per head. The pensions are falling absolutely in amount and also relatively to the population; so that except for the abnormal expenses of war the expenditures of the United States Government for 1902 would be about $4.50 per head, tending to diminish relatively to population.

The normal expenditures of $2.50 per head during the twenty years were, as I may say, liquidated by the taxes on the consumption of spirits, wines, and beer, with the accompaniment of tobacco, which yielded $2.50 per head, and have yielded $3.50 under the war-tax bill. We may therefore rightly apply the normal rate of the cost of the Government, $2.50 per head, to the population of the year 1901, 77,647,000 in number.

Normal expenditures, at $2.50	$194,117,500
Actual expenditures for pensions, at $1.79	139,323,622
Interest on public debt, 42 cents	32,342,979
Total normal rate, $4.71 per head	365,784,101

The actual expenditures were at the rate of $6.57 per head, $509,967,353. The difference between $4.71 and $6.57 measures the cost of the warfare in the Philippine Islands and other expenses growing out of the increase in the Army and Navy under the impulse of the Spanish war. The difference, $1.86 per head of the population, amounted to $144,183,239.

The attempt is made to justify this expenditure for the purpose of expanding our commerce, mainly our exports. It has expanded the commerce with the Philippine Islands. Our exports just before the beginning of warfare varied but a fraction from $100,000. In the year 1900 they had multiplied more than twenty-six fold, and had reached a total of $2,640,449; last year about a million more. We have therefore succeeded in exporting at the rate of 3½ cents per head of our population in the year 1900; possibly at the rate of 5 cents a head in the year 1901. These goods consisted very largely of whisky, beer, and supplies for the use of the United States Army. That expansion from a fraction of a cent to 5 cents per head of our own population cost us in the year 1900 $1.86 per head in taxation.

Under the influence of the Spanish war and the cost of armaments and of the warfare in the Philippines we are yielding a considerable part of our advantage over the manufacturing States of Europe, with whom we compete in the export of our manufactures.

All taxation enters into all cost. Taxes measure that part of the annual product which is diverted from productive industry and which is expended in the conduct of the Government—useful and necessary, so far as relates to the civil service and to the police duties of the Army and the Navy on land and on the sea; wasteful and noxious, so far as it relates either to the preparation for or conduct of offensive warfare. The manufacturing States of Europe with which we compete in the great commerce of the world, namely, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, France, Germany, Belgium, and the Netherlands, are subjected to a burden of militarism which is destructive in the extreme. Their population numbers in round figures 148,500,000. Our population to-day is a little over half that number. The competition of other States in Europe in the great commerce of the world is a negligible quantity. The States which I have named are those which have applied modern invention and science in the most effective manner to the conduct of manufactures. They are therefore our chief competitors in the supply of other parts of the world with finished goods, but they are also our biggest customers, having developed purchasing power and being dependent upon us in large measure for food and fibers; possibly ere long for coal and iron.

For a long period their expenditures for national purposes have averaged double ours. They are now more than double. The average expenditures of these countries in the year 1901, mainly wasted upon armies and navies, or expended for the interest on war debts and for destructive purposes, averaged $14 per head of their whole population—I think more, if I could get the facts about Germany, where many expenditures which are here paid by the nation are there paid by the kingdoms and duchies and do not appear in the national budget. If the true German expenditures could be ascertained from the Statistical Abstracts, I have little doubt that the average expenditures of these five States named would be $15 per head. In Great Britain, burdened with the folly, or worse, of the Boer war, they are now $18. In France they have long been and are continuously $17 to $18; in Belgium, $11; in the Netherlands, $13; in Germany, apparently only $8; in fact, probably $12.

Now, if we measure the difference between what ought to have been our normal rate of the year 1901, $4.71 per head, and $14, it comes to $9.29—$9.29 advantage over our manufacturing competitors on the average for every man, woman, and child in the United States. Our working group is a group of three, one in three being occupied for gain. The advantage of each one occupied for gain in the United States over their European competitors is over $27 per head, and might have been $30 except for the continuance of warfare in the Philippine Islands. The actual advantage of our working force now occupied in productive industry in the year 1901 over their European competitors was $570,000,000, and might have been $720,000,000 had peace been granted and waste of war stopped. In that fact you have one of the secrets of the gain in our export of manufactures which has appeared to be so remarkable. Whenever common sense prevails here and this country returns to the pursuits of peace we shall indeed become the dominant world power. So long as we persist in the folly of trying to expand commerce by force of arms we cripple ourselves and help to protect our competitors from the full consequences of their own corresponding follies.

A net advantage of $9 to $10 per head of our population over our competitors in the army-ridden nations of Europe is assured for years to come. That advantage is equal to a profit of 4 per cent of our entire national product; that is to say, we make 4 per cent on our entire national product before our European competitors can begin to secure a profit.

Under these conditions it becomes expedient to give a little further attention to what has been not only the cost of the warfare in the Philippine Islands, but the cost of the war upon Spain. Spain stood ready to yield more than Cuba has yet gained by having secured her nominal independence. Except for the Spanish war, we may assume that the expenditures of this country since 1897 would not have exceeded the normal rate of $5 per head of the preceding twenty years, although it might doubtless have been less.

The actual expenditures for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1898 to 1901, inclusive, have been $6.79 per head, a difference of $1.79, which being assessed upon the population of that specific four years amounts in round figures to $540,000,000. In confirmation of this estimate of the cost of war you have merely to refer to the Statistical Abstract of the United States, "Expenditures and their objects," and you will observe that the Army expenditures for four years, 1898 to 1901, inclusive, exceeded the previous four years by $425,000,000. The naval expenditures for the same period exceeded the previous four years by $116,000,000, showing in absolute figures the waste of war to have been what I have estimated it by the per capita method, $540,000,000.

Our expenditures are lessening in some measure, but if the cost of warfare in the Philippine Islands for the present year does not exceed $120,000,000 that will bring the total waste of war for five years to June 30, 1902, to $660,000,000.

This is not as great a sum as I feared when I prepared the pamphlets entitled "The Cost of a National Crime," "The Hell of War and its Penalties," and "Criminal Aggression; by Whom Committed?" in the latter part of 1898 and the early part of 1899, and which will be found recorded as Senate documents. I then anticipated greater power of resistance on the part of the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands and I expected a heavier expenditure than has occurred. But, fortunately for the credit of this country in its military conduct, fortunately also in saving some of the lives of the soldiers, so many of whom have been sacrificed by death and disease in this warfare, and fortunately for the finances of this country, our immense resources have yielded larger revenues than anyone anticipated and the expenditures have been somewhat less than were expected. In fact, the very ability of this country to bear the wrongs and follies of bad legislation stands somewhat in the way of the remedy.

Until the moral sense of the country is aroused as it is now being by the ghastly disclosures which your partial investigation has already brought to light there seems little chance to stop the hell of warfare in the Philippine Islands by merely dealing with the economic aspect of the question. Under existing conditions the economic question may attract more attention now that the moral indignation of the country has been aroused. I trust you will move rapidly on the lines of investigation which you have now opened, and by giving the fullest publicity to the evidence I trust you will remove the distrust as to the intentions of Congress which now prevails.

I may call the attention of the committee to what I deem a delusion in respect to the possibility of commerce with the East, so far as it may be measured by exports. The classes of goods which we make, either products of agriculture, mining, or metallurgy, are those which find their market chiefly among the States which are most fully developed and where the purchasing power of the people has been increased by the application of science and invention to the industries in which they are occupied. This is made plain by the official figures of our trade given in detail in one of my pamphlets which have been called seditious. The exports of the year 1900 were larger than those of any previous year, and have since been exceeded, the increase running proportionately on the same lines as those of 1900.

In that year the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, the British colonies and dependencies bought from us 53.88 per cent of all that we had to sell; Germany, Netherlands, and Belgium, 22.77 per cent; France, 4.94 per cent; Austria, Italy, and other European countries, 6.80 per cent; making, in all Europe, with British colonies and dependencies added, 88.45 per cent of our entire export. But you will observe that over 80 per cent was with the United Kingdom, her colonies, Germany, Belgium, Netherlands, and France, the countries of the highest purchasing power. South and Central America, Mexico, Cuba, Porto Rico, and other Latin-American States took only 7.50 per cent; Africa (not British), 0.28 per cent; Asia (not British), including China, Japan, etc., only 2.95 per cent; Oceania (not British), Borneo, Java, etc., 0.79 per cent; the Philippine Islands, 0.03 per cent.

The people of these eastern countries, where wages are a few cents a day, where wants are few, have little or no purchasing power, and are not consumers of the classes of products which are most profitable to us to make.

You will remark that the 10,000,000 people of Canada, Australasia, and the British West Indies bought from us in the year 1900 $134,000,000 worth of goods, while the 800,000,000 people of Asia, more or less, bought of us only $65,000,000 worth of goods, and the teeming hordes of Africa only $20,000,000. Trade does not go by numbers any more than it follows the flag. Trade goes by price and quality and according to the demand and purchasing power of those who buy the goods. I do not wish to undervalue the trade of China and Japan. The latter especially is increasing rapidly with the purchasing power of the people as they become habituated to modern methods. The purchasing power of the Philippine Islands will doubtless be largely increased whenever peace is permitted and local self-government established. There may be large contracts for railways and the like in Asia, but it will take generations to bring the masses of the people up to any considerable power of purchase as compared with Europeans. All the dates, facts, and figures are given in my various treatises upon this subject. They are all derived from the official reports of the Government and they have all been justified and proved.

There is but one way in which our exports to and our commerce with Asia, Africa, Oceania, and South America can be expanded, and that is a very simple way—the removal of the taxes imposed under our present tariff upon the crude and partly manufactured materials which may be derived from these continents will give to their inhabitants greater power of purchasing our manufactured products. Such measures will also augment the power of the manufacturers of this county to supply these great populations with the finished goods to the extent of their demand in competition with European manufacturers. The taxes upon wool, hides, and other tropical products protect the manufacturers of Europe, who have them free of duty, while oppressing the manufacturers of this country. They have yielded no benefit to the farmers in whose behalf they have been put on, because they have depressed the branches of industry in which they are needed. The hearty support of business men is now being given to such measures of true reciprocity and of tax reduction as will remove burdens upon our domestic industry while enabling our commerce with the East and South to be expanded rapidly.

Respectfully submitted.

EDWARD ATKINSON.

BOSTON, MASS., April 16, 1902.

In submitting the estimates herein required for the fiscal year 1904, it shall be clearly indicated in the case of all officers and employees whether any of them are additional to those authorized and employed during the fiscal year 1902, and whether in any case the salary proposed is an increase over or reduction under the compensation actually paid during the said fiscal year.

Mr. ALLISON. The Secretary of the Treasury, since the committee reported the bill, has sent to us an estimate for the payment of this rebate, which must be paid during the next fiscal year, and probably during the early part of it.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of line 18, on page 70.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 70, after line 18, I move to insert what I send to the desk. I call the attention of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. FAIRBANKS] to the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 70, after line 18, it is proposed to insert:

Purchase of Census building.—For the purchase of the land and buildings now occupied by the Census Office in the city of Washington, bounded and described as follows: Commencing at the southeast corner of lot 1, square 574, in the city of Washington, District of Columbia; running thence west along the north line of B street NW. 334.4 feet; thence north along the east line of Second street NW. 286.7 feet; thence east 334.4 feet to the west line of First street NW; thence south along the west line of First street 286.7 feet to the place of beginning, containing about 95,872 square feet, $250,000 or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be paid from the unexpended balance of the appropriation made by the sundry civil appropriation act, approved March 3, 1901, for salaries and necessary expenses for taking and compiling results of the Twelfth Census, to be immediately available.

Mr. ALLISON. This amendment proposes to purchase the tract of land upon which the census buildings are now located. Under the Director of the Census in 1900 we made a lease of that ground and the buildings for the sum of $26,000 per annum, which lease runs for a period of five years, during which period an option can be exercised under the lease to purchase the property for $300,000; and if not, another lease for the period of five years shall be executed at the same rental.

I understand, in fact I know, that this property can be purchased at this time for $250,000 if the appropriation is made, and that, of course, will stop the rental, which has nearly three years to run at the rate of $26,000 per annum, and contingently may run for a longer period.

The law which we passed a few days ago makes the Census Bureau a permanent office, and I have the statement of the Director of the Census that nearly, if not quite, all the space he now has will be required in the future for the use of the Census Office. The Committee on Appropriations considered it a matter of prudence and economy to make this purchase in order that the Bureau may continue permanently where it now is. I had the purpose to consult the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds respecting the matter, but it was not completed until yesterday, and I have not had an opportunity to mention it to the honorable Senator from Indiana [Mr. FAIRBANKS].

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Will the Senator from Iowa allow me just a word?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I am familiar with the property and the contract. I think the proposed purchase is a very wise one, and I favor most heartily the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. BATE. May I ask the Senator from Iowa what becomes of the obligation of rental at $26,000 a year? The amendment does not say anything about that. Is it to stop?

Mr. ALLISON. If we purchase the land.

Mr. BATE. That is understood?

Mr. ALLISON. We will undoubtedly in that case pay the rent to ourselves.

Mr. BATE. That is understood?

Mr. ALLISON. It is understood, of course.

Mr. BATE. Let me ask who put up the buildings on that ground; was it done by the Government?

Mr. ALLISON. The buildings were put on the ground by the owners of the land. It was agreed that they should put up buildings there costing $125,000, I think, perhaps only $100,000, and that the rent should be $25,000 per annum, but that if they expended any additional sum the Government should pay at the rate of 6 per cent upon the additional sum expended during the term of the lease. It was necessary to add, I think, some $25,000 to the cost of the buildings after the lease was made, and thereupon the rental became twenty-six thousand and some hundred dollars per annum.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

Mr. BATE. It has not been before a committee except your committee?

Mr. ALLISON. No.

Mr. TELLER. I am familiar with this ground and with the buildings and am acquainted with the gentleman who leased it to the Government. I am very much surprised to hear the Senator say that the Government can buy it for $250,000. Certainly, if we can do so, we ought not to lose the opportunity. It is very cheap property at $250,000, in my judgment.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator from Colorado that the Director of the Census had the written proposition from the owners of this property that they will convey the property for that sum.

Mr. TELLER. From the administrator, I suppose.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes; I think so.

Mr. TELLER. The old gentleman who erected the buildings is dead.

Mr. ALLISON. There is one owner perhaps who is still living, but he has an option from these people to make a deed for the buildings and grounds for the consideration of $250,000.

Mr. TELLER. We had better take it.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, I only wish to extend my congratulations to the chairman of our committee for his able financiering in bringing about these negotiations. I wish to say to the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds that the last proposition came in only this morning, I think.

Mr. ALLISON. It came in this morning.

Mr. PERKINS. Therefore the chairman has made $25,000 for the Government since day before yesterday, for then $275,000 was the lowest proposition to be considered. As the Senator from Colorado has said, almost any business man who had this property would not have thought of yielding it up for less than the option the Government had, $300,000.

Mr. TELLER. It pays good interest, does it not?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly it does; and I think our thanks are due to the chairman of the committee for his able financiering.

Mr. ALLISON. I thank the Senator for the suggestion he makes respecting me personally, but whatever there is in the way of managing the price at which the property could be bought is due to the Director of the Census and not to myself.

Mr. PERKINS. Well, it was done through your cooperation and assistance.

Mr. ALLISON. I merely want to say that I consider this a very good proposition on behalf of the Government, and I consider it also a very good proposition on behalf of the owners. They get the money and we get the property.

Mr. BATE. It certainly looks as though it were a good proposition from the rental we have paid. That is the only way we can judge of it. We certainly save a good deal by that, and I should say in that view it ought to be purchased.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the circumstances the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I am very glad to know that. I wished to make an explanation, briefly.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 1, on page 72.

Mr. ALLISON. Page 71, line 21, after the word "superintendent," I move to insert "at the rate of $1,200 per annum."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 24, page 71, after the words "improvements to," I move to insert the words "steam fire-engine house and."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 1, page 72, I move to insert after the word "thousand" the words "five hundred;" so as to read "one thousand five hundred dollars." That is made necessary by the former amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Under the Department of the Interior," on page 72, line 1, after the word "dollars," to strike out:

And hereafter the fire-engine house adjoining the Senate stable shall be under the control of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and expenses of maintenance and repair thereof shall be paid from appropriations under their control.

So as to make the clause read:

For repairs and improvements to steam fire-engine house and Senate and House stables, and for repairs to and paving of floors and courtyards of same, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 72, after line 5, to insert:

For steel shelving for the Senate library, for the principal office room, and for rooms under the roof, $9,750. And the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds is hereby authorized to pay, out of the appropriation heretofore made for the construction of rooms in the old library space, the sum of $25,117 for steel shelving already contracted for and erected in place in the upper rooms of the Senate library.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. I was not able when the reading of the bill first began to thoroughly understand from the discussion whether amendments which have been submitted should be offered now or later. If now is the time to offer them, I desire to call attention to the amendment proposed by my colleague [Mr. NELSON] to come in on page 75.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unanimous consent was given that the committee amendments should first be considered, and any amendments to be offered will be in order after the committee amendments have been disposed of.

Mr. CLAPP. So there is no necessity for taking that amendment up now?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no necessity for taking it up at this moment.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Surveying the public lands," on page 76, line 23, after the word "by," to insert "the acts approved February 26, 1857, and May 11, 1858;" so as to make the clause read:

For surveys and resurveys of public lands, $325,000, at rates not exceeding $9 per linear mile for standard and meander lines, $7 for township, and $5 for section lines: Provided, That in expending this appropriation preference shall be given, first, in favor of surveying townships occupied, in whole or in part, by actual settlers and of lands granted to the States by the acts approved February 26, 1857, and May 11, 1858, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading was continued to line 6 on page 79.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 79, line 3, after the word "surveyors," I move to strike out "such;" and in line 4, after "surveys," where it first occurs, to insert a comma; so as to read:

and for making by such competent surveyors fragmentary surveys, and such other surveys or examinations as may be required for identification of lands for purposes of evidence in any suit or proceeding in behalf of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading was resumed. The next amendment was, on page 79, after line 23, to insert:

For repair and protection of the ruin of Casa Grande, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "United States Geological Survey," on page 80, line 7, to increase the appropriation for the salary of the chief clerk in the office of the Director of the Geological Survey from $2,400 to $2,500; and in line 17, to increase the total appropriation for the maintenance of the office of the Director of the Geological Survey from $32,390 to $32,490.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 81, line 25, to increase the appropriation for pay of skilled laborers and various temporary employees in the Geological Survey from $16,000 to $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 82, after line 3, I move to insert:

For topographic survey in Porto Rico, in order to meet a like amount appropriated by the legislative assembly of Porto Rico for cooperation with the United States Geological Survey, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 82, line 12, to increase the appropriation for the preparation of the illustrations of the Geological Survey from $16,280 to $18,280.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 83, line 9, after the word "wells," to strike out "in arid and semiarid sections;" in line 11, before the word "water," to strike out "the;" and in line 12, before the word "hundred," to strike out "of said sections, one," and insert "two;" so as to make the clause read:

For gauging the streams and determining the water supply of the United States, and for the investigation of underground currents and artesian wells and the preparation of reports upon the best methods of utilizing water resources, $200,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 83, line 18, to increase the total appropriation for the maintenance of the United States Geological Survey from $960,570 to $1,066,670.

Mr. ALLISON. The amendment in regard to Porto Rico makes necessary a change in the total. In line 18, page 83, before the word "thousand," I move to strike out "sixty-six," and insert in lieu thereof "seventy-one," so as to read:

In all, for the United States Geological Survey, $1,071,670.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I will not ask the Secretary to read further to-day, but I should like to insert a few amendments, beginning on page 16.

On page 16, after line 3, I move to insert:

Rockland Lake light station, New York: For protection of the light-house including the building of an ice breaker, $6,450, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. After the amendment just agreed to I move to insert:

Orient Point light station, New York: For construction of a breakwater for the protection of a light-house, $18,000, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. After line 10, on the same page, I move to insert:

Schooner Ledge light station, Pennsylvania: For purchase of right of way to the Schooner Ledge rear range light station, $200.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 19, after line 21, I move to insert:

Conneaut Harbor light station, Ohio: For constructing a light-house on the new pier head for the front light, and to raise the existing structure on the old pier head to a proper height to have it serve with the proposed new front light as a range for vessels approaching Conneaut Harbor, $8,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 19, after the amendment just agreed to, I move to insert:

Ashtabula Harbor light station, Ohio: for establishing a light and fog-signal station on the new pierhead at the end of the west breakwater at Ashtabula, Ohio, $18,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 30, after line 2, I move to insert:

For longevity pay authorized by the "Act to promote the efficiency of the Revenue-Cutter Service," approved April 12, 1902, $115,000.

This amendment is necessary because of an act recently passed by Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 42, after line 21, I move to insert:

For printing and publishing the contributions from the United States National Herbarium, the editions of which shall not be less than 3,000 copies, including the preparation of necessary illustrations, proof reading, bibliographical work, and special editorial work, $7,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 18, line 11, I ask by unanimous consent to modify an amendment already agreed to. After the word "Calumet," I ask to strike out "pierhead" and insert "harbor."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment will be so modified.

Mr. ALLISON. That is all.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I wish the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill. I desire to move an amendment to the committee amendments on pages 84 and 85. It has been almost reached, and I wanted to ask the chairman of the committee, in case I should not happen to be in the Senate just at the moment the bill is taken up again, if he would pass it over until I come in.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator, and also to other Senators, that that is a very important amendment in one respect. It relates to the destruction of various original schedules of censuses that have been taken for many years. I shall be glad to pass the amendment over if the Senator is not in his seat at the time.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. If I should be here we will take it up when it is reached.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator has the amendment ready I think it might be very well to have him propose it.

Mr. COCKRELL. Propose it and let it be printed.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes; propose it and have it printed, so that it may appear in the RECORD in the morning.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I shall propose to amend the amendment of the committee by inserting in line 23, after the word "cause," the word "them," and then striking out, commencing in line 24 with the words "the schedules," etc., all on the remainder of that page and all on the next page down to and including the word "provided," in line 19. Then, in lines 20 and 21 I propose to strike out the words "the appropriations for contingent" and insert "any general appropriation for the," and to strike out "Interior Department" and insert "Census Office." I ask the Secretary to read the amendment as I propose it in lieu of the amendment proposed by the committee. Let the language as it will then stand be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to assemble in the office of the permanent census all the schedules of the several decennial censuses of the United States taken from 1790 to 1900, both inclusive, and to cause them to be preserved in the office of the permanent census. All expenses arising and requisite under this paragraph shall be paid from any general appropriation for the expenses of the Census Office.

Mr. ALLISON. That, of course, changes entirely the character of the amendment.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It does.

Mr. ALLISON. I suppose the Senator from Connecticut has already observed that in the bill the House proposed to destroy all the population schedules, beginning in 1790 and ending in 1900, and that our amendment is a substitute for that provision.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The committee amendment proposes to preserve some of them and destroy others.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I think they ought to be preserved, and that is the object of my proposed amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. So I understand.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After thirteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, May 1, 1902, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, April 30, 1902.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. RANDELL of Texas for three weeks, on account of sickness in his family and important business.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

On motion of Mr. WADSWORTH, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 13895) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, with Mr. POWERS of Maine in the chair.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read:

Bureau of Soils, salaries: One soil physicist, who shall be Chief of Bureau, $3,500; 1 scientist, $2,500; 1 scientist, $2,000; 1 chief clerk, $2,000; 2 scientists, at $1,800 each, $3,600; 2 scientists, at $1,600 each, $3,200; 2 scientists, at $1,400 each, $2,800; 2 scientists, at $1,200 each, $2,400; 1 scientist, $1,000; 1 stenographer, $1,200; 1 clerk class 3, $1,600; 1 clerk class 2, $1,400; 5 clerks class 1, $5,000; 3 clerks, at $1,000 each, $3,000; 1 clerk, $840; 1 watchman, $720; 1 messenger, $720; 1 charwoman, $480; in all, $38,960.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee if in line 18, page 32, there is not an increase of salary?

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is one of the increases recommended by the committee.

Mr. PAYNE. I think the chiefs of bureaus ought all to be treated alike.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is subject to the point of order, and I ask unanimous consent to reinsert it at $3,000 instead of $3,500.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is well taken. The gentleman from New York having charge of the bill asks unanimous consent to amend by striking out $500. Is there objection?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I ask that the amendment be reported. I did not hear what it was.

The CHAIRMAN. It is to strike out $500 in line 18, page 32, so that it will read "$3,000" instead of "$3,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

General expenses, Bureau of Soils: Investigation of the relation of soils to climate and organic life; for the investigation of the texture and composition of soils in the field and laboratory; for the investigation of the cause and prevention of the rise of alkali in the soils of the irrigated districts; the investigation of the relation of soils to drainage and seepage waters, and of methods for the prevention of the accumulation of and injury from seepage waters in irrigated districts; for investigations of soils in continental United States and for indicating upon maps or plats, by coloring or otherwise, the results of such investigations; to map the tobacco soils of the United States; to investigate the soils and conditions of tobacco growth in Cuba, Sumatra, and other tobacco-competing countries; to investigate, in cooperation with the Bureau of Plant Industry, the methods of curing, with particular reference to fermentation; to originate, through selection and breeding, improved varieties for the principal tobacco districts of the United States, and to secure, as far as may be, a change in the methods of supplying tobacco to foreign countries; the location of the stations; rent of buildings, not to exceed $2,000 per annum, for office and laboratory purposes; the employment of local and special agents, clerks, assistants, and other labor required in conducting experiments in the city of Washington and elsewhere, and in collating, digesting, reporting, and illustrating the results of such experiments; the preparation and printing of reports, drawings, and illustrations; for materials, tools, instruments, apparatus, gas and electric current, furniture, supplies, and for traveling expenses, freight and express charges, and other necessary expenses, $130,000.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 17 and 18, page 34, after the word "expenses," strike out "$130,000" and insert "$173,000."

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I should like unanimous consent for fifteen minutes' time.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered increases the lump-sum appropriation for the Bureau of Soils from $130,000 to $173,000, the amount asked for by the Secretary of Agriculture, and is offered because I believe the full estimate indispensable for the completion of the varied and important lines of work and investigations contemplated by Prof. Milton Whitney, the efficient Chief of the Bureau.

The bill before the House is the seventh annual appropriation bill for the Department of Agriculture that I have assisted in preparing. With such an experience I have necessarily become somewhat familiar with the work and requirements of the several bureaus and divisions of this great Department of the Government, and I unhesitatingly say that, in my opinion, the estimates of expenditures submitted by the Bureau and division chiefs and approved by Secretary Wilson are carefully prepared with all due regard for economy and deserve the favorable consideration of Congress. I can further say that, until the pending appropriation bill was reported, never during my term of service has a specific appropriation, represented by the Secretary as necessary, been refused or reduced, and while I deeply regret a difference with the distinguished chairman and members of the Committee on Agriculture, gentlemen whom I highly esteem, yet I must not be held responsible for crippling important experimental work and valuable scientific investigations.

It is not an exaggeration to assert that under the able and competent five years' administration of the present Secretary more has been accomplished by the Department of Agriculture in building up American industries, in extending foreign markets, and promoting the welfare of American farmers than during all the other years since the organization of the Bureau and Department of Agriculture. Secretary Wilson's labors have not been confined to favored localities or limited by difficulties; the scope of his endeavors have comprehensively embraced all sections and all interests. His far-sighted vision foresees possibilities unseen by others. Under his wise supervision the Department of Agriculture covers the entire industrial field, and the work assigned to each bureau or division receives immediate and close attention.

The Weather Bureau service has constantly improved and extended its operations.

The Bureau of Animal Industry, together with valuable scientific work, has supervised an inspection of meat products and opened new markets for American farmers.

Irrigation experiments have taught the settlers in the arid regions the proper use and conservation of water.

The building of good roads is encouraged and better road materials successfully sought.

Forest reserves are planned in the Appalachian and Rocky mountains.

The entire habitable world has been ransacked for new varieties of forage plants, grasses, grain, and fruits, with most hopeful results.

Tea culture is extended in the South, and efforts are in progress to restore to American soil the once promising, but lost, industry of silk culture.

A new variety of rice, introduced through the Bureau of Plant Industry, will soon enable the Southwest to furnish our own and also a portion of the world's supply of that staple article of food.

Recent discoveries in tobacco growing and curing promise to revolutionize the culture and manufacture of that great American product.

The work of the experiment stations in the several States and Territories has been systematized and rendered more helpful and efficient. If time permitted I should refer to the invaluable scientific work of the bureaus of Chemistry and Plant Industry, of the divisions of Entomology and Biology, as well as the efficiency of the Publications and Statistical divisions.

Still unsatisfied and looking for other lands to exploit, this enterprising Secretary is now reaching out to frozen Alaska and to our tropical insular possessions with a view to carry American thrift and methods wherever the flag of our Union waves supreme.

Returning to the appropriation for the Bureau of Soils, I trust the House will grant the full amount asked for in the Secretary's estimates.

It will be remembered that the last Congress reorganized the Division of Soils into a Bureau, with an appropriation of $109,140, of which $10,000 was made immediately available, that a prompt reorganization might be perfected, with the result that under the direction of Professor Whitney and his competent assistants systematic and valuable work has been done in investigating and mapping soils, reporting upon existing industrial conditions, recommending better methods, introducing new or improved crops, and supervising their cultivation, harvesting, and marketing.

The Secretary of Agriculture, in his last report to the President, mentions in the most earnest and appreciative terms the work accomplished by this branch of the Department, and in his estimates for the coming year asks for an increase of $82,000 in the amount appropriated for continuing and extending the work of this Bureau. The Committee on Agriculture, by a majority of 1, refused this increase and recommends a reduction of $43,000 from the Secretary's estimates. It is almost superfluous to say that should such a reduction be made, the field work planned for the coming season will be most seriously crippled, and I might add that the members of the House who anticipate the survey and mapping of areas of soils in their districts may be disappointed, for all garments must be cut with due regard to the measure of cloth furnished.

I would invite attention to some of the results accomplished by the Bureau of Soils since the reorganization went into effect last July. Between July 1 and December 31, 1901, the Bureau completed the soil survey of some 8,700 square miles, or about 5,568,000 acres, with maps showing the distribution of the different soils, and with reports discussing the character of the soils in particular areas; also improved methods of cultivation and the most profitable crops adapted to these areas, together with suggestions of new and improved crops that can be profitably introduced. It is estimated that during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, the Bureau will have surveyed 11,600 square miles, or 7,424,000 acres. The work is being conducted in 21 States and Territories without regard to political or geographical divisions, but in the interest of the general agricultural development that is rapidly growing in all parts of the national domain, embracing tobacco, sugar beets, fruit, truck, wheat, corn, and cotton, irrigation and general farming, and other interests only less important than these great staples. This soil-survey work has actually cost a little over $40,000, or an average of about $3.57 per square mile, or only a little over one-half cent per acre.

The report of the field operations of the Bureau for 1900, now being distributed, gives the results of work in 12 areas, with 24 soil maps. The report of the field operations for 1901 gives the results of work accomplished in 24 areas in 15 States, illustrated with 41 soil maps.

For the field season of 1902 about 30 soil experts have been sent out in 15 parties to work in many States, and it is anticipated that if the Secretary's estimates are allowed about 17,000 square miles, or 10,900,000 acres, will be surveyed and mapped during the present calendar year in 25 States and Territories.

The value of the intelligent and scientific investigations made by the Department of Agriculture was never more strikingly illustrated than in the work of the Bureau of Soils in my own Congressional district. So quietly and unostentatiously has this work been accomplished that the soil survey in the Connecticut Valley was completed and the maps published before I was aware that the work had been undertaken, and when it was announced that the results indicated that Sumatra tobacco could be grown on certain soils in the Connecticut Valley the report was received with incredulity by my constituents who had grown for a hundred years the best type of wrapper leaf produced in the United States. An average price of perhaps 20 cents per pound was obtained for this tobacco, while the Sumatra leaf had been encroaching on our markets in rapidly increasing amounts for a quarter of a century, until we were importing annually between thirty and forty thousand bales, each containing nearly 200 pounds, and selling duty paid for $2.50 to $3 per pound, so that we have paid Holland some $6,000,000 a year for wrapper tobacco.

With the remarkable acumen and energy possessed by our Secretary of Agriculture, this investigation was pushed by the skilled experts of his Department, and now, after hardly three years' work, a new and profitable agricultural industry has apparently been established, the habits and prejudices of growers has been overcome, the style of tobacco, methods of cultivation, and handling have been changed, and it is anticipated that this year 800 to 1,000 acres of Sumatra wrapper tobacco will be cultivated under cloth upon soils designated by the Department and with methods laid down in all their details by Department experts, with an investment of nearly three-quarters of a million of dollars and with an estimated profit of a million dollars a year, with a possibility of an increase in the near future to an ultimate annual value of $5,000,000 or $6,000,000. This work has been prosecuted so forcibly, so thoroughly and tactfully, that the people of my district look upon it as almost a marvel of administrative as well as of scientific and practical skill, and they now comprehend the proper relations of the Department of Agriculture to the individual farmer and understand that every man may avail himself of the advantages offered by the Department investigations.

There are doubtless still improvements to be made in methods of cultivation and handling, as well as in the style of leaf produced, but the great object has been attained in demonstrating that the United States can not only produce our own supply but through this specialized industry we can successfully compete with other nations in the production of a fine type of wrapper-leaf tobacco. Not only have tobacco farmers been convinced that this product can be grown, but they have been shown how to grow it, while dealers and manufacturers both at home and abroad are interestedly watching this noteworthy manifestation of the resources and enterprise of our people. The fact that the United States Department of Agriculture has stood back of this new industry and assisted in its development is a guaranty and assurance to all men that foreign competition can be met and that Connecticut shade-grown tobacco will take a place in the tobacco markets of the world that individual efforts could not have made possible by years of persistent endeavor.

Incidentally the Department experts have demonstrated that it is possible to control and prevent the pole rot, which has been so destructive in all of the cigar-leaf States, and especially in the Connecticut Valley.

We are informed through the Secretary's report that the case rot in Pennsylvania tobacco has been prevented by the introduction of different methods of handling, suggested and applied by the Department agents. We are also informed that in the opinion of the Secretary of Agriculture, after a careful survey of the tobacco soils in the several tobacco districts in the United States, and a careful study of the products grown on different soils, that the Secretary is hopeful of being able to improve the quality of filler tobacco and expects to produce something which will approach the standard of the best Cuban leaf.

He is looking for favorable results from this work in Pennsylvania, New York, Ohio, Texas, and possibly in North Carolina and California. Domestic filler leaf sells for from 6 cents to 12 cents per pound. Cuban leaf sells for $1 to $1.25 per pound, and $8,000,000 worth of Cuban tobacco is annually imported and used in this country. It can not be supposed that the Secretary of Agriculture can carry out these great lines of work, can adequately supply the demand coming from all the tobacco districts for help in preventing disastrous losses from pole rot, case rot, and the like, in establishing new types of tobacco akin to Sumatra tobacco in the Connecticut Valley, and the Cuban type of filler in other tobacco districts; that he can investigate the cause of the present deterioration in the quality and price of the bright yellow tobacco of the South; that he can investigate the cause of the present low prices of the manufacturing and export types of the Southern States, and build up new industries without the expenditure of considerable sums of money. He has only expended about $15,000 all told on the investigations in the Connecticut Valley, and has established an industry which, as before stated, it is believed will ultimately be worth many million dollars a year to that section of the country. He has expended only about $5,000 on the investigations in Pennsylvania, and it is believed that the prevention of the black rot accomplished as an incidental feature of this work will save that State alone an annual loss of several hundred thousand dollars. Urgent demands have come to the Department for similar investigations and soil surveys in many other States, and from all the Southern tobacco-growing districts.

In his estimates for this year the Secretary has asked for sufficient money to increase the allotment for the soil survey work to $60,000 and for the tobacco investigations to about $40,000. The Secretary is always frank in his reports and estimates; he fully explains the details of the cost of the work of the Bureau of Soils as well as of all other branches of his Department, and demonstrates the importance of the work contemplated and accomplished.

I am satisfied through a careful personal investigation and a knowledge of the work that is being done that what has been accomplished in the New England States can be duplicated in other areas and with other crops than tobacco, and I know from an examination of the reports that have been issued by the Bureau of Soils and from information that comes from different parts of the country, that equally valuable possibilities exist elsewhere which may be successfully improved provided Congress grants the necessary appropriations.

I would call the attention of Congress to the relatively small appropriations made for this important Government Department, representing the enormous agricultural interests of the country, and contributing directly to increase the agricultural products and materially adding to the national wealth.

The entire amount asked for by the Secretary of Agriculture is considerably less than 1 per cent of the total appropriations for the administration of the Government, and it should be remembered that the Department of Agriculture is the one Government Department that directly or indirectly returns millions to the pockets of the people in place of the paltry thousands taken from the public Treasury and indispensable to continuing the lines of scientific investigations proposed by Secretary Wilson. [Loud applause.]

During the delivery of the above remarks the time of Mr. HENRY of Connecticut expired, and by unanimous consent it was extended ten minutes, and leave was given to him to extend his remarks.

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Chairman, I consider that this appropriation is one of the most important contained in the entire bill for the benefit of the Agricultural Department. The inception of this work has been comparatively recent, but it is something which commends itself to us as being practical relative to the investigation and classification of the different soils with reference to the peculiar crop adapted to each particular soil, and has worked out practical benefits already. In the State of Connecticut it has resulted in finding a soil and methods adapted to the cultivation of Sumatra tobacco. It has already resulted in the establishment of the fact that a Sumatra tobacco is capable of being raised in the State of Connecticut equal to if not superior to the original Sumatra tobacco.

Certain areas in the State of Virginia have already been found which are adapted to the raising of this same species of wrapper tobacco. In addition to that a portion of the State of Maryland which heretofore has been thought to be very unproductive has since been found in these investigations to be nonproductive because the people holding those lands were cropping and recropping them with crops which were not adapted to those soils and which were exhaustive of the fertile elements in the soil.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman favor the amendment or is he against it?

Mr. GRAFF. I am in favor of increasing the amount. The Secretary of Agriculture appeared before the committee of which I am a member and testified before the committee that the cut if made would limit the amount of work which this Bureau would be able to accomplish the coming year.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Why did not the committee follow that direction?

Mr. GRAFF. The reason why the committee did not follow the direction was because the majority of the committee claimed that the present appropriation was largely in excess of the appropriation of last year; but there was no pretense by the majority if the cut was made that it was in view of meeting the reasonable demands of the work for the present year.

Mr. TALBERT. This amendment will put the amount just where the Secretary of Agriculture wanted it?

Mr. GRAFF. It will put it where the Secretary recommended it.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I beg the gentleman's pardon. There was no pretense on the part of the majority that the cut——

Mr. GRAFF. I felt that what had been done led me to believe that the cut made in that Bureau would prevent it from doing the work it had mapped out to do in the present year.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. If the gentleman, after agreeing to permit me to interrupt him, is not willing for me to make a statement, all right.

Mr. GRAFF. Certainly I am willing that the gentleman should make a statement.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. On the contrary, the majority of the committee cut down this amount, and so announced, and so announce it now, on the ground that the work proposed to be done by the Chief of the Bureau of Soils did not require this increase of ninety-odd per cent you propose, and could be done with the increase of fifty-odd per cent which was given.

Mr. GRAFF. That statement reveals the only reason for this cut, and it is that it is such a great increase over the appropriation of last year. That is the reason why I favored in the committee following out the recommendation of the Secretary, and it is the reason why I follow it now, because these estimates were made by the Secretary of Agriculture upon the advice of the Chief of the Bureau of Soils. Professor Whitney stated before the committee that he could not carry out the line of work which he had mapped for the coming year if that appropriation was cut down.

Now, as to the method of this work. Men are sent out in the territory which is desired to be examined, and maps and physical examinations of the soil are made by them. In many cases there is voluntary tender by the State agricultural colleges of two or three men, who accompany the party from the Department of Agriculture free of charge and assist them in this work.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. GRAFF. Certainly.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Is it not a fact that the United States Government gives to the experimental colleges of the several States $15,000 a year, and that therefore it is not free?

Mr. GRAFF. That is not given for this purpose.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is given to them for all agricultural purposes.

Mr. GRAFF. It is given to them for all agricultural purposes, but this service of these men who accompany this party is simply voluntary upon their part.

Mr. WADSWORTH. We are paying them, and they are not in the employ of the State.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GRAFF. These men are in the employ of the State. I ask unanimous consent that I may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that his time be extended for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GRAFF. A physical examination is made of the different soils. Where it is necessary to have a laboratory examination, then it is made. A county is examined, each separate section and each quarter section is mapped out correctly, and the line of demarcation is drawn upon every different section, showing absolutely the area of different soils in the different sections or quarter sections and counties.

After these maps are completed there is printed under the supervision of this Bureau books containing advice applicable to these different maps, giving advice to the owners of the different farms, so that different agricultural sections of the country will receive the latest and most scientific information as to the particular crops that are adapted to their soil. I esteem this one of the most practical and beneficial appropriations that we have in this bill.

Now, then, who is armed with the necessary information as to the amount of appropriations that is large enough to carry on the work that the Secretary of Agriculture has to perform? Certainly the Secretary of Agriculture himself. There is nothing in the hearings we had that indicated that there was any lavishness of expenditure. On the contrary, everything indicated that the work was done most economically.

The Secretary of Agriculture obtains benefit in many cases from students of agricultural colleges, who are glad to come to this Department in the summer when their colleges are not in session and obtain the benefits which accrue to them by being in the employ of the Secretary of Agriculture in the prosecution of this work, at the small stipend of $480 a year.

Since some States bordering on the Atlantic have chiefly received the benefits of this examination of the soil during the past, I am in favor of reasonable expedition in extending the benefits of this examination to other States of the Union, so that following these examinations there can be other examinations under the Bureau of Plant Industry. The result of it will be a great benefit—a substantial, beneficial gain to the farmers of the country. I am in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from Connecticut to increase this amount to the amount recommended by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, this is a very much more important matter than it looks like on the surface. If the argument made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAFF], who has just taken his seat, is to prevail, then the utility of Congress, the utility of committees in this House charged with the consideration of the proper amounts of appropriations for carrying on executive business, has been absolutely dispensed with. If we are to give a certain amount of money for certain purposes purely and simply because a department chief asks it, or because the chief of a bureau asks it, then we might just as well abdicate our function as a legislative body charged with the duty of fixing the proper amount of expenditures.

Mr. GRAFF. Will the gentleman let me ask him a question?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. GRAFF. The gentleman does not want to create the impression that the committee was unanimous for the appropriation which was returned by the committee?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. How could I be desirous of creating such an impression when I have said nothing about it?

Mr. GRAFF. The committee was almost equally divided on the subject.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. A majority of the committee was in favor of the appropriation as reported; I have forgotten just how they stood; it is out of order to talk about how the committee stood, but since the gentleman has referred to it I will say that it was a good majority, and put my statement against his and let it go.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is to this point that I wish to direct the attention of the House, and that is this: This chief of bureau—who is a gentleman of high character and high competency, an expert on his work, and whose work is work of a very high value to this country in my opinion—came before our committee and asked permission to put fifteen field parties in the field next year instead of ten. Now, a schoolboy can see that an increase of fifteen field parties over ten is an increase of 50 per cent in the work to be done.

Now, this committee has granted him an increase of 55 per cent in the amount of money to do the work, and yet the gentleman is arguing for an increase of over 90 per cent to do an increased work of 50 per cent. It is for that that the gentleman from Illinois is contending. The gentleman from Illinois will not deny that the statement was made by Professor Whitney, the chief of the Bureau. Both in his submission of estimates and in his testimony before the committee he said that what he wanted to do was to put 15 field parties in the field for this soil-mapping business. I do not suppose that anybody will deny that that was an increase of 50 per cent in the work to be performed. The committee has given him an increrse of 55 per cent, because, Mr. Chairman, last year the appropriation for his work was $109,000 and this year it is $169,000, in round numbers, which is an increase of $60,000 upon a basis of a past appropriation of $109,000. That is exactly 55 per cent of increase in money given.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to say that I perhaps know more personally about the character of work being done by this Bureau than any man in this House except the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HENRY]. I have been with the field parties in the work for two or three days at a time, and I know exactly how they sample their soil; I know how they map their soil; I know how they report the mapping back, and I say, without fear of successful contradiction, that an increase of 15 field parties does not require even a proportionate increase of clerical force at Washington in order to collocate their reports and tabulate them and map them and give them to the country.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I do sincerely hope that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HENRY] will be adopted. It does no more than comply with the earnest recommendation of our able and distinguished Secretary of Agriculture, who, thoroughly appreciating the value to the individual farmer of the work being done by the Bureau of Soils, urges that this additional amount be allowed in order that there may be as little delay as possible in giving to him a pittance of the benefits of government.

I regret exceedingly to find myself in opposition to the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], the chairman of the Agricultural Committee, and my highly appreciated friend from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]. But, unquestionably, these two gentlemen have underestimated the importance of a speedy prosecution of this work. They realize the necessity for the work. They both recognize and admit its importance. But the gentleman from Mississippi contends that there is no necessity for that rapid progress in the work advocated by those who are best acquainted with the subject.

The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] contends that the amount carried by the bill is sufficient to defray the expenses of 15 field forces and that there is no necessity for the increase provided for by the amendment of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HENRY]. As a matter of fact, a complete answer to that is, what is to prevent the Chief of the Bureau of Soils, with the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture, from increasing the number of the forces in the field? The gentleman from New York will not deny that this work is important and necessary. The gentleman from Mississippi does not deny that it is important and necessary; but they say——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will ask the gentleman whether the committee has not recommended a sufficient amount to carry on the work according to the plans submitted by Professor Whitney to the committee, with 15 field parties?

Mr. BURLESON. Certainly, if the work is to be limited to 15 field parties——

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is all the work for which plans have been submitted by the Bureau to the committee.

Mr. BURLESON. It is true that for 15 field parties the proposed appropriation might be sufficient; but the Secretary of Agriculture and the Chief of the Bureau of Soils contend that $43,000 should be added to this sum now provided for in the bill, which, of course, will enable them to increase the number of the field forces and more rapidly prosecute this valuable work.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The gentleman is mistaken. The estimate is $215,000 for 15 field parties. There it is [holding out a book].

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. That is right.

Mr. BURLESON. The gentleman does not mean to be understood and will not contend that the Secretary of Agriculture or the Chief of the Bureau of Soils will fritter this money away if it be appropriated.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am not quite so sure of that.

Mr. BURLESON. I am quite sure of it. I have supreme confidence in the honesty and capacity of James Wilson, as Secretary of Agriculture, and also of Milton Whitney, as Chief of the Bureau of Soils. As a matter of fact, this work is important to the agricultural section of this country—East, West, and South. Surely gentlemen will not deny that the Secretary of Agriculture is moderate in his estimate for agricultural appropriations, when it amounts to less than 1 per cent of the total appropriations made for the support of this Government. Why should he be denied his estimates?

We are expending hundreds of millions of dollars for the prosecution of a cruel and unjust war in the Orient. We expect to expend tens of millions of dollars for building additional battle ships. We are asked to make a gift, practically, of six or eight million dollars to aid the farmers in a foreign country—in Cuba. Surely we will not deny to the farming classes of our own country this mere bagatelle, this mere pittance, that will save to the farmers of our own country in one year tenfold the amount of money that is proposed by the Henry amendment to be added to this appropriation bill.

I assert without fear of successful contradiction by the gentleman from New York or the gentleman from Mississippi that the work prosecuted by Professor Whitney's bureau has resulted in saving to the farmers of this country already ten times—yes, a hundredfold—the amount that his Bureau has cost the Government. This Bureau has essentially aided the labors of the farmer by suggesting new cultural methods, which have been brought down to the home of the individual farmer, and have saved thousands and thousands of dollars which might have been expended in unscientific or unintelligent working of the soil of our farms. In Texas and Connecticut alone, as the result of the investigation of the tobacco experts, thousands of dollars have been saved and the profits of the farmers of this country increased accordingly.

Do you realize—and I now speak to the representatives of the great agricultural States of this Union, not in the South alone, but in the Middle West and in the East—do you realize that the proposition is simply to make an increase of $43,000 on the appropriation of last year, and that this proposition is supported by an intelligent presentation of facts by the Secretary of Agriculture showing the necessity for the amount asked and the great good which will result to the farmers if it is allowed? Do you realize the results which the expenditure in this direction has brought to your constituents? The question presents itself here now, will you vote millions of dollars for other purposes, and when our Agricultural Department asks for this small increase for soil surveys deny same——

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed to proceed.

There was no objection.

Mr. BURLESON. The recommendation comes—not unsupported by requests of the people—it does not originate with some member on this floor who has not given the matter proper study, but the recommendation comes to us from the Secretary of Agriculture. After most careful and painstaking investigation he says to the membership of this body from the agricultural States that this great work will be seriously crippled if this pitiful sum now provided for by this amendment should be denied by this body.

And, Mr. Chairman, why should we deny the agricultural classes this just appropriation? They never come knocking at our doors for legislative favor. When an opportunity comes to aid them by doing nothing more than justice, by observing a recommendation made in their behalf by our conscientious Secretary of Agriculture, who will be found to say them nay?

The State which I have the honor to represent here in part is especially interested in the appropriations made in this bill. Texas is a great agricultural State now, but we have been given only a glimpse of its possibilities. Permit me to direct your attention to some of the resources of this great Commonwealth, some conditions which obtain in this little-known section of our country.

When Texas sprang a full-fledged State into the Union—the only one in the history of our country since the original Confederation—she came as an empire of domain. Her people were few and scattered, but she had maintained her autonomy as the Lone Star Republic for more than ten years against the Republic of Mexico, with its millions of people. Withstanding the constant forays of the Mexicans across the Rio Grande on the southwest and the wild dashes of the fierce and savage Apaches and Comanches on all sides, she had sustained herself. Burdened with debts and worn with war, she ceded to the United States for the sum of $10,000,000 what is now a large portion of New Mexico.

Even then she retained a territory gigantic in extent, keeping her public domain in her own control. As the State is to-day the area is 265,760 square miles, greater than all of New England, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, and Maryland combined, larger than the Republic of France or the Empire of Germany, while England, Wales, Scotland, and Ireland placed in the center of Texas as an ocean would be far from the sight of other shores.

Of the 170,000,000 acres of land in the State, only about one-twelfth is now cultivated, while it is safe to say that fully 100,000,000 are susceptible of cultivation, and that of the very highest order.

The population of the State in 1850, the first census taken after her admission, was only 212,592, and by the census of 1900 it was 3,048,710, an increase of more than 14 times, or about 700 per cent, advancing from twenty-seventh to sixth, a more rapid proportionate advance than is shown by any other State.

Texas up to the present has been essentially an agricultural and stock-raising State, and with only one-twelfth of her territory in cultivation is easily first in production, as the following reports will show:

Value of cotton produced in 1900-1901, including cotton-seed products	$173,000,000
Value of corn produced in 1900	32,800,000
Value of wheat produced in 1900	15,000,000
Value of oats produced in 1900	8,500,000
Value of hay produced in 1900	7,200,000
Value of potatoes produced in 1900	2,500,000
Value of barley, etc., in 1900	75,000
Value of vegetables, sugar, tobacco, rice, etc	25,000,000
Giving the astounding total for agricultural products alone of	234,075,000

While the cotton crop, amounting on an average to one-third the total crop of the United States, is at present the main staple of production—though first in the production of cotton and cotton-seed products—yet Texas is rapidly advancing along lines of diversification and fast closing the gap between herself and the leaders in other lines of agricultural production.

Eight years ago not a pound of rice was raised in Texas, while this year there have been planted in rice in the southern counties of the State 212,000 acres, which will produce rice worth more than $7,000,000. There are at least 4,000,000 acres of virgin land suited for rice cultivation in the southern counties of the State, all of which bid fair to be placed in cultivation in the very near future, when they will produce the enormous total of $100,000,000 in value annually.

Fifteen years ago fruits, melons, berries, potatoes, cabbage, and other vegetables were raised for home consumption only. Last year on the "cut-over" timber lands of east Texas and the former grazing lands of the South and Southwest there were raised and shipped over 10,000 cars of early fruits and vegetables to our less-favored countrymen of the bleak West and North, and yet this industry is but in its infancy. The arid lands of the extreme West—once thought fit for absolutely nothing—a large portion of which on the old maps was marked "Llano Estacada" (Staked Plain) as a guide to travelers and regarded as a veritable desert of death, are blossoming into gardens and orchards and vineyards under the kindly influence of scientific irrigation, and produce now fruits and vegetables which rival those of California and Italy.

Along the rich alluvial basins of the rivers in the southern part of the State are to be found the richest sugar lands in the world, capable of producing the highest grades of sugar without the slightest use of fertilizers, and apparently inexhaustible in fertility, some of the plantations having been cultivated for more than forty years.

And all this, with only one-twelfth of the land in cultivation. Lands of marvelous fertility are to be had on practically the purchaser's own terms. Thousands of thrifty and industrious people are annually pouring into the State, and who shall say that in the not far-distant future Texas alone will not be able to feed every man, woman, and child in the United States?

Standing first in the agricultural production of the States, the State occupies the same rank in the raising of cattle, horses, and mules.

Beginning with the far-famed longhorn Texas steer, Texas has has always been first in cattle production. Thirty years ago the public domain of the State was free to the cattle raiser, and much after the fashion of the old pastoral days of ages gone the herds were allowed to roam where they would. At that time no attention was paid to breeding. The half-wild Mexican cattle, with huge horns and scrawny bodies, familiarly known as the "Texas longhorn," together with the equally wild "bad man," brought the name of the State somewhat into disrepute, and such cattle gradually came to be a veritable drug on the live-stock market.

Conditions have changed; the bad man in Texas is now an extinct species; much of the land is now inclosed. The finest varieties of beef stock have been interbred with the native cattle, producing an animal hardy enough to stand the rigors of our average winters without extra feeding or care, and yet rapidly approaching the point of perfection as a beef producer. Nearly one-sixth of all the cattle of the United States, or 8,567,173 neat cattle, exclusive of milch cows, which number close to 900,000, are in the State of Texas; and she is easily first in this respect, as she is in raising horses and mules, with 1,269,432 head of the former and more than 540,000 of the latter, being more than one-sixth of all the mules in the United States.

As with the "Texas longhorn," so in former years the term "Texas razorback" was a term of disrepute in the hog-raising world. This, too, is rapidly changing, and the finest breeds are being introduced and scientific methods applied instead of the loose and haphazard ways of the past. There are now in the State 2,765,614 head of hogs, and she ranks fourth.

There are in Texas 2,700,000 sheep, and she ranks seventh.

Value of live stock marketed in 1900:

Cattle	$48,000,000
Hogs	6,800,000
Sheep and wool	3,160,000
Horses and mules	10,000,000
Giving a grand total of	67,960,000

While practically undeveloped, the State is rich in minerals, and under recent legislation a comprehensive and accurate survey of these resources is now being made. Only recently great quicksilver deposits have been discovered, as also several wonderful silver mines. Gold, copper, asbestos, talc, graphite, and other minerals exist in many places. Garnets, turquoises, and opals are to be found, and the iron-ore beds are practically inexhaustible. Immense deposits of red and gray granite, the finest building stone known, abound in several sections, while marble and the rarer building stones are found in quantities.

Although it may be said that the surface has hardly been scratched, the mineral output of the State, not including oil, has increased in ten years from $2,360,000 in 1890 to $5,300,000 in 1900, and the work done may be considered a trifle compared with the vast possibilities in store. Lack of proper coal supply has in the past prevented the development of the great iron fields of Texas, but the recent marvelous oil discoveries solved this problem. These wonderful oil fields have been so widely exploited that their existence is matter of common knowledge, but their output is so great as to fairly stagger the imagination.

With this cheap and easily transported fuel at hand, the potentialities of which have not yet been fully appreciated, manufacturing enterprises of all description must rapidly develop. While outstripping all others in agriculture and its kindred branches, largely through the lack of fuel supply manufactures of all kinds have been retarded in Texas. True, in cotton-seed-oil mills (of which Texas has 156 more than all the other States combined), cotton compresses and gins, the State stands first, producing more than one-fourth of the total cotton-seed product output of the United States.

Then, too, the 300 or more sawmills of the State, in the vast pine forests of eastern Texas, last year produced more than $16,000,000 worth of lumber, and, as it is safe to estimate that there are not less than 20,000,000,000 feet of pine yet standing, this will continue to be an important industry for years. But in other branches progress has been slow—that is, slow as compared with the phenomenal development along other lines.

In a decade, however, the value of the manufactured products of the State has risen from $70,433,000 in 1890 to $119,414,000 in 1900, or about 70 per cent. Since the oil discoveries, however, cotton mills are springing up like magic over the State, and many other industries are being projected. In fact, the far-reaching effect this discovery must have upon the development of manufacturing in the State is beyond calculation. Producing practically every description of raw material needed in the arts and industries, with this cheap fuel illimitable possibilities in the industrial line are opened up for Texas, and capitalists will not be slow to see it.

That the manufacturing spirit has been aroused may be seen when it is said that there were built in the State during the three months ending December 31, 1901, 1 brewery, 2 canning factories, 10 compresses and gins, 6 cotton and woolen mills, 5 electric-light plants, 1 flour mill, 1 glass factory, 6 ironworking plants, 1 oil refinery, 1 tobacco factory, 34 woodworking plants, and more than 40 miscellaneous manufacturing enterprises were set on foot. The construction of 6 cotton and woolen mills in this brief period marks a great advance, as previous to this there were but 11 mills of this description in the entire State. Two great packeries are now in course of construction in the State, which, when completed, will rival in production those of Chicago and Kansas City and afford a home market for the live-stock raiser.

So large is the State and so varied the products that to be properly considered it should be divided into sections.

In east and northeast Texas are found the great forests of pine, and on the cut-over pine lands fruits and vegetables of every description are raised with splendid success. From this section alone there were shipped last year more than 3,000 cars of peaches, not to mention the great number of cars of other fruits and vegetables. It is an ideal location for the poor man. This land may be had at a price of from $2 to $5 per acre, and 20 acres will handsomely support a family. The climate is genial, the water supply splendid, the people thrifty and hospitable, the occupation pleasant and congenial, and thousands of weary toilers from the older States are finding in this section what they have long sought in vain—happy homes of peace and plenty.

North Texas, or what is known as the "Panhandle country," produces practically all the wheat that is raised in the State and of a grade without a superior in the world. On the high sunshiny plateaus of this section, too, are to be found countless herds of cattle, thriving upon the nutritious native grasses on ranches so vast in extent that their area is beyond the comprehension of dwellers in cities.

Central Texas and a portion of the southerly region constitute the typical cotton belt of the State, where more than two-thirds of the crop of the entire State is raised. There are in this belt more than 20 counties which raise annually over 40,000 bales of cotton, several of them going above 100,000 bales each, constituting a larger number of counties raising this amount than are found in all the other cotton-raising States of the South. Here, too, corn flourishes, and raising hogs for sale to the Texas packeries offers a most profitable field and is being largely widened.

In the southern tier of counties on the coast, where the land is as rich as the Delta of the Nile, the sugar yield is enormous, while the cotton yield per acre is incredible. Both here and in the southeast as well, rice cultivation is being developed by leaps and bounds.

In the tier of coast counties, with their mild, semitropical climate, all varieties of fruit and vegetables thrive splendidly, and this section is rapidly becoming a great garden.

In the west, where the climate is dry and the rainfall scant, are located the greatest cattle ranches in the United States. The climate in this section is peculiarly suited to cattle raising, and they flourish in the open air throughout the year, while the plains are covered with grasses particularly adapted to their needs. In this section, too, recently water has been obtained in sufficient quantities, through the medium of artesian wells and storage reservoirs, to develop irrigation, and in the dry air and fertile soil grapes and fruits of all descriptions are grown that equal any in the world.

In the southwest and extreme west are found the extensive mineral deposits and beds of building stone, and, when developed, the prosperity of this section is assured.

That some definite idea of the phenomenal growth of the State during the last thirty years may be had, the following percentages should be noted:

Since 1870 there has been an increase in cotton production of 800 per cent, in corn production of 425 per cent, in wheat production of 3,754 per cent, in oat production of 2,653 per cent, in taxable values of 430 per cent, in railway mileage of 1,350 per cent, and the population has quadrupled.

The sum total of the production of the State last year was—

For agricultural products	$264,075,000
For live stock	67,000,000
Mineral products	5,300,000
Manufactures	119,000,000
Giving an aggregate production of	455,789,000

The agricultural and live-stock products alone amounted to $331,075,000, or a per capita of over $100 for every man, woman, and child in the State, while the average production for the United States is less than $50 per capita.

You will pardon me if I digress for a moment to direct attention to three other important features of development and progress in my State. Texas has a magnificent school system. Retaining her public domain on entering the Union, 40,000,000 acres of it were set aside for the common schools, and the fund now equals $64,000,000, which, with moderate taxation, supports this splendid school system, giving employment to more than 15,000 teachers for nine months in each year. The instruction given in the common schools is well supplemented by three splendidly equipped normal schools, a thoroughly appointed Agricultural and Mechanical College, and a State University of the first class, with a princely endowment fund and an assured future of increasing usefulness.

Texas ranks third in railroad mileage, and before the end of this decade will easily rank first, because annually more miles are constructed within her boundaries than in any other State of the Union. Her protected harbors upon the Gulf coast are rapidly taking rank with the leading ports of the world. Galveston is now the fourth or fifth exporting port in the United States, having 38 regular lines of steamships plying therefrom to foreign ports, and the wonderful development of the country tributary to it will soon make it second only to New York. And when the isthmian canal shall be constructed these ports will at once become the gateways through which perforce the products of the great Middle West must pass on their journey to the Orient.

Possessing millions of acres of unsurpassedly fertile soil, with low land values, genial climate, magnificent schools, great railway systems, splendid ports, progressive and enlightened people, gigantic material resources in the infancy of development, and hospitably welcoming teeming thousands of thrifty and industrious immigrants to her soil each year; if this is the Texas of to-day, is it rash to peer into the future and prophesy that before the next half century shall have been rounded out the Lone Star will glitter foremost in the diadem of the States?

The information I give you can be relied upon. It was prepared originally by an expert connected with the Agricultural Department, subsequently was verified for me by statisticians connected with the Census Bureau, and was finally compiled by a thoroughly accurate and cultured gentleman from Texas, Mr. A. J. Clopton.

In conclusion, gentlemen of the committee, I appeal to you in the interest of the farmer who farms—not of the "agriculturist" we hear so much of on the floor of this House; I urge you, in the interest of the burden-bearing farmer, who is to be benefited by this appropriation, that you vote for the amendment of the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, in some remarks of mine, reported on page 5137 of the RECORD, near the bottom of the first column, I did injustice to one of the officers of the Agricultural Department, by referring to the Bureau of Plant Industry when I should have referred to the Bureau of Animal Industry. I desire to make a correction in that respect. It was the Chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry who made the argument which I cited in reference to the typewriters.

Now, upon this proposition of the Bureau of Soils, the committee fully considered the work of that Bureau, together with all the evidence and statements brought before it. A few moments ago I desired to interrupt the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] for the purpose of referring to another item that was added to the appropriation of last year for that Bureau.

I desire to call the attention of the committee to the manner in which this Bureau has grown up, and how the appropriations have grown, and how, if that Bureau is permitted to continue in the way Dr. Whitney has mapped out it should be, it would absolutely swamp this Government. In his own statement that he filed with the committee he says that the "Division of Soils was organized in the Weather Bureau in 1894 by an Executive order; in 1895 it became an independent division in the Department, with an appropriation of $15,000; in 1899 the functions were enlarged to include the mapping of tobacco soil and other necessary tobacco investigation"—and if gentlemen will investigate they will find out that is about all of a practical nature that one can see that this Bureau has ever done—"with a total appropriation of $26,300."

See how it grows from year to year. "In 1900 the appropriation was increased to $31,300. In the act approved March 2, 1901, the division was reorganized into a bureau with an appropriation of $109,140." What else? That was not sufficient to meet the average of this Department, and I wonder every day that any of these departments have ever survived, if the statements made on this floor since I have kept any track of public affairs are to be accepted as true, that if you shut off the appropriation a little they will be so crippled that they can not survive. After the appropriation bill passed the Fifty-sixth Congress they got a joint resolution for $20,000 more, and he says in his statement here:

> And in joint resolution No. 8, of the same Congress, provision was made for the printing annually of 17,000 copies of the field operations of the then division at an estimated cost of $20,000.

Now, that is what that bureau got. It used $129,000 in doing what? In mapping about 6,000,000 acres of land, just about what there is in my Congressional district, and that is what has been done, and now my friend here says they just want a little picayune appropriation. This committee has made an appropriation of $168,960, within $40 of $169,000, and that is the way it is picking up, and now my brother here, a member of the committee, proposes to double it and to increase it still further, and for what purpose? I would like gentlemen to read through the report found in the hearings here and see what this Bureau has ever done, if anything, of a practical nature. He says that in Connecticut they have succeeded in raising a few acres—that is the way he puts it, and he puts it just as strong as he could—a few acres of Sumatra wrapper tobacco.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. One thousand acres this year.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Forty-two acres, he says, they have a hope of raising this year.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Nearly a thousand this year.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Michigan may be extended five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I want to correct the gentleman from Michigan. Just one moment——

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Does what you are about to say appear in your speech?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Not at all; I just want to correct the gentleman. In 1900 there was about half an acre of tent-grown tobacco, in 1901 there were 42 acres, and in 1902 there are to be nearly 1,000 acres—between 800 and 1,000 acres.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Conceding that to be true, I think that $169,000 spent by this Government to raise that amount of tobacco is quite sufficient.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. The Government does not raise it.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Well, to tell people how to raise it, and to tell people what kind of soil they must use.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. The Government has never raised any.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Why, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the farmers of this country by making a test and by actual experience know what kind of soil will raise this and what kind of soil will raise that, without a lot of professors of soils.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. That is just what they do not know.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. And doctors of chemistry and professors of weeds [laughter] to go around and instruct them as to how they shall raise their crops. The practical farmer is the farmer that ought to be encouraged and the farmer that will succeed in the end, not the farmer who spends his time attending institutes and reading these scientific discourses, but the farmer who gets out by daylight and closes at nighttime, who works no eight hours, but eight hours before dinner and eight hours after dinner; he is the man who will succeed on the farm.

Now, this man, the Chief of this Bureau, as I said last evening, at Government expense, has printed a circular, which he has sent to every member of Congress, indicating where he is going to work this summer and what he is going to do. Look it over and see what he is going to do for $169,000. Fifteen of these parties are to be sent out, and, as I figure it up, that gets into 17 different counties in the United States, and they map out a little soil here and there and tell the people how much soil in this county and that county can raise tobacco and how much can be raised in this and how much can be raised in that. It is absolutely without practicability, and I hope that the conclusion to which the committee came after hearing the evidence and all the statements and the statement of the Commissioner of Agriculture will be sustained. The appropriation is ample.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, there seems to be a little confusion as to the information on this subject.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. It looks as though there was going to be more.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I doubt it very much, since I have listened to the gentleman from Michigan. There seems to be confusion, Mr. Chairman, as to exactly what the Department has recommended. It seems that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], a member of the committee, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAFF] differ as to what the representative of the Agriculture Department stated before the committee. Now, I have in my possession here a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Wilson, dated subsequent to the committee hearings. The date of it is April 26, 1902, found in RECORD of April 28, pages 5070-5071, in which that distinguished Commissioner says that a part of the work that this Bureau has already done will have to be abandoned unless the appropriation is made as he has recommended—that is, unless the amendment of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HENRY] is agreed to.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Will the gentleman submit to a question?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Certainly.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. To give the gentleman an opportunity to prove that there is not going to be any more confusion, I should like to have the gentleman, who always is accurate in his information upon all subjects, advise me and the committee what reason there is why these experiment stations throughout the country, engaged in the same business, can not do this surveying of soils and everything that the Bureau of Soils now proposes to do.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, that is a very pregnant question which the gentleman has asked me. I am not a member of the committee, but I will undertake to answer it as best I can.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. I did not ask you because you were a member of the committee, but because of your information.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, I thank the gentleman. I will tell the gentleman what the Secretary of Agriculture has mapped out, anticipating that this appropriation would be granted as requested.

I hold in my hand a little leaflet, sent out by the Secretary of Agriculture, prepared by "Milton Whitney, chief of the bureau; approved by James Wilson, Secretary of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., March 12, 1902," which states, Mr. Chairman, that the agents of the Soil Bureau will be sent to the following States. Now, I hope the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HENRY C. SMITH] will not produce confusion by walking around and not listening to what I am saying.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Oh, I listen better when I am walking around.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, doubtless the gentleman will be more entertained if he will talk to himself.

Mr. Chairman, this little official pamphlet states that the "Bennett party" will go to Texas; the "Bonsteel party" to Illinois, Indiana, and Mississippi; the "Burke party" to New Jersey, and later to Alabama; the "Caine party" are going to Kentucky and Alabama, and the "Coffey party" to Illinois and North Carolina; the "Fippin party" to Iowa, Missouri, and Georgia; the "Heileman party" to California and Utah; the "Holmes party" to the State of Washington; the "Jensen party" to Montana, North Dakota, and Minnesota; the "Lapham party" to Kansas, Arkansas, and Texas, and later to Colorado, and that a "new party" will go at a later date to Kentucky. The "Marean party" has already gone to the tobacco districts of Tennessee and Kentucky, and is now to go to the "Pikeville East Tennessee" region. The "Mesmer party" is going to New York and to Florida, and the "Mooney party" to Virginia; the "Smith party" to Ohio and Florida, and the "Taylor party" to South Carolina.

Mr. OLMSTED. There does not seem to be any party going to Pennsylvania.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. They have already been there. The first map that was ever made in this kind of work was a map of the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH rose.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now, I hope the gentleman from Michigan will not create too much confusion.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Just one question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. In the first paragraph of that card it is stated that these recitals have been made with the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture, is it not?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I believe so. I take your word for it.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Does not the gentleman understand what is meant by the next sentence——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well now, I hope the gentleman will not take all my time.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH (reading):

> With the understanding that such modifications and changes will be made as are called for by the exigencies of the public service.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Of course the whole plan of work can be changed. Now, I am going to show, if the gentleman and the committee will bear with me——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have leave to conclude his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. How much time does the gentleman ask for?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I should like ten minutes. I have no personal interest on earth in this. I am not a tobacco farmer, but I am trying to aid them. I am simply trying to enlighten the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HENRY C. SMITH], and I do not know any man who needs it any more on this subject. An examination has been made in Montgomery County, Tenn., and some counties in Kentucky, and the maps and reports will be ready for distribution in September next.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the gentleman be allowed to proceed for ten minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. We can look and see from this map how the soil varies in composition, as shown by the varying colors on this map. They will color one piece of land of a certain composition a certain way, and make an index of it, and go to another section of country and color that with another, and another, and so on, so that the farmer will know exactly what the soil he is trying to till will grow and what it will produce and what the farmer needs to make it produce.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. What section of the country is that a map of?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I think it is Pennsylvania. I have one here from Pennsylvania.

Mr. OLMSTED. I should not recognize it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I will send it over to my friend and let him see.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I would like the gentleman to explain what is meant by the coloring on the map he has in his hand.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I have one here which the gentleman can see.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I would like the gentleman to explain one of the maps that he has there. I acknowledge that I could not explain one of them myself.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I am picking up the missing stitches that the gentleman has dropped.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will admit that, Mr. Chairman, but the gentleman does not explain the map.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. But the farmer will if you will give him a chance. [Laughter.] I have never seen a farmer yet who was not at home on the ground floor, and I have been one myself.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. This map is of Pennsylvania.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. My friend from Kentucky says this map is from Pennsylvania, as I said. The Department sent me these some months ago. You can all get them. Here is the list of these maps: Lancaster sheet, Pennsylvania; then next is Montgomery, Ohio; next is St. Mary County, Md.; the next Carroll County, Md.; next Kent County, Md.; next Cecil County, Md.; the next Utah, and so on.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as a matter of fact they have been in Connecticut, in Massachusetts, Texas, Tennessee, and Kentucky. They have been in all the Eastern States that amount to anything, Mr. Chairman, and you know they all amount to a great deal on the floor of this House particularly. Now, then, the purpose of this appropriation is to send these agents not only on this new work for the next year, as mapped out by Secretary Wilson, but it is to permit these agents to finish the work now incomplete that may not be finished unless this appropriation is made. Now, they are going in every Southern State next year. These agents have been sent to Tennessee, Texas, Massachusetts, Connecticut, and Pennsylvania, North Carolina, Georgia, Mississippi, and Louisiana. The work mapped out for next year is in part for Arkansas, Texas, Tennessee, North Carolina, Virginia, Alabama, Mississippi, and other States South, East, and West.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman from Tennessee permit an interruption?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I want to interrupt the gentleman to state that he has misunderstood the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I have a letter here from him and I will read it.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The Secretary of Agriculture has never stated that he could not complete the work already in progress, but that he could not complete the work already in progress and also take in all the new work he wanted.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I always listen with great respect to what the gentleman says, and I may be mistaken in what Secretary Wilson has said or meant. To set myself right if I am wrong, and accentuate my position if I am right, I will read the letter which Secretary Wilson addressed to me April 26, 1902—a week ago:

> I inclose a statement of the assignment of the soil-survey parties for the field season of 1902, so that you can see where the work is to be done and how it has been necessary for us to assign parties to a State only for three or six months, instead of giving them the full field season, as economy of time and labor would suggest.
> This assignment has been tentatively made on the basis of my estimates, in which I have provided for an increase of 5 field parties over our last season's assignment.
> The soil survey in Montgomery County was made as a basis for tobacco investigations such as we have been carrying on in the past in Connecticut, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, Ohio, and Texas.
> It was my plan to increase the tobacco parties next year, and allowance was made for this in my estimates, but as these estimates have been considerably reduced by the committee I have abandoned all plans for extending the tobacco investigations, at least, on the 1st of July, as I had intended, and it may be necessary to reduce somewhat the work of the soil survey.

This, I say, Mr. Chairman, corroborates my statements. This plan of work in these States, he says, was based on his estimates, and this committee has refused to appropriate the amount the Secretary needs and must have.

The Secretary distinctly says:

I have abandoned all plans for extending the tobacco investigations, at least, on the 1st of July, as I had intended, and it may be necessary to reduce somewhat the work of the soil survey. It rests with Congress entirely as to how rapidly this work can be developed, as we are ready now with a nucleus of trained observers to undertake the development of these lines of research to any extent that Congress may authorize.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there it is. He says he has already determined to abandon a part of the work that he had mapped out—that I have read from this leaflet—and simply because the committee by a majority of one, it seems, has failed to follow his recommendation. Now, there is no man in the departments for whom I have a higher esteem than I have for the Secretary of Agriculture. There is no man more faithful, and I do not know of any recommendation that he has made here since I have been in Congress to this honorable body that has not been followed out literally. He has trained agents, and that work he has determined to abandon.

These men go into the tobacco and other fields all over the country, regardless of section, as he says in this letter to me. Here is what he said:

We have tried to develop the work of the Bureau of Soils, as the other bureaus and divisions, without regard to sectional or State lines.

Now, this Bureau cost last year, according to the report of the Secretary—

	Amount.	Per cent.
Administrative expenses	$10,081.68	25.3
Laboratories	5,929.45	14.9
Tobacco investigations	5,609.64	14
Eastern soil survey	8,828.88	22.2
Western soil survey	9,392.45	23.6
Total	39,842.10	100

He further says:

Every impartial reader of this report will concede to me the right to point to the work of the Division of Soils as work which fully and thoroughly meets the supreme test of the Department's practical utility, namely, the material benefits accruing to the tillers of the soil with a very modest expenditure of public funds.

Now, Mr. Chairman, shall we curtail what the Secretary of Agriculture says to me in this letter of six days ago? Shall we curtail this great benefit to the farmer that comes right down to his door, that goes with the farmer, even if he is a member of Congress from Mississippi? He confers on himself the great pleasure of taking a member of Congress out of his cottage, carries him out into God's sunshine, and teaches him how to raise tobacco in Mississippi. He examines the soil of the high and low alike. No distinctions, no class is ignored—all treated alike. Here we are paralyzing what this distinguished officer has mapped out for next year; we are cramping him in executing the work he has to finish up by September next, as his letter states. I wrote him to find out what he had done, otherwise I would not have had this information. He says, "I have already determined to abandon this work." He is to leave the farmer uncared for, though he wanted to care for him all over the country, and all because Congress refuses to appropriate this amount of money that he has asked and what Dr. Whitney has indorsed.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be advised as to whether or not the Chairman's clock has stopped?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee was extended ten minutes, and not five.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. There is confusion again from the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HENRY C. SMITH], who wants to kick this appropriation out of this bill. I venture to say he never saw a morning glory or a sunflower [laughter], and he would not know a cotton boll from a rabbit's tail; and yet, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is a member of the Agricultural Committee, and comes here, and, I believe for the first time, uses his great power of speech and his great brain force, his charming individuality and glittering words to crush the proposition of this distinguished Commissioner of Agriculture in his efforts, and to restrain the possibility of that Commissioner to aid the farmer, who is the cornerstone of society, our helpmeet in peace, and our soldier in time of war. [Applause.]

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, the amount of appropriations is simply a matter of judgment as to what amount of money can be expended judiciously during the fiscal year. If the committee will turn to the appropriations for this particular division during the last seven or eight years, as the gentleman from Michigan has already stated, it has grown from $15,000 to $168,960. The increase in this bill—and I ask the attention of the House to this statement—the increase in allowance for scientific work is $540,000.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Will the gentleman allow me an interruption?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I want to ask if the great increase in the appropriations for this particular division has not been due to the fact that within that time it has been organized into a separate bureau?

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is true. Now, Mr. Chairman, in the estimate submitted on the card by Professor Whitney, $14,000 was for tobacco-soil service in Porto Rico. Further on in the bill, under the clause of experimental stations, you will find $15,000 given for an experimental station in Porto Rico. We thought that was enough, and we eliminated the $14,000 from the estimate of Professor Whitney; and in that line, if you will turn back to page 33, you find we have limited his work to the United States, because we thought that charity should begin at home. The next item is $27,500 for emergencies. Now, 10 per cent of the whole we thought sufficient for an emergency fund, and that would reduce that to $16,000, giving $14,000 for surveys. The $14,000 for Porto Rico and the $17,000 taken from the emergency fund would make $31,000. So, as a matter of fact, we are within $15,000 of his estimate.

Now, the increase in appropriations for two years is $1,300,000, and I do not think that any member of this committee can charge the Committee on Agriculture with cheeseparing or being parsimonious. Our one single object has been to keep the Department of Agriculture well in advance of the needs of the country.

In regard to the charge that the items were not fully considered in committee, let me say one word. The subcommittee is composed of 5 members, 3 of those members having served on the committee seven years, and I venture to say they have a pretty good knowledge of the Agricultural Department and its wants. Two have served four years. With one exception the report of the subcommittee was unanimous, and the judgment of the subcommittee was sustained by the full committee. I think the Committee on Agriculture has given the committee full hearings, and every bureau chief appeared before the subcommittee once and some of them twice. I hope the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I shall only occupy the attention of the committee a moment. This amendment is of great importance to the agricultural interests of the country. I am obliged to the chairman of the committee for bringing us back again to the question at issue. It appears that the committee increased the appropriation for the Bureau of Soils by $60,000, and this amendment proposes to increase the appropriation for part of the work in that bureau by $40,000 more; and, as the chairman of the committee states, it is merely a question of judgment to be exercised by each individual member of this House as to whether this amendment increasing the appropriation is advisable. If the contention of the gentleman from Michigan is true, we should have no Agricultural Department whatever, and there certainly would not be this broadening and increase of its powers and investigations.

If the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] is right in his contention, then we are brought back to the original proposition, that it is merely a question of judgment for the members of this House to determine. I shall not rehearse the several reasons and propositions which have been laid down by various gentlemen who are in favor of this amendment, except to say that I believe if the members of this House (the House being in confusion at the time) could have heard in full the remarks of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HENRY] when he was giving his reasons why this amendment should be adopted, there would not be a dissenting voice upon the question outside of the members upon the committee who are already committed against the amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Does the gentleman imagine that the members of the committee did not hear the gentleman from Connecticut give his reasons?

Mr. SMALL. If so, I am all the more astonished that they have not been converted.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. But I hope the gentleman will not convey the impression that we did not hear the gentleman from Connecticut state his reasons.

Mr. SMALL. I am only surprised that those reasons were not more influential with you.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to say that when this House was considering the sundry civil appropriation bill it increased, by substantial amounts, the appropriation for topographic surveys and for engraving maps based upon those surveys. Now, it must be admitted by those who are familiar with the work of the Bureau of Soils that its work and its maps are as important, and demand as much skill as the topographic surveys made by the Geological Bureau, and as we have increased the appropriation for topographic surveys, it follows that in considering this amendment increasing the appropriation for the work of the Bureau of Soils, a large part of which is for the making of maps based upon their investigations, there should be less hesitation upon the part of the Committee of the Whole in adopting this amendment. I hope it will be adopted.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I would like to ask the gentleman this question: Why should 15 field parties to be employed in doing the work which the Agricultural Department, and particularly this chief of bureau, wants done, cost 90 per cent more than 10 field parties now at work?

Mr. SMALL. I think I can answer that inquiry. The gentleman from Mississippi calculates that the increase recommended by the committee to this House is sufficient to do the work recommended by the Department.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. SMALL. I ask unanimous consent for a few minutes more.

There was no objection.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the gentleman from North Carolina realize that we are now within $15,000 of the estimate?

Mr. SMALL. As I understand, the committee has increased the appropriation for the work of the Bureau of Soils $60,000 over the appropriation of last year. Now, the amendment of the gentleman from Connecticut seeks to increase the appropriation under the heading, "General expenses of the Bureau of Soils." He proposes an increase of that appropriation from $130,000 to $170,000, being an increase of $40,000, and this proposition has the warm recommendation and approval of the Secretary of Agriculture.

The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] has asked why we should appropriate $170,000 for this work when, according to his calculation, the amount recommended by the committee is sufficient. I think the answer to that inquiry is this: It is simply a difference of opinion and calculation and judgment between the gentleman from Mississippi and the Secretary of Agriculture, and with all due deference to the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi, I prefer to accept the judgment of the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The gentleman from North Carolina has not answered my question. It does not turn upon any difference of calculation. I asked why the proposed increase from 10 field parties to 15 field parties, which is the proposition made by this Bureau and by the Department (being an increase of 50 per cent in the number employed), should cost 90 per cent additional in money.

Mr. SMALL. As the Secretary of Agriculture says the increase is necessary I prefer to stand by his judgment.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, this is not a question as to the standing or integrity of the Secretary of Agriculture, as would seem to be implied by the remarks of the distinguished gentleman from Texas. I yield to no one in admiration for the eminent citizen of my State who is now occupying the place of Secretary of Agriculture. I, with every other citizen of the great State of Iowa, entertain for that gentleman the highest regard. We respect him for his ability, his sound judgment, his profound wisdom. But, as I have said, this is not a question as to the standing of the Secretary of Agriculture. The question under consideration at this time is as to the necessity for these appropriations—what should be appropriated at this time for this Department for the next fiscal year?

This matter has received earnest and careful consideration by the Committee on Agriculture, and no one will question the integrity or judgment of the members of that committee. We have members on that committee who have had experience and who have thorough knowledge of affairs and as to the needs of this Department. This bill comes here as the result of weeks and months of labor, earnest consideration, and thought, and no one will question the sound judgment of the distinguished chairman of this committee. He has consulted with the Secretary and the chiefs of the Department, and after due deliberation these appropriations have been made or recommended, believing them to be adequate to meet all legitimate demands on the Agricultural Department that can be judiciously and economically expended, and I submit to you that their recommendations are worthy of your consideration.

I believe that the Committee on Agriculture have dealt liberally with the Department of Agriculture in appropriating $5,158,570, which is an increase of $576,150 over last year, and it would seem that this is a very liberal increase, taking into consideration the appropriations made in recent years. We have an increase of $1,975,668 in six years. The appropriations for the last six years have been—

For 1897-98 the appropriation was $3,182,902.
For 1898-99 it was $3,509,202, an increase of $326,300.
For 1899-1900 it was $3,726,022, an increase of $216,820.
For 1900-1901 it was $4,023,500, an increase of $297,478.
For 1901-2 it was $4,582,420, an increase of $558,920.
This bill carries $5,158,570, an increase of $576,150.

The committee recommend an increase of $540,000 for scientific bureaus over last year.

The bill appropriates for the current fiscal year—

Office of Secretary	$71,670
Weather Bureau	1,148,320
Animal Industry	1,154,030
Plant Industry	496,680
Forestry	185,440
Chemistry	35,800
Soils	109,140
Entomology	36,200
Biology	32,800
Accounts	18,900
Publications	198,020
Experiment stations	789,000

In view of the liberal amount allowed in this bill I trust that this amendment will be voted down.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH rose.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Just a moment, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I have the floor. Mr. SMITH of Michigan, a member of the committee, desires just a minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan is recognized.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, I want in the first place to complete what I suggested to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES] who suggested that the plans of this Bureau were approved by the Commissioner of Agriculture. I was not permitted to finish what was stated in the card, and that is this:

The following assignments of field parties for the season of 1902 are made with the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture, with the understanding that such modifications and changes will be made as are called for by the exigencies of the public service and may be directed from time to time by Chief of the Bureau of Soils.

I would like to inquire what the Secretary of Agriculture has approved, and why this chief here claims the right to make the changes and modifications. Now, one other suggestion. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], a member of the committee, and a brighter and more able man is not on the floor of this House, candid and honest every day of his life, has heard every syllable of the testimony before this committee, every sentence of it, and he has heard every argument, and he knows all the facts, and he has put to gentlemen who are in favor of this amendment a proposition that is not answered and can not be answered, and that is, why does it require 90 per cent more of money to do 50 per cent more of work; and I want to make one other observation and then I will leave the subject.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Oh, I have only a minute, and I hope the gentleman will not insist upon it. As the chairman of this committee has shown, and shown conclusively, when you take it——

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Surely the gentleman does not want to misrepresent the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. No; the Secretary of Agriculture makes his reports in just this way——

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. He calls on the chiefs of these bureaus, and the chiefs of these bureaus make a report to him, and here it is, and the members of the House are familiar with it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. What is the date of that report?

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. And the Secretary of Agriculture simply transmits it just the same as any other head of a department does. Now, as I was about to say——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee rose.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. The gentleman from Tennessee has had twenty minutes, ten minutes more than I thought he had, and I decline to be interrupted any further. I want to suggest this, as the chairman of the committee has said and has shown, when you take investigations for Hawaii and investigations for Porto Rico, and this contingent fund, which is a dangerous fund, out of the estimates, they are as liberal as could be submitted, and the committee makes allowance for within $15,000 of what is asked, and I submit the conclusion of the committee should be followed.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. How much time does the gentleman want.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I want only two minutes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Well, go ahead.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Surely the gentleman does not wish to misrepresent the Secretary of Agriculture. He has been before our subcommittee repeatedly and he has been before the whole committee, and he has distinctly said that unless he could have the full amount of this appropriation he would have to call in his field parties, that he could not do the work that he had planned, and as I said before, members certainly will be disappointed who are expecting to have field work done in their districts unless they vote this appropriation; there is no question about it. The gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], I think, has a letter in his pocket now that says emphatically, more emphatically, what I say in this respect.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have no such letter in my pocket at all. Now, I move that the debate on that paragraph be closed.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I hope the gentleman will permit further debate.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I hold the floor. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. BURLESON. Then give me five.

Mr. WADSWORTH. You are not a member of the committee, and I yield only two minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the members who have been induced to take this stand by the hope that they are going to get these survey parties in their respective districts to the language and the manner in which this card was issued.

Mr. BURLESON. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Certainly, if I can answer it in two minutes.

Mr. BURLESON. I do not expect to have any survey parties in my district. I do not expect to apply for them.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I did not mention any names, and it follows from your own statement that you were not meant. I repeat, I want to call the attention of the gentlemen who are induced to take this position by the fact that they expect to get soil-survey parties in their respective districts to this part of the card, and I wish them to listen to me. This is what is in this card: First, there is the inducement and the reward held out, and then there is the threat that follows it. I read:

The allotments for the periods previous to June 30 will be paid out of the appropriation for the current fiscal year.

Here are the allotments stated subsequently in the card, viz, 15 field parties. There is no expression of doubt but what this work can be done out of the present appropriation, and will be done out of it up to June 30. Then there follows:

The allotments for the periods subsequent to July 1 will be paid out of the appropriations for the Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903—

Here is the promise, so that the various Congressmen interested can see the benefit to them, and then follows the threat—and are therefore subject to such appropriations as may be made by the Congress for that year.

Well, if they can do it up to June 30 on a basis of $109,000, why the need of this threat or intimation of possibility of being left out in the cold on the basis of $168,000 after June 30—left out unless the Bureau can get all it wants? [Applause.]

Mr. WADSWORTH. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and amendments be closed.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves that all debate on this paragraph and amendments be closed.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I hope the gentleman will not do that. Certain criticisms have been made——

Mr. WADSWORTH. The gentleman has already had twenty minutes. I insist on my motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HENRY], to strike out, in lines 17 and 18, page 34, after the word "expenses," the words "one hundred and thirty thousand dollars" and to insert "$173,000."

The question being taken, on a division demanded by Mr. HENRY of Connecticut, there were—ayes 15, noes 53.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that no quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules that the point of order is not well taken.

The Clerk read as follows:

Division of Statistics, salaries: One statistician, who shall be chief of division, $3,000; 1 assistant statistician, who shall be assistant chief of division, $2,200; 3 clerks class 4, $5,400; 4 clerks class 3, $6,400; 5 clerks class 2, $7,000; 8 clerks class 1, $9,600; 10 clerks at $1,000 each, $10,000; 4 clerks at $840 each, $3,360; in all, $46,960.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the next paragraph may be read, and then the two considered together.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks that the next paragraph may be read, and that and the paragraph which has just been read be considered together. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. GROSVENOR having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. CROOK, one of his secretaries, who informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

On April 29, 1902:

H. R. 11096. An act to refund the amount of duties paid in Porto Rico upon articles imported from the several States from April 11, 1899, to May 1, 1900, to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to render judgment thereon, and making an appropriation therefor;

H. R. 13819. An act for the relief of certain indigent Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes;

H. R. 13031. An act to prohibit the coming into and to regulate the residence within the United States, its Territories, and all territory under its jurisdiction, and the District of Columbia of Chinese and persons of Chinese descent; and

H. J. Res. 180. Joint resolution authorizing the entry free of duty of a replica of the bronze statue of Rochambeau, by Ferdinand Hamar, and pedestal for the same.

H. R. 2167. An act granting a pension to Mahala Jane Kuhn;

H. R. 6760. An act granting a pension to Susan House;

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

General expenses, Division of Statistics: Collecting domestic and foreign agricultural statistics; compiling, writing, and illustrating statistical matter for monthly, annual, and special reports; special investigations and compilations; subscription to, and purchase of, statistical and newspaper publications containing data for permanent comparative records; maps and charts; stationery supplies, blanks, blank books, circulars, paper, envelopes, postal cards, postage stamps, freight and express charges, including employment of labor in the city of Washington and elsewhere, and necessary traveling expenses: Provided, That the monthly crop report, issued on the 10th day of each month, shall embrace a statement of the condition of the crops, by States, in the United States, with such explanations, comparisons, and information as may be useful for illustrating the above matter, and that it shall be submitted to, and officially approved by, the Secretary of Agriculture before being issued or published, $94,200, of which sum not more than $40,000 shall be expended for salaries in the city of Washington, Distict of Columbia; in all, for the Division of Statistics, $141,160.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

On pages 40 and 41 strike out all of lines 6 on page 40 to 13 on page 41, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"General expenses, Division of Crops and Statistics: Collecting domestic and foreign agricultural statistics; compiling, writing, and illustrating statistical matter for monthly, annual, and special reports; special investigations and compilations; subscriptions to, and purchase of, statistical and newspaper publications containing data for permanent comparative records; maps and charts; stationery supplies, blanks, blank books, circulars, paper, envelopes, postal cards, postage stamps, freight and express charges, including employment of clerical and other assistants and labor in the city of Washington and elsewhere, and necessary traveling expenses: Provided, That the monthly crop report, issued not later than the 5th day of each month, shall embrace a statement of the condition of the crops, by States, in the United States, with such explanations, comparisons, and information as may be useful for illustrating the above matter, and that it shall be prepared and issued by the Weather Bureau, and be submitted to, and officially approved by, the Secretary of Agriculture before being issued or published, $80,000, of which sum not more than $30,000 shall be expended for salaries in the city of Washington, D. C."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the attention of the committee for a moment while I explain the effect of this amendment. If adopted, it strikes out absolutely lines 6 on page 40 to 13 on page 41, inclusive, Division of Statistics, salaries, etc., and it leaves the next paragraph—general expenses, Division of Statistics—but amends it by cutting down the amount, so that in the two items together it decreases the appropriation $60,000, and in my judgment has the effect to put all the statistical work in one division of statistics, namely, the Weather Bureau. I have no doubt, if this amendment should be adopted, that it will stop the duplication of work and give us more effective statistical information from the Department of Agriculture for $60,000 less money than we now get. It is along the lines of good appropriation and good administration. It is an open secret, and has been for a long time, that the Weather Bureau, with its service everywhere throughout the country and its daily reports, gathers most of the statistics that are utilized by the Division of Statistics and issues them. Now, all I want to do is to have it well done and done one time. I believe the amendment ought to be adopted.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, it is with a great deal of diffidence that I venture to oppose any suggestion made in this House by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], for whose opinion on any question, and particularly on any question relating to the public expenditure, we all have so high a regard. But this is a matter to which I have given very careful consideration, and I am so thoroughly convinced that the provisions of this bill as they stand should be retained, I am so thoroughly convinced that the adoption of the amendment now pending would materially embarrass the work of a very important division in the Department of Agriculture that I must give to the members of the House who do me the honor to listen to me some of the reasons which have brought me to this conclusion.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] offers this amendment for the reason, as he alleges, that the statistical work as at present conducted in the Department of Agriculture is duplicated in a large degree, and that this duplication will be continued under the present bill.

Now, I venture to make the assertion that the statistical work in the Department of Agriculture is not duplicated. I hold in my hand a sample of the reports issued by the Weather Bureau, the climate and crop report issued every seven days during the growing season. It contains simply a map indicating the weather all over the United States during the preceding seven days, a table showing the normal temperature and rainfall and the departures therefrom during the past week, and dispatches from various sections of the Union commenting upon the weather and upon the effect which that weather has had upon the growing crops.

There is not a statistical fact in it whatever. There is no statistician employed in preparing the report.

On the other hand, the Bureau of Statistics publishes what it denominates the "Crop Reporter," an 8-page paper, which is issued every month and which contains data of great value to the farmers of the United States. For example, the November, 1901, number, which I hold in my hand, gives an estimate of the crop of corn, wheat, and other principal farm products for that year, and compares this estimate with the known crop of the preceding year. In other pages of this report there are other crop statistics compiled from previous reports and brought in from foreign countries, the intention being to inform the people of the United States fully as to the crop that may be expected in our own country during the current year and to compare it with the world's crop of the same products for the year preceding. This, it will be easily seen, is quite different from the work of the mere weather report published by the Weather Bureau.

But this Crop Reporter is by no means the only publication issued by the Bureau of Statistics. I hold in my hand, for example, various cards that are issued by this Bureau. Here is one dated July 10, 1901, giving the estimate of the yield of corn, wheat, spring wheat, oats, winter and spring rye for the year 1901, and the actual crop of these products for the year 1900. These cards are sent out by mail to every postmaster in the United States, and he is ordered to post them conspicuously in his office, so that the farmers may be informed accurately as to the condition of the crops respecting which the card is issued.

But that is not all. I have here other publications issued from this Bureau for the past year, the titles of which only I will read.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended for ten minutes, as he is a member of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Kansas be extended for ten minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SCOTT. I realize, Mr. Chairman, that the debate on this bill is being protracted and the House is weary, and I will therefore be as brief as I think the importance of the subject will admit.

One of these publications is The Course of Prices of Farm Implements and Machinery for a Series of Years; another, Wheat-Growing and General Agricultural Conditions in the Pacific-Coast Region of the United States; another, Rate of Charge for Transporting Garden Truck, with Notes on the Growth of the Industry; another, Estimates of Russian Crops; another, List of Free Employment Agencies for the Use of Farmers; another, Statistics of the Fruit Industry of California; another, The Cotton Crop of 1899–1900; another, Changes in Railroad Freight Classifications; another, Wages of Farm Labor in the United States; another, Statistical Matter Relating to Particular Crops and Farm Animals and Transportation Rates, etc., in the United States—1900.

Now, all this work, Mr. Chairman, is done under the Statistical Bureau. It is done very largely by the men whose salaries are provided for in the paragraph in this bill on page 40, between lines 6 and 16, which the amendment now pending strikes out. I maintain that there is hardly anybody left in the Department of Agriculture to do this work if the amendment shall be agreed to.

Mr. OLMSTED. Will the gentleman yield to an interruption?

Mr. SCOTT. Certainly.

Mr. OLMSTED. In regard to this item on page 41 appropriating $94,200, of which sum not more than $40,000 shall be expended for salaries in the city of Washington, I would like to ask if that $40,000 is paid to persons in the classified service?

Mr. SCOTT. It is my understanding that it is, although I can not state positively.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will answer the gentleman, it is.

Mr. OLMSTED. It is not so stated.

Mr. WADSWORTH. They may not be entirely within the classified service. There may be some laborers at $40 or $50 a month who are below the classified service.

Mr. OLMSTED. It is simply left to the discretion of the Secretary to employ such persons as he pleases without regard to the classified service?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Not as he pleases, but under the rules of the classified service.

Mr. SCOTT. As I have stated, Mr. Chairman, this work is in many respects the most important work done at the Department of Agriculture, and it is work that can not be done—at least it has never been done—by any other department of the Government. The crop forecast made by this Bureau last year was of almost incalculable value to the farmers of this country. A gentleman from the South, a member of this House, said to me that the estimate furnished by the Secretary of Agriculture as to the probable cotton crop during the year 1901 was worth many millions of dollars to the people of the South. And the accuracy of this forecast is something remarkable, testifying eloquently to the skill with which this work is done. Doubtless all the members of this House have received the sheet that I hold in my hand, giving a statement of the forecast of the cotton crop of 1901 as compared with the returns from the census.

Mr. MADDOX. Will the gentleman allow me to ask a question?

Mr. SCOTT. With pleasure.

Mr. MADDOX. I think the gentleman is correct in regard to the reports of the Secretary of Agriculture as to the cotton crop, but what is the necessity of having the Census Office down here collect the same data as to the cotton crop and furnish the same thing?

Mr. SCOTT. In reply to the gentleman, I will say that the Statistical Division of the Department of Agriculture simply gives a forecast, a mere guess as to what the cotton crop will be. It is of great value to have that forecast either proven false or proven true by an actual count of the crop after it has been harvested.

Mr. MADDOX. Is it not true that the Secretary of Agriculture gets his report and bases his statement upon the returns he gets from the ginners?

Mr. SCOTT. He has not only the reports from the ginners, but he has reports from a great army of people besides. There are in the United States 245,000 men who voluntarily and without compensation report to the Statistical Bureau of the Department of Agriculture touching the condition of the crops in their locality, and it is from the reports of these correspondents that these forecasts are compiled.

Mr. MADDOX. I want to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that we have established a permanent Census Bureau, and the main idea as advanced here was the great benefit that was to be derived for the farmers of the South in preparing reports of the cotton crop; they are to be given every week, and there is no way under the sun of getting them except in the manner and in the way in which the Secretary of Agriculture is doing now.

Mr. SCOTT. I do not care, in the limited time I have, to be diverted into a discussion of the merits of the permanent Census Bureau.

Mr. MADDOX. Well, to that extent it is duplicated.

Mr. SCOTT. I will simply say that the forecast of the cotton crop of 1899–1900, using it as an illustration, given by the Statistical Bureau of the Agricultural Department, was in the hands of the farmers in December, 1900, while the report given by the Census Bureau followed fifteen months later.

Mr. HAUGEN. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. SCOTT. Certainly.

Mr. HAUGEN. Could not the reports be made to the Weather Bureau as well as to the Statistical Division?

Mr. SCOTT. That involves the question as to whether or not there might be a consolidation of these two bureaus. I am not prepared to say if there can not be. I am very certain that if the telegraphic facilities of the Weather Bureau for the transmission of its reports could be put at the disposal of the Statistical Division for the collection of crop statistics, it would be of great advantage to the Statistical Division. But I insist that the consolidation of these two bureaus is a subject which involves a great deal of careful thought and very mature consideration. I insist that it can not be done offhand, in the heat of debate, in a single afternoon on the floor of this House.

And I beg gentlemen to remember that the bill we have brought to them has not been brought here without due consideration. As the chairman of the committee stated this morning, this bill was submitted to a subcommittee, composed of five of the oldest in the service and the ablest members of the committee, who had it under daily consideration for many weeks. They then brought it before the full committee, and the entire committee considered it for several days. This question we are now discussing was presented very fully before the Committee on Agriculture. The Secretary of Agriculture appeared before us and was questioned, and the Chief of the Statistical Division and the Chief of the Weather Bureau appeared before us, and they were questioned, and as a result of the most careful investigation the committee brought in the bill in the form in which it now appears. If it should be possible to condense the work of these bureaus, to combine them under one general head, it ought to come up in the regular way; it ought to come from the Department, with the recommendation of the Secretary of Agriculture, with the details carefully worked out and after having been thoroughly considered by the Committee on Agriculture. I submit it would not be safe to do it in this haphazard manner on this bill.

I have talked recently with the Secretary of Agriculture, and while I do not feel at liberty to quote him officially, yet I feel I am violating no confidence when I say to this House that he gave me the impression that it was his most earnest hope that no change would be made in this matter. He declared it to be his conviction——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. SCOTT. The Secretary of Agriculture expressed it as his firm conviction that this work could not be done any cheaper than it is done now, even if the bureaus were consolidated; and it is his opinion, as it is the opinion of every member of the committee, I am sure, who has given the matter careful consideration, that to strike out the provision for the payment of the clerks which appears now on page 40 of this bill would be to leave that division without any trained help, and would therefore seriously cripple the work of the Department.

Mr. CANNON. Will my friend allow me?

Mr. SCOTT. With pleasure.

Mr. CANNON. It is upon that point the amendment provides the amount that may be used for clerical assistance in Washington, and every one of these men that are necessary to the service now in the civil service can be transferred. The Secretary can reorganize this office and put it under the Weather Bureau; utilize the Chief of Statistics.

Mr. SCOTT. May I ask the gentleman in what particular he expects the economy to be effective if not in reducing the number of clerks?

Mr. CANNON. I expect a reduction in that respect, and probably there should be a reduction also in the Weather Bureau; I do not know about that.

Now, the Weather Bureau gathers three-fourths of the statistics or more that this officer uses. There are two separate machines——

Mr. SCOTT. If the gentleman will allow me, my information is entirely different from his. My information, derived directly from the Secretary in a conversation not forty-eight hours ago, is that no statistics gathered by the Weather Bureau are used in the crop reports of the Bureau of Statistics.

Mr. CANNON. I think my friend must have misunderstood the Secretary of Agriculture. I have very great respect for that officer. But here are two bureaus doing the same work, and the Weather Bureau doing three times as much as the other. These two bureaus ought to be under one head, and it is my information that if they were consolidated you can save $60,000 and get better results.

Mr. SCOTT. I can only repeat that the Secretary of Agriculture is my authority for the statement that there is no duplication of the work of these two bureaus and that if this appropriation is reduced $40,000, or any considerable sum, it will be utterly impossible to do the work that is now being done by the Bureau of Statistics. I earnestly hope the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I am not prepared to deny that the suggestion made by the eminent gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] is along right lines. I know that he is animated solely by a purpose to better the public service and economize in the expenditure of the public money. But, gentlemen, I believe this amendment has not been maturely considered, and I fear its adoption will result in great injury to the farming classes.

To show how thoroughly I am in accord with the gentleman from Illinois in his suggestion I will state that after the adjournment of the Fifty-sixth Congress I called upon Secretary Wilson and suggested and urged the very thing that his amendment proposes. I would not be candid if I failed to say that I now believe the Weather Bureau and the Division of Statistics should be under one head. But as a matter of fact there is not, as I understand it, any duplication of work. I believe the gentleman from Illinois is mistaken about that. I have given the matter as to the labor performed by each the most careful investigation, and the Secretary of Agriculture will bear me out in the statement that the Weather Bureau at present is not engaged in statistical work, and that the principal work of each is not in any sense a duplication of the other.

The gentleman from Illinois is undoubtedly right when he states that better results might be secured if this Bureau and this Division could be brought under one head. But I am sure I am not wrong in contending that they ought not to be brought under one head according to the method now suggested by the gentleman from Illinois. This is a matter of great importance to the section of the country that I have the honor to represent. I stand here to give credit to the gentleman, Mr. Hyde, who is at the head of the Division of Statistics for having saved the cotton producers of the South not thousands or hundreds of thousands of dollars, but during the three years that he has made prognostications of the probable output of the cotton crop he has saved the cotton growers of the United States millions of dollars.

It costs only $100,000 a year to continue this work as now proposed in this bill; and where there is this great, this unquestioned, saving of money to the masses of farmers engaged in raising cotton the matter of consolidating this division with the Weather Bureau should not be lightly or hastily dealt with, as now suggested by the gentleman from Illinois.

As I have stated, I know the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] is animated by proper motives. I know that his purpose is good; but I appeal to him to withdraw his amendment. Not that I am opposed to the idea which it embodies, for in all candor and honesty I believe that the gentleman's suggestion is a good one that this Statistical Division should ultimately be transferred to the Weather Bureau; but I do not think it ought to be urged at this time, and I believe the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture will uphold and sustain the view which I express.

I repeat that the forecasts of Mr. Hyde as to the probable output of the cotton crop has saved the farmers of the South millions of dollars. Some of the shrewdest men in the world, representing the interests of the Lancashire cotton spinners, are constantly undertaking during each cotton season to influence the price of cotton by estimating the output or yield for the year, and these estimates or predictions have fixed or largely influenced the price of this great staple prior to the time when the Department of Agriculture undertook this splendid work. Since that date this division has represented truth rather than any particular interest, and those estimates I have alluded to have at times differed from those of the Statistical Division of the Agricultural Department to the extent of 2,000,000 bales—15 to 20 per cent of the entire cotton output.

Last year, when the final estimate of Secretary Wilson was given to the press, cotton, by reason of the confidence that the people had in the accuracy of the figures prepared by Mr. Hyde, the head of this statistical division, advanced materially, as I now recollect it, from one-eighth to one-fourth of a cent per pound.

I urge the gentleman from Illinois to withdraw his amendment at this time, and if he declines to do so, I hope the committee will join me in voting it down. I believe that at an early date this change is to come; I believe and hope that ultimately all these statistical bureaus and divisions will be brought under the control of the Census Bureau or the Weather Bureau in the Agricultural Department, thereby avoiding all duplication. I am opposed to these duplications, and earnestly favor economizing the public money, but I now prophesy that if the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois be adopted it will result in great confusion, great damage to the service, and incalculable loss to that most deserving class, the farmers, who really bear the burdens of government.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BURLESON. I ask a few minutes more.

There was no objection.

Mr. BURLESON. Secretary Wilson assured me when I discussed the matter with him that there are many difficulties—difficulties which he believes can ultimately be overcome—but at present many and complicated difficulties in the way of uniting this Bureau and Division. But if the gentleman from Illinois will now withdraw his amendment, what he desires will ultimately be accomplished. I favor the consolidation of this Statistical Division with the Weather Bureau, but not now, and I do earnestly hope that the amendment offered by my good friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] will not prevail.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I am heartily in accord with the views expressed by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON]. I believe that this consolidation of the statistical business in a single bureau ought to be accomplished. The question is merely whether now is the proper moment to do it. I believe that when it is done it will result in better work and at less cost.

I do not care to say anything further at present. This being a measure of administration, as I said yesterday, the committee deferred to the judgment of the Secretary of Agriculture. This is not a question of appropriation, but a question of internal administration.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, one word more, and then I am ready for a vote.

I have no pride of opinion about this matter. I have offered the amendment from a sense purely of what seemed to me to be my legislative duty. All about me concur that it ought to be done, but we are told there are difficulties. What they are, I do not know. I will tell you what I think the difficulties are, and I will say it respectfully. I do not know Mr. Hyde; I would not know him on sight; I do not know that I ever met him; I have nothing against him, and, as far as I know, he is a very excellent gentleman and a very capable gentleman; but I do know when a man is on the salary list at $3,000 a year and is the chief of a division and has a force under him he does not like to give up his job. I do not know that he would have to. It may be that he will be the man to be at the head of the Weather Bureau. I can not tell.

I think I know that the telegraph bills of the agents and the telegraph lines and the expenses for daily reports all over the United States, covering the Pacific and the Atlantic coasts, and the Great Lakes, going down into the West Indies and down upon the coast of South America, in constant daily and hourly touch with all this vast territory, come to one center, and that center is the Weather Bureau in the Agricultural Department, and you get the reports everywhere throughout the country and at every commercial center they are published almost in every paper daily. There it is. It gives you the condition, and I do know that much from these agents that covers the conditions of crop and the forecasting of the weather comes in this way.

Now, that is a great big statistical bureau, an enormously large one, much larger than this other Division of Statistics, and yet they are both running neck and neck, and the one that is under Mr. Hyde—I do not know who it was under before—comes in and gives much that was given earlier. Now, I do think that it is good legislation, with a free hand for administration, if we adopt this amendment, upon the part of the Secretary of Agriculture, and to stop that and put it under one head. Now, that is all there is of it. My friend here confesses so; my friend confesses there and my other friend confesses yonder. There is the situation. I would not be much afraid if I was an insurance company, if this amendment is adopted, to guarantee better service to my friend's cotton constituents, and all the balance of the people, at $60,000 less cost for the coming fiscal year with the adoption of this amendment, than we have if the bill stands as it is. I am ready for a vote, so far as I am concerned.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The noes appear to have it.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I will have to call for a division.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the amendment reported to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection, the Clerk will report the amendment to the House.

There was no objection, and the Clerk again read the amendment.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 29, noes 44.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 41, after line 13, insert "And the Secretary of Agriculture shall, on or before July 1, 1903, transfer to and consolidate with the Weather Bureau and under the direction of its chief all work of the Department of Agriculture relating to compilation of statistics by the Division of Statistics."

Mr. WADSWORTH. Now, that is in line with what seems to be the general opinion of the committee. It simply directs the Secretary of Agriculture, on or before July 1, 1903, which will give him more than a year to transfer all these statistical works of the Agricultural Department, except the Foreign Markets Division, to the Weather Bureau.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Public road inquiries: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to make inquiries in regard to the system of road management throughout the United States; to make investigations in regard to the best methods of road making, and the best kind of road-making materials in the several States; the employment of local and special agents, clerks, assistants, and other labor required in conducting experiments in the city of Washington and elsewhere, and in collating, digesting, reporting, and illustrating the results of such experiments; to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate the chemical and physical character of road materials, for the pay of experts, chemists, and laborers, for necessary apparatus and materials; traveling, and other necessary expenses, and for preparing and publishing bulletins and reports on this subject for distribution, and to enable him to assist the agricultural colleges and experiment stations in disseminating information on this subject, $20,000.

Mr. TONGUE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out in line 11, page 48, after the word "subject," the word "twenty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "forty."

Mr. TONGUE. Mr. Chairman, this is the amendment of which I gave notice the other day. I have very little to add to what I then said. I called the attention of the House to the fact that the Federal Government has been extremely liberal in providing for water and railroad transportation. We have already expended over $400,000,000 in the aid of steamboat and water navigation, and we have just passed in this House a bill appropriating $60,000,000 more.

That bill passed the Senate in two hours, with ten millions additional. I called attention to the fact that the Federal Government had expended in money something over $130,000,000 in aid of railroad construction; that it has given to various railroad corporations an extent of territory equal in area to all of New England, to New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and both of the Virginias thrown in. We have been extraordinarily liberal in aid of these two classes of transportation. The result is that the United States in that class of transportation leads the world. Against this we have expended during the last twenty years toward the improvement of our country roads something like $100,000. In this class of transportation, in the matter of the condition of our roads, we are behind the least civilized country in Europe.

Now, I do not expect the Federal Government to enter very largely into the construction of the country highways. This amendment does not contemplate that. The appropriation of $20,000 during past years has been of unusual benefit, at least in stimulating an interest in the improvement of good roads. There is certainly no subject before us that requires greater energy and greater effort to accomplish an improvement in any one direction than in the improvement of common roads. The department to which this matter has been intrusted has been unusually efficient, unusually active, and has produced unsually beneficial results.

The appropriation provided in this bill will enable them to do much. But in order to accomplish the best work this department finds it necessary to teach some object lessons; to travel in different sections of the country and construct specimen roads. They have done this to a considerable extent. They are equipped with the necessary machinery and a force of men for that service, but the appropriation is so small that they are compelled to work principally in the vicinity of Washington or else depend upon the charity of transportation companies to take their machinery elsewhere.

Now, I should like to see this appropriation large enough so that this department can carry on these object lessons in different sections of the country, including the Pacific coast, which I in part endeavor to represent. I understand that the good-roads department asks for $75,000. The Secretary of Agriculture indorsed this request to the extent of $40,000, and I am asking to include that amount in this bill.

I only want to say one word further, that whatever the Government does toward the improvement of the country roads will reach a larger class of people and will do more good at the spot where it is needed than any other expenditure provided in this bill or in any other bill that passes this House of Representatives. This is peculiarly a farmers' measure. It is peculiarly for the benefit of the farming interests. It is a provision for the exclusive benefit of the farmers. It will not go to the benefit of aggretions of capital or to corporations. I hope the committee will yield to the farming interests and to the western section of the United States at least this small amount of consideration.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the amendment by striking out the word "forty" and inserting the word "thirty."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment by striking out "forty" and inserting in lieu thereof "thirty."

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to continue my remarks. I stated what I desired to say upon this subject the other evening. After consultation with the chairman of the committee [Mr. WADSWORTH] he has become satisfied that $30,000 should be allowed.

Mr. TONGUE. I simply want to say, Mr. Chairman, that with the assurance of my friend, the chairman of the committee, that if I will accept $30,000 he will also accept that, I will accept the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman withdraw his amendment?

Mr. TONGUE. No; I do not ask to withdraw it. I accept the amendment to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Michigan, modifying the amount to $30,000.

Mr. PEARRE. Mr. Chairman, I should like to inquire what the parliamentary situation is now with regard to this amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HENRY C. SMITH] to the amendment of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. TONGUE].

Mr. PEARRE. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry: Would it be in order for me to renew the amendment of the gentleman from Oregon, making the amount $40,000 instead of $30,000?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Oregon has not been withdrawn. He stated that he did not desire to withdraw it, so the two amendments stand. The gentleman from Oregon said he would accept the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan, but he refused to withdraw his amendment, so it is before the committee.

[Mr. PEARRE addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. WADSWORTH. I believe now, Mr. Chairman, the question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HENRY C. SMITH].

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan to the amendment of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. TONGUE].

Mr. TONGUE. I accepted the gentleman's amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. That could not be done without unanimous consent.

Mr. PEARRE. I withdraw my amendment providing for an appropriation of $40,000.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment for $30,000 be considered as pending.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment proposing an appropriation for $40,000 will be withdrawn, and the amendment changing the amount to $30,000 will be considered as pending. The Chair hears no objection. The question is therefore upon the adoption of that amendment.

The question being taken, the amendment of Mr. HENRY C. SMITH was agreed to.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill.

Mr. GROSVENOR (interrupting the reading). Mr. Chairman, I had prepared a brief amendment to come in on line 5, page 47. But the reading had progressed beyond that point before I observed it. I now ask unanimous consent to recur to that part of the bill for the purpose of offering an amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to return to page 47, line 5, for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I move to amend by inserting after the word "laws," in line 5, page 47, the words "as affecting irrigation and the rights of riparian proprietors." This amendment is designed simply to make plain and clear the scope of this inquiry into the subject of irrigation. I am in entire sympathy with the object, but I think that the language as it now stands in the bill is not quite so intelligible as it ought to be.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

In line 5, page 47, after the word "laws," insert the words "as affecting irrigation and the rights of riparian proprietors;" so that the paragraph will read:

"Irrigation investigations: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate and report upon the laws as affecting irrigation and the rights of riparian proprietors and institutions relating to irrigation and upon the use of irrigation waters, with especial suggestions of better methods for the utilization of irrigation waters in agriculture than those in common use, and upon the use of different kinds of power for irrigation and other agricultural purposes," etc.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The question was taken and the amendment agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I offer the following amendment, to be added at the end of the bill.

Insert as a new paragraph after line 8, page 49, the following:

"Provided further, That hereafter the estimates of appropriations for the Department of Agriculture shall be prepared and submitted each year according to the order and arrangement of the act for the year preceding; and any changes in such order or arrangement desired by the Secretary of Agriculture may be submitted by note in the estimates."

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, the object of that amendment is simply to preserve the order of the bill, so that the committee or any member of the House can readily compare with the appropriations of the preceding year. The estimates now come to us in all sorts of order, and it is hard to get at them.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the amendment agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I offer as a separate paragraph the following amendment, which I will ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert at the end of the bill the following:

"It shall be the duty of the Secretary of Agriculture to submit, in the Book of Estimates for the fiscal year 1904, and annually thereafter, immediately following estimates of each of the respective offices, bureaus, and divisions of the Department of Agriculture, a statement showing in detail the number of persons, other than day laborers, who are employed in the District of Columbia upon regular and continuous work for thirty days or more during the previous fiscal year in or under such offices, bureaus, or divisions under authority of and paid from general appropriations, indicating in the case of every such employment the rate of compensation received and the appropriation from which paid."

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill and amendments to the House with the recommendation that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. POWERS of Maine, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R.

13895), the agricultural appropriation bill, and had adopted sundry amendments thereto, and had directed him to report the same back with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on the amendments? If not, the Chair will submit them in gross.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The question was taken; and the amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The question was taken; and the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WADSWORTH, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

AMERICAN JEWS IN RUSSIA.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a privileged report from the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois calls up a privileged report from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Foreign Affairs, to whom was referred House resolution 183, calling upon the Secretary of State to inform the House of Representatives whether the Russian Government is discriminating against Americans of the Jewish faith visiting or attempting to visit Russia, have duly considered the same, and report it back to the House with the following amendment:

In line 3, after the word "House," insert the words "if not incompatible with public interests."

As amended the committee recommends the adoption of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, before the resolution is voted upon I think it should be read, and I ask that it be read at this time.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the United States, That the Secretary of State be, and he hereby is, respectfully requested to inform this House whether American citizens of the Jewish religious faith, holding passports issued by this Government, are barred or excluded from entering the territory of the Empire of Russia, and whether the Russian Government has made or is making any discrimination between citizens of the United States of different religious faiths or persuasions, visiting or attempting to visit Russia, provided with American passports; and whether the Russian Government has made regulations restricting or specially applying to American citizens, whether native or naturalized, of the Jewish religious denomination holding United States passports, and if so, to report the facts in relation thereto, and what action concerning such exclusion, discrimination, or restriction, if any, has been taken by any Department of the Government of the United States.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, the resolution is a plain resolution of inquiry. The gentleman who introduced it—the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE]—desiring to make some remarks upon it, I will, before asking for a vote, yield to the gentleman from New York fifteen minutes, or such further time as he desires.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, the resolution now before the House, for the favorable report on which I render grateful acknowledgment to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and its able and distinguished chairman, does not deal with Russia's treatment of nor her proscriptive policy toward her own subjects, but with a matter that intimately concerns and affects the rights, privileges, and prerogatives of American citizens. It involves the question what duty Russia owes to our own country in the recognition of American passports and whether that country ought longer be permitted to refuse admission to her territory to American citizens, armed with American passports, on the ground of their professed or supposed religious faith.

Shall a nation with which we are at peace and with which we hold commercial and diplomatic relations be permitted to dishonor our passport because of our citizens' religious creed? Ought not the United State insist now that her citizens, when abroad and well behaved, be accorded equal rights to travel freely without regard to race or creed?

So, Mr. Speaker, the resolution calls for information on a subject affecting directly the rights of American freemen and concerns the principles of true Americanism. It will, I am sure, appeal to every loyal-hearted American who believes, as I do, that whether abroad or at home the American citizen, regardless of race, creed, or color, is entitled to the aid and support of our National Government and the fullest protection of the American flag. [Applause.]

The subject of Russian persecution, Russian barbarity, and Russian inhumanity toward the Jews is not altogether new to this House. It has been officially brought to the attention of Congress; it found place in diplomatic correspondence between the State Department and our legation at St. Petersburg, and so appalling were the acts of persecution, and so frightful the atrocities practiced upon this people in Russia, that yielding to those natural and sympathetic impulses which always animate the American people wherever the wail of the oppressed or the woes of the persecuted reach our ears, that in 1890 the House of Representatives gave expression of this country's sentiment by the adoption of a resolution declaring that we heard with profound sorrow and feelings akin to horror, the reports of the persecutions of the Jews in Russia, reflecting the barbarism of past ages, disgracing humanity, and impeding the progress of civilization, and we directed that a copy of those resolutions be forwarded to the Secretary of State with the request that he transmit it to our minister at St. Petersburg to present it to Alexander III, then Czar of all the Russians.

Thus, sir, spoke America when she learned of the stories of the inhuman and barbarous treatment by a friendly power of a people persecuted for no other reason than that they were loyal to conscience and professed the religion of their fathers. Surely not until Russia's hatred and wild fanaticism had culminated in mad ferocities toward an unoffending people was the voice of America officially uplifted in our National Congress in the hope that the condition of an outraged people might be ameliorated and the inhuman and stony heart of the despotic Czar be softened through the friendly counsel of our God-blessed Republic.

For centuries the Jews have been, and indeed they are still at this day, the object of Russia's hate, the butt of her frenzied fanaticism, the target of her savage and tyrannous despotism. Among all the other persecuted people of the earth none have suffered so intensely from the spirit of intolerance and bigotry as the Jews in Russia. In the line of our benign and enlightened policy to extend our sympathy to the downtrodden and persecuted in other lands, and our friendly counsel for the betterment of their condition, in as politic a manner as the etiquette of diplomatic intercourse permits, we sent across the Atlantic, for Russia's consideration, our message, which in the light of the civilization of our age and our country's friendly relations with the land of the Czar, one might well presume would not have gone unheeded.

Yet, alas, the pitiless and merciless heart of the autocrat remained untouched. The unfeeling and obdurate Russian was too steeped in narrowness and bigotry to lend willing ear even to friendly America when enlisted in the holy and consecrated cause of human freedom.

I shall refrain from a recital of the details of Russia's fiendish cruelties and her accursed and horrifying acts of persecution of a people whose only crime is their birth, whose only offense was loyalty to conscience. Nor shall I on this occasion attempt a recital of many of the recorded and authentic reports of the frightful and unnatural crimes, born of malevolent hate and bigoted vindictiveness which blasphemously in the name of religion it has defamed, has blackened the pages of Russia's history.

Though born on Russian soil, the Jew in Russia has been regarded and treated as an alien. Yet by Russian law and imperial decree he has been denied privileges and rights accorded to aliens of other faiths. Persecuted as no people have ever been in any country, he has been treated as an outcast, and hounded and punished in many places in the Czar's dominions as worse than vilest criminal.

He has been denied the protection of the laws; he has been the object of every Russian's rapacity, and his person was assailed by miscreants who felt immunity from punishment, for they knew the attacks rather pleased than offended Russian authority. In some parts, under penalty of fine and imprisonment for its omission, he was compelled to don distinctive garb, which made him the object of Russian scorn and derision and laid him open to personal infliction.

The sanctity of his domestic hearth was invaded, and with his family he was driven, even in the cold and biting winds of winter and Russia's icy blasts, into the streets, to be attacked by excited and infuriated mobs; he and his family, with unspeakable cruelty, were driven into exile and forced in poverty and wretchedness to wander and seek habitation in a more hospitable clime; his home was robbed and pillaged; his possessions became a prey for Russian greed; his women were ravished, and even the innocent babe, nursing at it's mother's breast, was not free from the zealots' rage.

Even the nursling was torn from mother's breast and put to death. Families were separated, their members beaten, despoiled, knouted in the open street or country road; Jewish quarters were razed and fired and made an incident of the work of the fiendish fanatic; and, in the spirit of the fiend incarnate, men were massacred, women and children butchered. Such has been the unfortunate condition of the Jew in Russia.

For many of these brutalities and atrocities, the Government has disclaimed responsibility, but its failure to protect the assailed, its neglect to punish the perpetrators of the dastardly crimes, its policy of proscription, its intolerant and restrictive laws and imperial decrees, its hundreds of laws and edicts specially directed against the Jew, breathing in every line bigotry, hate, malice, and oppression, and holding him forth as an object of scorn and contempt, places upon Russia the responsibility which she can neither excuse nor, in the eyes of a candid or impartial world, evade.

I have briefly spoken of Russia's treatment of Israelites in her own country, to show the extent and the effect of her proscriptive policy. Now, then, to her treatment of our own citizens.

Some of the gentlemen of this House may not be aware that when an American citizen about to proceed abroad makes inquiry of the State Department as to his right to travel in Russia, he receives a reply in printed circular, containing this significant statement:

The laws of Russia also exclude from Russian territory, except by special permission, all people of the Jewish faith, and while this Government has been endeavoring for some years to secure a relaxation of this restriction, it is only proper to warn those who are in the category to which they refer it has not been able to secure from the Russian Government uniform treatment for all American travelers in Russia without regard to their religious faith or place of birth.

This is the statement made to our citizens whose proud boast it is that our country, thank God, permits no inquiry or inquisition into any man's religious belief. How surprising this language to us, whose glory is that this is the country of civil and religious liberty, where all men are regarded equal before the law! How startling a warning to an American citizen of Jewish birth to keep out of the Czar's dominion, or take the consequences of Russia's barbaric treatment! How plain the caution to an American citizen of the Jewish faith that if he ventures into Russia, though armed a hundred times with American passport, he must expect to be visited with pains and penalties Russia dare not inflict upon citizens of other faiths or creeds! I say this in no spirit of criticism whatever, for unfortunately it is true that Russia makes this discrimination, and it is well and commendable for our State Department to give timely notice to our citizens of that fact.

Let me call your attention to a few of the many hundred cases which forcibly illustrate Russia's intolerant restriction against American Jews, and her bigoted exclusion, save in special and exceptional cases, of the American citizens from her country, for no other cause than their religious faith. Nay, sir, the Russian Government openly avows that whether the citizen be native of these United States or adopted by ties of naturalization, the restriction and exclusion equally applies. Nor does it matter whether the American Israelites be rich or poor, high or low, artisan or merchant, lawyer or professor, unknown or renowned, eminent or distinguished—all, all alike—come under Russia's ban and fanatical interdiction, to which we ought, in no uncertain sound, voice our indignant protest.

But recently a native American traveling abroad applied to the Russian consul at Berlin to visé his passport. Why, sir, the first question propounded was as to his religion. Stating that he was a Jew, he was informed that his admittance into Russia was impossible. After much difficulty and delay he was told that he might be granted a permit for an eight-day stay, after which he must depart. Refusing to accept this limited permit, he was denied admission into the Czar's domain. Yet this man held an American passport.

But a few months ago I applied to the Russian ambassador to visé the passport of a highly respectable American lady who, understanding the restrictions, asked for my intercession. A heart filled with filial love bade her go to the bedside of her dying parent. The ambassador politely declined the request, basing his refusal on the fact that the woman was a Jewess, but advised an application to some Russian consul, who, he said, would investigate into the special circumstances of the case, cable, if necessary, to St. Petersburg at the applicant's expense, and then probably grant a special permit.

I call to mind the case of an eminent and distinguished Jewish divine, an American citizen—I am quite certain, a native American. He, too, held our passport. Members of Congress and Secretary of State interceded in his behalf, yet the Russian ambassador refused to visé, placing his refusal on the ground of the clergyman's religion. His desire to visit Russia to study the condition of the oppressed Israelites there caused him to apply to Mr. Gresham, then Secretary of State. Our minister at St. Petersburg, Mr. White, was cabled to, and he replied to the Secretary, "Russian Government deeply regrets its inability to comply with request in behalf of reverend Jewish divine." Only after much diplomatic correspondence and powerful influence and intercession was it that this reverend gentlemen, a writer and an orator of fame and distinction, was permitted to pursue his travels in Russia.

Still another case of recent occurrence comes to my mind at this moment. A young American, born on our soil, educated in our schools, highly respected, while on a trip abroad learned of his grandparents' serious illness in Russia. What more natural than that he should wish to visit these aged people, bearing to them a message of love and cheer from their children on this side of the water. Yet he experienced no small difficulty in obtaining permission for a few days' stay in Russia, and came very near having his request absolutely refused.

That I may not encumber the RECORD with wearying detail I cite but one more case, though similar cases are legion. A young American citizen while on his journey presented his passport for visé at Berlin. What think you he was compelled to do? He appeared before our consul-general at Berlin, and before he could obtain even a permit for a limited stay in Russia he had to subscribe and make oath to an affidavit, the form of which allow me to read:

CONSULATE-GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
City of Berlin, Kingdom of Prussia, German Empire, ss:

A. B., bearer of passport No. —, dated ——, issued by the Department of State, being duly sworn, deposes and says: "That he is of the Jewish religious faith, and desires permission to visit Russia for a period not exceeding four (4) weeks."

A. B.

Sworn to before me and subscribed at Berlin this —— day of ——, 1901.
[SEAL.] FRANK M. MASON,
Consul-General of the United States.

He would have been wanting in patriotism and love of our free institutions had the hot blood of indignation not mounted to his cheek when to procure a permit for a brief stay in Russia, though provided with our passport, this man was required to submit before our consul-general to an inquisition, under oath, touching his religious belief. Yet this was the price of manhood Russia exacted—this was the humiliation the Russian autocrat demanded of one of our sovereign citizens.

As an American, fondly loving this Republic, venerating her free, her liberal, her ennobling institutions, and glorying in her marvelous achievements and transcendent genius, as one whose affection for the Stars and Stripes thrills every fiber of my heart with patriotic devotion, and who yields to none in feelings of deepest gratitude and appreciation of our broad tolerance and priceless liberty enjoyed by every man within our borders, I stand in this Chamber solemnly protesting against Russia's policy of proscription and persecution; against her unjust and oppressive discrimination she makes between our citizens merely because they differ in creed. [Applause.]

In the name of the eternal law of justice that Russia, in her maddened hate and blinded superstition, has foully violated; in the name of the divine law of truth and right, whose underlying principles she has brutally offended; in the name of civilization, in whose vanguard we have ever marched triumphant and whose luminous banner we have ever proudly borne aloft, whose refining influence is still stranger to the Despot of the North; in the name of humanity, whose attributes entered into the spirit of our fathers when in the creation of this Republic they declared for liberty of thought and freedom of conscience, which Russia has cruelly outraged; in the name of the brotherhood of man, within whose charmed circle fraternal love and peace and toleration should find their abiding place, but against which Russia has raised her hands like the Ishmaelite of old; aye, sir, in the name of liberty and freedom, the choicest heritage and proudest possession of an American freeman, in whose starry temple is ineffaceably inscribed the recognition of the equality of man, I invoke the Government of the United States to assert its demand that no invidious distinction shall be made between its citizens by foreign powers because of creed, but that in times of peace, when journeying abroad, they shall be accorded, be their origin or creed what it may, uniform treatment and protection. [Applause.]

It was that illustrious American, that distinguished internanational lawyer and eminent statesman, James G. Blaine, who, when Secretary of State, wrote touching this subject to our minister in Russia:

I need hardly enlarge on the point that the Government of the United States concludes its treaties with foreign powers for the equal protection of all classes of American citizens. It can make absolutely no discrimination between them, whatever be their religion or creed. So that they abide by the laws at home and abroad, it must give them due protection and expect like protection from them. Any unfriendly or discriminatory act against them by any foreign power with which we are at peace would call for our earnest remonstrance, whether a treaty existed or not.

This is American doctrine, this is sound international rule, to sustain which no mere sporadic or occasional mild remonstrance will suffice.

What more did this eminent Secretary of State say on the subject? Let me read:

We have been moved to enter into such international compacts [referring to our treaty with Russia] by the considerations of mutual benefit of reciprocity, by the same considerations, in short, which have animated Russia from the time of the noble declarations of the Empress Catherine in 1784 to those of the ukase of 1860.

We have looked to the spirit rather than to the letter of those engagements and believe they should be interpreted in the broadest way. It is therefore a source of unfeigned regret to us when a Government, to which we are allied by so many historical ties as to that of Russia, shows a disposition in its dealings with us to take advantage of technicalities, to appeal to the rigid letter and not the reciprocal motive of its international engagements in justification of the expulsion from its territories of peaceable American citizens resorting thither under the good faith of treaties and accused of no wrongdoing or of no violation of the commercial code of the land, but of simple adherence to the faith of their fathers.

He conceives that the intention of the United States in negotiating and concluding the treaty of December 18, 1832, and the distinct and enlightened reciprocal engagements then entered into with the Government of Russia gave us a moral ground to expect careful attention to our opinions as to its rational interpretation in the broadest and most impartial sense; that he would deeply regret, in view of the gratifying friendliness of the relations of the two countries which he is so desirous to maintain, to find that this large national sentiment fails to control the present issue, or that a narrow or rigid limitation of the construction possible to the treaty stipulations between the two countries is likely to be adhered to, that is, after a frank comparison of the views of the two Governments in the most amicable spirit and with a most earnest desire to reach a mutually agreeable conclusion the treaty stipulations between the United States and Russia are found insufficient to determine questions of nationality and tolerance of individual faith, or to secure to American citizens in Russia the treatment which Russians receive in the United States, it is simply due to the good relations of the two countries that these stipulations should be made sufficient in these regards.

Yet with all this the proscription goes on, the Hebrew-American citizen is excluded, the discrimination is continued, and the passport is dishonored.

If, notwithstanding Blaine's logical and rational interpretation of the treaty, Russia still finds safety in resorting to cunning, strained technicality, let us insist, in no uncertain or wavering way, upon correcting the defect by supplement or amendment to the treaty so that clearly and specifically our countrymen be afforded equal privileges and uniform treatment in unrestricted travel.

In the light of what I have read from the pen of so great an authority and so profound a statesman as Mr. Blaine, I am not prepared to concede that Russia may hide behind the language of the treaty. The badge of citizenship confers the right on every law-abiding American, in times of peace, to travel unmolested anywhere on God's green footstool. [Applause.]

When the foreigner comes to our shore, whether to travel or to sojourn or seek an asylum and a home, we ask not, we care not, what his faith, what his belief, what his professed religious creed. We judge him by his merits and behavior as a man. We afford him the hospitable shelter of our land, demanding only that he shall not misconstrue liberty for license. And this we do, sir, not as matter of gratuitous favor, but in virtue of the cardinal principles of our Government, thundered out to the world by a Washington, a Jefferson, an Adams, and a Patrick Henry, and the others of the patriot band of our Revolution, when in the City of Brotherly Love they proclaimed America's creed, "Liberty throughout the land and to all the inhabitants thereof."

The sublime doctrine of our national life engrafted in the Declaration of Independence, "All men are created equal, and are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights; among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness," is the essence and acknowledgment of universal brotherhood.

In the exercise of the highest ideal of America—civil and religious liberty—our country has flourished and prospered as none other since the creation of the world.

Through its means we have cemented the ties of our common citizenship, gave hope and cheer to every man within our borders, and instilled the noblest ambitions and highest aspirations; banished class distinction, dispelled base prejudice, and secured the emancipation of the slave. Civil and religious liberty, consecrated by the suffering and martyrdom of our Revolutionary fathers, jealously guarded through every epoch of our nation's history and our nation's trials, has been the potent factor to upbuild and uplift humanity, and to make this country the foremost, the most enlightened and progressive on the face of the earth. [Loud applause.]

Imbued with this spirit, the hearts of the American people are ever filled with sympathy for struggling humanity. Whether it be the oppressed Irish, whose history is filled with the painful story of suffering and bitter persecution, or the sturdy Burghers of the South African republics, whose brave struggle for liberty and maintenance of self-government has excited the attention of lovers of freedom everywhere, or the persecuted Armenian in far-distant clime, or the struggling Cuban, to secure whose release from the thraldom of Spanish tyranny we won the victories which proved America's prowess and challenged the admiration of the world, or the poor unfortunate Filipinos, who lovingly, anxiously look to us for the grant of liberty and national freedom—all, all alike receive the sympathy of broad, brave, tolerant America. [Applause.]

At this very hour comes flashed across the waters the consoling news that Russia's monarch is to give his people a constitution. God grant it be so, for it will betoken at least that the entering wedge has been made for the betterment of a nation for ages past enslaved by the power of the autocrat. It will be hailed as the rainbow of promise for the amelioration of a people ground down under the iron heel of despotism.

If in the past America has not succeeded in obtaining for her citizens, regardless of creed, uniformity of treatment on their journeys to Russia; if the efforts of our Government in that direction have not met with success, let not those defeats discourage or dismay us.

Mr. SULZER. Will my colleague permit me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Certainly.

Mr. SULZER. Does not my colleague believe that in view of this nation's greatness and its influence as one of the great world powers, we may meet with better success now in having the unfair restrictions removed? If Russia is discriminating against American citizens, no matter what their nationality or religious belief may be, we ought to know it. The resolution is in the right direction, and I congratulate my colleague from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE] in having succeeded in getting it before the House. I sincerely hope the resolution will be adopted without a dissenting vote.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I thank my colleague for his inquiry and his compliment. Yes, Mr. Speaker, our nation is greater—more powerful—than it was when those efforts were made many years ago. We enjoy to-day the high respect, the lofty esteem, the cherished friendship of every nation on the earth. Foreign powers court our favor. We have become one of the great powers of the world. Our eminence of station among the nations gives assurance that our friendly counsel and diplomatic intercession will go far to secure now for our citizens abroad what from Russia we were once unable to obtain.

Ever valiant in the defense of right, let America, whose divine mission destines it to spread enlightenment throughout the world, demand from the Government which now unjustly denies them the rights to which every citizen of our dear land is entitled when journeying under what should be his safeguard—an American passport. Who knows but it will be but another step in the ever-onward, irresistible, unconquerable march of human progress and enlightenment which eventually will lead the whole world to recognize the universality of human brotherhood and bring to all mankind a realization of universal love. Then will be the time—

When the war drums shall be muffled, and the battle flags be furled,
In the Parliament of Man, the Federation of the World.

Sir, I ask the passage of the resolution. [Loud and continuous applause.]

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. HITT, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

HATTIE M. WHITNEY.

By unanimous consent, the Committee on Invalid Pensions was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 4927), and the same was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. SCARBOROUGH, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. FOX, for ten days, on account of important business.

TAXES ON PERSONAL PROPERTY IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I submit the following privileged report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania calls up a privileged report from the Committee on Rules, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That it shall be in order to amend the bill (H. R. 14019) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year 1903, by the insertion, on the recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations, of legislation providing for the assessment and collection of taxes on personal property in the District of Columbia.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, the bill referred to in the resolution is the District of Columbia appropriation bill. It seems that there is a pressing necessity at this time for the enactment of some legislation relating to the assessment and collection of taxes upon personal property in the District. The purpose of the rule is to make an amendment of that character relating to taxation in order upon this bill, as otherwise there would not be.

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Speaker, I should like a minute or two for a question.

Mr. DALZELL. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland two minutes.

Mr. MUDD. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that ordinarily I think a rule of this kind would be highly improper. In conversation with the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. CANNON], however, I am led to understand that it is not the intention to provide for any new assessment law, but to recall into being the machinery for the enforcement of the one now on the statute books, which for the want of that machinery has been declared by the courts to be inoperative. I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations or the chairman of the subcommittee if I am right in that information.

Mr. McCLEARY. The gentleman's statement is substantially accurate.

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Speaker, while ordinarily, of course, as a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia, I should resent anything that looked like an invasion of the jurisdiction of that committee, in view of the present exigency for revenue under which the District is laboring, and after the statement of the chairman of the Subcommittee on Appropriations, I shall not make any strenuous objection to this rule.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. SIMS. For a question only.

Mr. DALZELL. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. I should like to ask the gentleman from Minnesota whether or not it is a fact that the Committee on Appropriations addressed some communication to the District Committee stating what they were going to do, or giving notice of this proposed rule?

Mr. McCLEARY. The communication which I understand the gentleman to refer to was addressed to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and it was published in the newspapers at the time. The District Commissioners are the vehicle through whom the information would regularly come to the District Committee. The communication of the Appropriations Committee was published in the newspapers, as I have said, and was thereby brought to the attention of the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. SIMS. So the District Committee have had full notice of what is proposed?

Mr. McCLEARY. Yes; in that way, at least.

Mr. HEPBURN and Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] has the floor.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I desire the gentleman from Pennsylvania to yield to me for a minute or two.

Mr. DALZELL. I yield two minutes.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, having consented to this rule as a member of the Committee on Rules, I feel that I ought to say a word. Ordinarily I do not favor giving the Committee on Appropriations or any other committee jurisdiction of matters beyond their control under the rules of the House. That is what is done in this case.

That ought not to be done except in case of an emergency. It is the purpose to ingraft upon a general appropriation bill a legislative provision that ought to have been submitted by the committee that under the rules of the House has jurisdiction of questions of that kind, the committee in this case being the Committee on the District of Columbia. That committee should have considered this amendment, and should have reported it. I am not lecturing the committee. I understand that it is absolutely necessary to have consideration, and therefore this rule making it in order to put it upon an appropriation bill.

I say it is rather to be deplored it is to be put upon an appropriation bill. It can not there be considered in the same disinterested way that it could be if it had been submitted as a legislative proposition from the Committee on the District of Columbia. If it goes on a general appropriation bill it goes with all the force that a general appropriation bill carries with it. This is a legislative rider. Gentlemen might not agree to a legislative "rider," but "the rider" gets an immense advantage when placed upon a general appropriation bill. It is known that the appropriation bill must pass, and therefore sometimes obnoxious and objectionable legislation as a "rider" is put upon and ingrafted upon a regular appropriation bill. Under the rules that can not be done. This rule makes it in order to ingraft this legislative proposition on a general appropriation bill, and this appropriation bill will be used as a vehicle to carry it through.

Now, I do not know what the propositions are, or the matters to be submitted by the Committee on Appropriations; but, inasmuch as it is to be presented to the committee, and to be considered here in the Committee of the Whole, an opportunity to be given to discuss it, and amend it, and put it into shape if not already in proper shape, there is less objection to putting it in this appropriation bill. For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I did not object in the Committee on Rules to make this proposition in order as a part of this general appropriation bill. That is all I desire to say.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DALZELL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, so far as I understand this subject it is proposed to consider, I heartily concur in the purpose of this legislation, yet it seems to me that this proposition now before us is of so extraordinary a character that there ought to be some explanation as to why it is necessary. It is violative of two of the well-established rules of this House, namely, that legislation of this character shall not be considered on an appropriation bill; second, it takes jurisdiction of an important matter from a committee of this House that we have the right to assume has carefully considered the subject. It usurps that jurisdiction. Now, to my mind there ought to be some explanation made to the House of why it is necessary. Who has been derelict in duty, if there has been dereliction; who has failed to meet the responsibility, if there is a failure of that kind. I think some explanation should be made as to this extraordinary procedure, and while I expect to aid, so far as I can, in securing the legislation that I understand is sought, believing it to be necessary, yet the procedure is so singular and peculiar that there ought to be a reason assigned for it.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I quite agree with my colleague on the committee, and with the gentleman from Iowa, that ordinarily it is not the function of the Committee on Appropriations to legislate. But this rule is not an unprecedented rule. Such rules have been adopted in like exigencies in previous Congresses, both Democratic and Republican. Such a rule was adopted in the Fifty-second Congress, when the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] was in the chair, whereby legislation was provided for upon the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. A similar rule prevailed in the Fifty-fourth Congress, when legislation was provided for upon the District appropriation bill. I understand this to be a case of exigency, and I understand that the rule is not complained of by the Committee on the District of Columbia, after they had been advised of the character of the proposed legislation.

Now, as to the necessity of this legislation, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois, or as much time as he may want.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. McDERMOTT. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly.

Mr. McDERMOTT. I have been at a considerable study as to what is meant by the provisions of the personal-tax bill of the Senate, because it affected an interest that I am interested in; but leaving that question aside, I find that that bill was so drawn that in many instances in the city of Washington it would in the way of license tax impose a tax upon people in this city of about 50 per cent of the income derived from the avenues they were taxed for being in. I have not had any opportunity to learn what kind of a personal-tax bill is to be considered as an amendment to this bill. Has it been printed?

Mr. DALZELL. It has not been, I am informed. I will say to the gentleman from New Jersey that I am not informed as to the details of the proposition to be put upon this bill, but it will be subject to amendment as any other paragraph of the bill.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Let me say to the gentleman from New Jersey that the amendment which is to be offered to this bill is not the Senate tax bill.

Mr. McDERMOTT. There is not a man in this House, in my opinion, I care not how familiar he is with the subject, can take the Senate tax bill and in a week decide which provisions are advisable and which are inadvisable.

Mr. DALZELL. I think the gentleman from Illinois can give the gentleman from New Jersey some light on that subject.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, in a very few words I think I can place the House in possession of the facts for the necessity for this rule. If adopted it authorizes legislation to impose taxation on personal property in the District. The Committee on Appropriations never desires to be burdened with matters of legislation. It is an appropriating committee, and when you begin to legislate touching any given question it involves a great deal of work. I do not know of any member of that committee, with the work we have to do, who is standing around wanting to hunt up more. [Laughter.] It is not a matter of love, but rather a matter of necessity, that made this committee appeal to the Committee on Rules for this order for the consideration of the House.

Now, what is the condition? The bill that we report and are to proceed to consider presently is the District appropriation bill, and on its face it recommends appropriations much larger than the District revenues, and a similar sum from the Federal Treasury for the coming year, taking the estimate under existing law as it is administered, so that somebody will not be paid under this appropriation unless there is some provision made to meet the items appropriated for.

Now, there are several ways of meeting them. One way would be to borrow the money; another way would be for the United States to advance the money out of the Treasury for the District's part, and another way, and the best way, is to pay as we go. Now, then, not knowing what legislation might be had, your Committee on Appropriations reports the provision on this bill providing for a horizontal reduction of 10 per cent of the amount recommended unless on or before the 1st of July next a law shall be enacted imposing a tax upon personal property in this District. That is one way we propose to meet it, so far as the committee is concerned. But, after all, that is not a very satisfactory way to do it. How else can it be done? There is practically no taxation upon personal property in the District. It goes without taxation. It seemed to your committee that personal property ought to pay its share of taxes. We waited for two months for appropriate committees of the Senate and House to report some legislation. None was reported. We waited and waited until we were forced, practically forced, to report this bill. We reported it.

Now, you may say, what kind of legislation are we going to recommend if this rule is adopted? Very short, and I think to the point. In 1877 there was an efficient and sufficient personal property tax bill that passed Congress, and it is the law to-day. In 1878, under a provision in that bill, the District Commissioners consolidated certain offices, and officers necessary to carry out that bill was a board of review of four people. Now, they consolidated three of them out of existence, and there has been no machinery since that time by which there could be an equalization, and there has been no payment of taxes since that time except voluntarily on personal property.

Litigation in the courts found that defect, and there we are. Now, that is a good tax law, in my judgment. Anyhow, it is on the statute book, and your committee, in my judgment, will move, if this rule is adopted, to provide the machinery to carry out existing law under which and by which the stock of corporations that are not otherwise taxed, personal property, choses in action, including the stock of national banks, will be listed for taxation, and when listed the law already in existence will impose a cent and a half tax. We trust that will give money enough so that we can strike off in conference, in the event this legislation is enacted, the 10 per cent cut.

We will have to have a great deal more money than that, though, if we are to do many things that are proposed to be done. There is a municipal building authorized yesterday not provided for here; advances already made by the United States under former legislation not provided for except as we may provide for them by this tax bill; burdens in connection with the terminal legislation a year ago; the construction of a bridge across the Potomac; contributions to the elevation of the railway line; and all that kind of thing, and an appropriation made by that legislation to pay it out of the United States Treasury not provided for unless we provide something by further taxation. I will not enter upon the domain of the $10,000,000 of taxation that is proposed to be levied upon the District and the United States by the new terminal bill, taking substantially all the burdens of the terminal bills of two years ago; it will be sufficient to meet these matters as they come up. But without regard to anything else than what is now actually in sight, it is necessary that we should either borrow money or provide this machinery to enforce existing law for the levying of taxation on personal property. I think it ought to be done; and I believe the House, if it has the opportunity, will so legislate.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Inasmuch as we have not been able to see the legislative proposition which the gentleman's committee is to submit, I wish to ask if it is confined altogether to the assessment of taxation on personal property?

Mr. CANNON. Yes; personal property. Real estate is already taxed.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I ask the gentleman if he does not think it would have been wise, if we are to take cognizance of this question of taxation in the District, to provide also for some way of revising the system of taxing realty in this District? As I understand, the realty is now assessed 1½ cents on the dollar, but the valuation of real estate, if I am not misinformed, is very low.

Mr. CANNON. It is assessed, as I understand, at about 65 per cent of its actual value.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. If there were a fair assessment or valuation of the realty in this District, it seems to me we would get all the money we need, so that I think it would have been very well if the proposition of the committee had gone to the extent of considering in some way a measure by which there could be a fairer valuation of real estate for purposes of taxation.

Mr. CANNON. We have taken that question into consideration. The law now provides for the assessment of realty. But, after all, the making of law is one thing, and the enforcing of it is another. Your committee will, I think, offer an apt proposition for securing proper taxation of personal property in this District. Perhaps I might just as well outline this plan as to refer to it in general terms.

At present the District Commissioners appoint the assessor and his assistants. The Commissioners create these assessors, appoint them, dismiss them. They respond to the District Commissioners. Now, these Commissioners are very excellent gentlemen; but heretofore, by their action for almost twenty years, the personal-tax law has been annulled, Congress acquiescing. Now, the Commissioners to a certain extent respond to the local sentiment. When we pass this personal-tax law, will the assessors find the property which it is designed to tax? They will find the stock of corporations, undoubtedly; but will they find the credits and the money? This question is arising all the time in our respective States; and in the main the assessors do find this species of property in the respective States, because they are responsible to the people. Now, I apprehend we shall propose an amendment that the assessor and his three assistants who are to make this assessment shall be appointed by the President—not with the advice and consent of the Senate, but by the President.

In other words, in my judgment, taking into consideration this location and the surrounding conditions—without abusing or criticising anybody, and I am not doing so—the people who are to do this assessing—who are to value this property—ought to be responsible to the Chief Magistrate and receive in the performance of their duty the protection they would thus receive.

But that matter will come up later; I did not intend to refer to it now. I think that when this amendment is reported the House will be satisfied that it makes at least a foundation for sensible legislation to the end desired.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Allow me a suggestion. I assume that these amendments to which the gentleman is now referring will not be reached in the orderly course of business this evening?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no.

Mr. GROSVENOR. May I suggest, then, to the gentleman from Illinois that the proposition as prepared by the committee be printed in the RECORD of to-day's proceedings?

Mr. CANNON. I do not know whether that will be practicable or not. If it be practicable, no doubt the gentleman in charge of the bill, the chairman of the subcommittee [Mr. MCCLEARY], will do so.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do not know, of course, whether the amendments are so far ready——

Mr. CANNON. If it be practicable that will be done.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman from Illinois will allow me, I wish to ask him whether there has been any estimate made as to how much money will be realized from this system of taxation?

Mr. CANNON. It has been hard to reach such an estimate. Nobody can tell how much property of this kind will be found. If we can devise a law which will find the property, then, in my judgment, we ought to get from this source a million and a half of dollars.

Mr. FITZGERALD. On what does the gentleman base his judgment?

Mr. CANNON. I do not care to discuss details now. I have only spoken of the subject at this time because there seemed to be a desire on the part of the House to know the necessity of adopting this rule.

Now, one further word and I shall sit down. Well, I will not say what I was about to say. I have no criticism to make upon the committees of the District of Columbia. Sufficient is it to say that neither upon the House side nor the Senate side has this legislation been provided for, and it seems we are "up to" it—that it is a matter of necessity.

Mr. DALZELL. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MUDD].

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Chairman, a remark or two of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. CANNON] might, if unexplained, give this House the impression that the Committee on the District of Columbia of the House has been neglectful of its duty in reference to this tax law. In fact, the remarks of the gentleman might in a certain sense be construed as a direct reflection on the committee.

Mr. CANNON. I had no such desire or intention.

Mr. MUDD. I do not believe such was the intention of the gentleman; but in response to his observations I want to make a brief explanation of what has been done by the District Committee. The subcommittee on judiciary of the Committee on the District of Columbia has been in conference from time to time with the Senate Committee on the District as to the enactment of a personal-tax law for this District, and as to the terms of such a law.

They, so far as I know, had in a large measure, at least, agreed informally upon the provisions of the bill, or had gone to a considerable extent in that direction, so that there has been no neglect upon the part of the District Committee. In fact, there has been no bill before the District Committee of the House, and it was informally agreed by those who conferred about this measure that the House committee would await action by the Senate committee and the Senate before introducing the bill in this House.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not think that a resolution of this character is a proper one as a general proposition. I can not say that I approve it now. There had been no notice given to the Committee on the District of Columbia of its introduction, and I knew nothing of it until I saw it in the newspapers this morning. It is no reason for introducing a resolution of this kind, placing legislation upon an appropriation bill, that the Committee on the District of Columbia of the House and the Committee on the District of Columbia of the Senate have not been able in a day or week or even in a month to prepare a measure of such importance as a general system of personal taxation for the District of Columbia.

I want to state only in conclusion that it was upon the assurance given me by the chairman of the subcommittee of the general Appropriations Committee, in a statement made to me this morning when I first heard of this proposition, that the rule only proposed to reinstate and to recall into being the machinery for the want of which and merely for the want of which a law now upon the statute books was inoperative, that I made up my mind to make no determined protest against the rule. It is not a safe method of legislation and ought never to be resorted to except in cases of great urgency. I do not wish to be understood as approving it now, but that this Congress may not adjourn without any personal-tax law in this District, as would be the case in the event that the Senate and House may not agree upon a measure to be passed through the usual channels, I shall content myself with calling attention to the objectionable form in which, in my judgment, the legislation is sought to be passed, without making further protest or any prolonged or vigorous opposition to consideration by this committee.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to me a moment?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from New Jersey?

Mr. DALZELL. Yes; I yield three minutes.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Mr. Speaker, the necessity of taxing personal property in the city of Washington and everywhere else is obvious. Property should be assessed according to value and assessed under uniform rules, and all property should be assessed. Those three cardinal doctrines of just taxation have been incorporated in almost every State constitution in this Union. It is now proposed, as a rider to an appropriation bill, to assess, as explained by the gentleman from Illinois, one and a half per cent upon the capital stock of corporations. Is that an assessment upon personal property? It is proposed to assess, if the bill follows the lines of the Senate bill, a license tax upon every broker in the city of Washington, few of whom, as I understand it, has received an income within a year that would amount to double the tax. The Senate bill goes on with inequalities; but let me say to the gentleman from Illinois that the assessment which he proposes is not an assessment upon personal property.

Mr. BELL. May I suggest to the gentleman that I have the statute before me, and it is not upon the stock that the assessment is made, but it is upon the value of the stock?

Mr. McDERMOTT. The value of the stock?

Mr. BELL. Yes.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Well, there are two methods. That assessment is not an assessment upon property. That is an assessment upon franchise, subject to the vagaries of every local assessor who can use it as an instrument of reward or an instrument of punishment. What go to the elements that make up the value of stock which an assessor is to assess? First, the property, the tangible property, and the proper rule for a diligent assessor is to assess tangible property at the cost of reproduction, less depreciation, and that rule is a good rule in every part of this Union, unless there has been a misinvestment in that property, as in the case of a railroad which has been misbuilt; that is, built before its time.

Who is going to find any element of personal property in the difference between what a railroad, for instance, would sell at and what the market value of that railroad is? Take the case of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad. What is the value of that stock? Its value is what it would cost to reproduce the road plus the brains that are managing it. The usual way of assessing a franchise is to find out what, on any particular day, the value of the tangible property of a corporation is, and find out on that day what the market value of the stock and debt that represent the property is, subtract one from the other, and you have, in a majority of cases, the value of the franchise. What is the world bidding for? It is bidding for the franchise, and the difference between the market value of stock and debt, after you have subtracted all speculative aspects and the cost of reproduction, is the value of the franchise.

Therefore, when your assessor assesses the market value of stock against a corporation he does not assess personal property, because he does not assess stock in the hands of the holders. That is not the proposition in the Senate bill, and I understand is not to be the proposition here. If you are going to assess the stock in the hands of the holder, then you are properly within the domain of personal taxation; but if you are going to assess it against a corporation, whether the corporation is created under the laws of the District of Columbia or the laws of West Virginia or the laws of Maryland, then you are making a franchise tax, and it does seem to me that 1½ per cent upon the value of stock of a corporation that does its principal business in the city of Washington approaches confiscation nearer than any tax law that was ever enacted. Let me illustrate it. There has been a proposition to gather the power of the Potomac River.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Can I have a little more time at the courtesy of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. DALZELL. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. McDERMOTT. Five minutes.

Mr. DALZELL. I yield five minutes.

Mr. McDERMOTT. I want to illustrate just how it can be an injury and an injustice, for it is a proposition that I have recently had to consider. A corporation formed in the State of Maryland for the purpose of transmitting power into the city of Washington for electrical purposes—what is known as water power—would transact its principal business in the city of Washington.

What would you assess it at? One and a half per cent upon its capital stock. That would mean that such a corporation would become an absolute impossibility, and I say to the gentleman from Illinois that such a tax will drive all possible investment of capital from this city. It would be a great deal better, when we come to a tax bill, that we should not consider it in the hurry that necessarily is given to an unprinted proposition to amend an appropriation bill. Let the tax bill be separately printed, and then if it does not pass—well, you can state the consequence in your appropriation bill, that if Congress shall not assess personal property within this District by the 1st day of July, then the items in this appropriation bill shall be cut down 10 per cent. Nearly all of them can stand a cutting of 10 per cent, in my opinion.

Mr. CANNON. Let me remind the gentleman that we merely take the tax law of 1877, which is the law now taxing personal property, and provide the machinery that by unfortunate mistake or by fraud has been dropped out. That is all. My friend may be familiar with that law. If so, he can get the whole thing there.

Mr. McDERMOTT. The law of 1877?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. McDERMOTT. That law must have a great deal of merit in it, that after sleeping twenty-five years it is resurrected. Strange that it was not resurrected before. I am not wholly familiar with its provisions, but if I was going to pass the law of 1877 I would like five minutes to read it. I should like to have it in print.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, it is in print already.

Mr. McDERMOTT. I say it is an absolute impossibility, under the oath of a member of this House, to give intelligent and correct judgment to the guidance of his vote by merely hearing a tax bill, that is to impose a million and a half of dollars upon the city of Washington, read from the Clerk's desk as an amendment to an appropriation bill.

Mr. CANNON. Now, if my friend will allow me right there, I think I can remove some of the prejudice from his mind. In some particulars, regarding penalties and otherwise, this law has been amended from time to time. Take the law as amended. There have been various things done. A law has been passed taxing all the street-car lines 4 per cent of their gross earnings in lieu of other taxation. We do not, by our recommendation, propose to interfere with that provision, because we think, in the limited time we have, we probably could not improve it. I think when my friend comes to read the act of 1877, which is in print, he will have less objection perhaps to the proposed legislation than he now thinks he has.

Mr. McDERMOTT. The general proposition in the act of 1877, as stated by the gentleman from Illinois, is to impose a tax of 1½ per cent upon the value of the stock of all corporations, other than tramway corporations, doing business within the city of Washington or doing their principal business here. I say that that tax approaches confiscation. If it was enacted in 1877, and has not been reenacted, there were good reasons for the failure to reenact it.

Mr. CANNON. If my friend will allow me—I will ask an additional minute for my interruption—at the same time a law was passed taxing real estate 1½ per cent. Now, there is the stock of the corporation on the one hand and the house of the laborer upon the other. If one is confiscated, the other is.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Why, Mr. Speaker, I do not object to the taxation of personal property. I think it should be taxed. As I said in opening, all property should be taxed by uniform rules and according to value; and when you have those three propositions you have absolutely equal taxation. When you waive or alter one of them you have unequal taxation.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as to whether or not it is necessary to raise a million and a half dollars more for the purpose of taxation, I shall speak when we come to consider this bill. I ask consideration of this proposition in answer to the statement of the gentleman from Illinois that it is a question of borrowing. In every community in the United States, in every city, in every State, the work that is proposed to be done under this bill is done under the funded-debt system.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DALZELL. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was adopted.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. McCLEARY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the District appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota, member of the Committee on Appropriations, moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill H. R. 14019. the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14019) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes.

Mr. McCLEARY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. McCLEARY. Mr. Chairman, after the discussion just concluded it will not be necessary for me to do more than to make a brief general statement concerning the pending bill.

The estimates of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, call for $10,441,481.97, payable one-half from the revenues of the District of Columbia and one-half from the Treasury of the United States. In the bill which the Committee on Appropriations has reported the amount reported is $7,744,988.97, or $2,696,493 less the estimate submitted.

The appropriations for the current year are $8,370,581.94, so that the bill reported is a reduction on the present law amounting to $625,592.97.

The principal item of increase in the bill is that which increases the appropriation for the filtration plant from $500,000 to $600,000. The necessity for the filtration plant was obvious a few weeks ago, and the appropriation needs no justification at my hands.

There have been 25 new places provided for in the bill, consequent upon the growth of the city, and the total increase for salaries has been only $23,896. Under the financial exigencies of the District, the committee felt it necessary to make but very few increases of salary.

The estimates for cleaning the streets is increased by about $35,000.

The principal decrease has been for county roads, the decrease being $91,000, in round numbers, and for improvements in the vicinity of Rock Creek in the way of streets, $125,000.

While sewers are extended, the amount of appropriations for them has been reduced from $840,000—the present law—to $560,000 in the pending bill.

The appropriations for schools have been decreased near $300,000. This is due to the fact that during the last two years we have appropriated for practically all the school buildings that the Commissioners estimated for, and with the buildings provided the schools will be well supplied. As a consequence we are making no provision for buildings this year, the result being that the appropriation for public schools, though providing for 45 new teachers, is reduced about $300,000.

Mr. Chairman, I will reserve the balance of my time, and yield the floor to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BENTON].

Mr. BENTON. Mr. Chairman, it may be necessary for some members of the House who have not paid any attention to this legislation that is enacted from year to year to know something about the condition of the District of Columbia. There is a debt on the District, which is known as the funded debt, of $14,205,000, with interest and sinking fund, which has to be provided for, and it amounts to $1,213,000 annually. There was an advance made by the Government also of $1,100,000, which we are obligated to pay in four annual instalments, with interest; and we find this year that the amount of money necessary to meet this charge is $280,000.

This bill, so far as I have any knowledge of the legislation, never has been presented to the House so late as it has this time. I can briefly state to the committee the reason for our presenting the District bill at so late a period in the session. The committee assembled in December, and we had the estimates of the Commissioners, which amounted to near $10,500,000. Under the organic law the Government appropriates as much money, if needed, as the District raises by taxation. The estimates that came from the Treasury Department were that the taxes which would be raised by the District for the coming fiscal year would be $3,750,000. So that we were only authorized to appropriate double that sum—$7,500,000.

The estimates of the Commissioners amounted to ten and one-half million dollars. We were met with the request for $3,000,000 more money for the use of the District than we were authorized to appropriate. We called the District Commissioners in and asked them to rearrange their estimates. In doing so they dropped out the filtration plant, which every member of Congress who has had to drink the water in Washington this winter and spring knows we could not afford to do. They also dropped out the building of the sewers, and we did not believe we could defend ourselves before this Congress if we did not look after that as well as the filtration plant.

We then adjourned the committee and insisted on the Commissioners making some effort with the legislative committees connected with Congress to reach personal property by taxation. Now, there is plenty of law on the subject to tax personal property if there was any machinery to move it.

In 1877 a tax law was passed and officers were provided to carry out the law assessing a tax on personal property. A year after the enactment of that law the Commissioners, who were authorized to do it, merged the offices with the real-estate assessment offices and abolished the machinery for the collection of personal taxes, and the personal-tax law has never been carried out in this District.

Four or five times this committee has suggested to the Commissioners that something ought to be done to more nearly equalize taxation by placing a part of it on personal property. Without saying anything disagreeable of the people who live in the District, it is a fact that the large property holders are opposed to the assessment and collection of any taxes from personal property.

We adjourned our committee in December with the hope and expectation that legislation would be enacted before this time that would permit this committee to appropriate money to meet the full amount or nearly the full amount that the Commissioners estimated, because your committee is clearly of the opinion that the greater part of the $10,000,000 of the estimate of the District Commissioners was proper, and that they ought to have the money to pay for the things for which they estimated.

But we did not have the money, and we waited for five months for some legislative machinery by which taxes could be collected, so that when we wanted to make up our bill we were in this condition: There were $10,500,000 estimated by the Commissioners, the greater part of which we were satisfied they ought to have, and we only had authority to appropriate $7,500,000, or a little over, in money. We made up our bill, and then we were $700,000 above the amount that we were authorized to appropriate. What did we do? We put into the bill a clause, which I will read to the committee.

A reduction of 10 per cent on all of the foregoing sums herein appropriated for specified salaries and for all other objects, except for interest and sinking fund on the funded debt of the District of Columbia, shall be made, and no greater amount than 90 per cent of any of said foregoing sums except that for interest and sinking fund shall be expended or obligated for expenditure unless there shall have been enacted by Congress on or before July 1, 1902, a law imposing for the fiscal year 1903 and thereafter a tax on personal property in the District of Columbia other than that owned by the United States.

After we make this cut of 10 per cent in the bill, we find that we are within the estimates and have $203,000 to spare. But I want to call your attention to something else in this connection. We have already provided in the legislative bill and in the sundry civil bill for appropriations of $164,000, chargeable to the District, and we must arrange to raise $280,000 to meet the one-quarter payment on the $1,100,000 which I called attention to a moment ago. That would still leave us $240,000 out of pocket, or, in other words, the appropriation will be that much larger than the revenue.

But, as has been stated by the chairman of the committee, a reassessment of the real property is going on, and while the officers assure us that we ought to get three-quarters of a million, we feel assured that a reassessment of the real property will give us $240,000 at least, so that we are appropriating inside the law when we present this bill to you.

Now, on the subject of the rule. As I say, we waited five months for legislation. We felt that there ought to be appropriated in the next five years funds for the filtration plant, for the opening of streets, for the sewage plants in this city, five or six million dollars extra, and for the payment of our debt and current revenue and current expenses of the District.

There was no way to raise it except to have the owners of personal property bear their just proportion of the taxes. I understand some people think that this is a drastic movement. This proposed measure by which we are authorized under this rule to enact legislation in this bill does not seek to do more than to put the machinery in motion to collect taxes on personal property. We already have a law on the statute book which has been there for more than twenty years, but there has been no machinery with which we could work.

We propose here to make the machinery; and we propose to give authority to the President of the United States to appoint that assessment board, and that it shall not be necessary that the appointments be confirmed by the Senate, and that the power to appoint this board shall be taken away from the District Commissioners; that these assessors shall be an independent body, dependent upon no authority but the Chief Executive of the Government for appointment, so that there shall be no favoritism and that they shall fairly and honestly assess the personal as well as the real property in the District of Columbia. That is all that is intended by this committee.

Mr. HILL. As I understand, the law of 1877 makes the tax on personal property the same as on real estate.

Mr. BENTON. The same percentage; yes, sir.

Mr. HILL. In view of the fact that the interest rate during the last twenty-five years has so far decreased that, for instance, bonds of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, which in 1877 paid interest at the rate of 6 or 7 per cent (a large number of them probably being held in this city), now pay only 3 per cent, or, perhaps, counting the premium, 2½ per cent, does the gentleman think it prudent that the old rate of taxation—1½ per cent—should be continued?

Mr. BENTON. If there should be any showing of that kind, why would it not reduce the value of their stock and authorize a lower assessment?

Mr. HILL. I thought the bill merely provided new machinery, but proposed to continue the same rate of taxation.

Mr. BENTON. If you want to amend the bill, it will be here for legislative consideration; the question will be open.

Mr. HILL. Will the law itself be open for amendment?

Mr. BENTON. Yes, sir; of course.

Mr. FOX. I did not so understand.

Mr. BENTON. We open the subject here by proposing amendments ourselves.

Mr. HILL. But will the law itself be presented to the House for amendment?

Mr. BENTON. It will be here. What amendments might be in order would, of course, be a question for decision by the Chair.

Mr. HILL. And the Chair would probably decide against the admission of such amendments as I have indicated.

Mr. BENTON. I can not, of course, say what the Chair would decide.

Now, let me explain this matter for a moment to my friend from Connecticut. If the property of any corporation which in 1877 was worth a million dollars is now worth only one-third of that amount, then it would be taxed not on $1,000,000, but on one-third of that valuation.

Mr. HILL. I am not talking about taxation of a property of corporations. I am referring to choses in action—bonds, and things of that kind; for instance, bonds of the Pennsylvania Railroad. The purpose of this bill, as I understand, is to provide machinery for taxing personal property of that kind.

Mr. BENTON. Yes, sir; personal property.

Mr. HILL. I say that is a dangerous proposition. It would be a dangerous proposition to attempt to reenact the law in force in 1877 and put it into effect now with taxation at the same rate, in view of the fact that the income from such property has very largely fallen off. If you should undertake, for instance, to impose a tax of 1½ per cent on a 3 per cent bond, you would drive the ownership of that bond out of the District, so, instead of getting more money, you would lose money.

Mr. BENTON. We certainly should not get any less money than we do now if parties did leave the District, because now we are not getting any at all. I do not think this legislation would make the case any worse.

Mr. HILL. You might cause less money to be spent in the District of Columbia if you did not get it in taxes.

Mr. BELLAMY. I should like to ask the gentleman a question. What provision does your bill make for collecting tax from a millionaire, who, we will say, resides at a Washington hotel and has no personal property here?

Mr. BENTON. We do not undertake to make any provision for a case of that kind.

Mr. BELLAMY. What would you expect to happen in such a case?

Mr. BENTON. We propose to tax any man here who has any personal property in sight.

Mr. BELLAMY. But suppose he had none in sight?

Mr. BENTON. Then, I presume, we could not reach him any more than we could at home in our State.

Mr. SIMS. As I understand, the committee proposes not to enact a new law, but simply to enforce a law already in existence and unrepealed?

Mr. BENTON. I said at the beginning that we want to put the machinery in motion to carry out a law now on the statute book.

The complaint is made by the gentleman from Connecticut that men do not get as much profit on their property now as they did twenty-five years ago, and that therefore they ought not to be taxed so heavily; and it is argued that such a measure as this might drive property owners out of the District. But we could lose nothing by that, because for twenty-five years we have not received anything from the taxation of this class of people; they have not been taxed at all. But every State in the Union, so far as I have knowledge, has a personal-tax law.

Mr. MADDOX. In regard to the talk of "driving property owners away," where could they go and escape taxation? Would they not be taxed on their personal property wherever they might take up their residence?

Mr. BENTON. If they should go to Missouri, they would certainly find personal-tax laws in operation, with the machinery to enforce them.

Mr. MINOR. Just a question, please. Is it a fact that these mercantile houses in the city of Washington carrying a stock of from $100,000 to $300,000 escape taxation entirely?

Mr. BENTON. Absolutely.

Mr. MINOR. Well, who is going to excuse it?

Mr. BENTON. That is just exactly what this committee wants to ask this House, if there is anybody here going to excuse it.

Mr. MINOR. What effect will that have on real estate if you include the personal property and assess it at its true value, and levy this tax you propose on it?

Mr. BENTON. Well, it certainly will not raise the tax on real estate; it will not increase that tax, and I should think would soon give cause to lower real-estate assessments.

Mr. MINOR. If you want to raise a certain amount of money for District purposes——

Mr. BENTON. Yes.

Mr. MINOR. The more property you have to assess the lighter the tax will be.

Mr. BENTON. The lighter the tax will be on it all.

Mr. MINOR. Is it not to the interest of every real-estate owner in the District of Columbia to see that this legislation is enacted?

Mr. BENTON. Yes.

Mr. MINOR. I never heard of such an unjust thing. I happen to be the owner of a home here in Washington, and I have noticed that the tax is very high. I pay more here than I do in Wisconsin. I have personal property that I moved from Wisconsin here, and I remember one time being caught in filling out an assessment blank from my own home. Where it said such and such personal property in the District of Columbia, presuming it was assessed here, I left it out.

In the next campaign the Democrats caught me up. [Laughter.] They went to the records of the District of Columbia and found they did not assess personal property, and those blanks were distributed all over my district. Now, I say the proposition is infamous. This legislation ought to have been had years ago. It is just and right, and it is the law in every State in this Union. You simply make the city of Washington an asylum for all the rich men whose wealth is invested in personal property to come here to Washington and live. It is a disgrace to the city. Let us enact it.

Mr. BENTON. I thank the gentleman from Wisconsin for his suggestion, because if the needs of the District are $9,000,000 a year and under this law, which we propose, we raise $10,000,000, it will be more than we need, and after a year or two of improvements that we have to make we can lower the assessed value on all the property both real and personal.

Mr. MINOR. That is right.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. If you have the law and it has been on the books for twenty years, what else do you want to do than to enforce it?

Mr. BENTON. We have no officers appointed and no machinery to enforce it.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. What has been the reason you have not enforced it?

Mr. BENTON. For the simple reason that the officials in charge of the District of Columbia have been opposed to a personal-tax law or to the collection of personal taxes, if you want to know the truth. That is exactly what it is. Members of this District of Columbia Appropriation Committee have been moving on this matter for five years, to my certain knowledge, and we have been met with the objection that they did not want to tax personal property because they want people of large wealth to come here.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Then the emergency is the only thing that you offer as an excuse for enforcing this personal-tax law.

Mr. BENTON. No; it is not. Plain justice is the main reason. I give that as one of the reasons. It is not alone the emergency. It is an outrage that we have not had a personal-tax law enforced here all the time; but when we found we could not get the legislation from a proper legislative committee, this committee has asked this rule for the purpose of putting this legislation on the District appropriation bill, which is not ordinarily the place for such legislation.

Ordinarily it ought to come from other committees—legislating committees—and ordinarily we would not have asked for any such authority; and we have been waiting here for years and years for some authority to collect personal taxes, and as we have not been able to get it, we have come here and asked for this drastic rule to be made, so that we can legislate on a much-needed matter and in that way get justice done.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I would like to ask, in further answer to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON], if it is not true that one great reason and the chief reason why they have not resorted to this personal property for taxation has been that they had a sufficient amount by the $1.50 levied on realty?

Mr. BENTON. That is what they have said.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. That is, if you had put the tax on personal property and raised more money you would have lowered it, probably, on real estate. In other words, they have got all they wanted by putting the dollar and fifty cent tax on real estate, and if you had raised more from the personalty the effect of it would have been to draw less from the real estate. You would have drawn about the same amount at last from the people in the District.

Mr. MINOR. But from different people.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. They have had to borrow, I understand.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Yes; but when they have borrowed they have repaid it. Of course they have had to be economical, and they have cut down expenses by reason of the fact that they did not always have an abundance of money.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I understood the gentleman from Missouri that there was a bonded indebtedness of from fourteen to fifteen millions of dollars.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Oh, yes.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. It seems to me if that existed there was not much excuse for allowing all this personal property to escape for twenty-odd years.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. There is no excuse for this condition. The personalty ought to be taxed.

Mr. CREAMER. I would like to ask the gentleman from Missouri if his State taxes personal property.

Mr. BENTON. Yes; and mortgages as well.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. I understood him to say——

Mr. MORRELL. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I will yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MORRELL. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. He has stated that an effort will be made to reach the people living in hotels and other places. I would like to ask the gentleman how long they would have to be residents before they would be eligible for taxation on personal property.

Mr. BENTON. If a man is a bona fide resident, no particular time is necessary.

Mr. MORRELL. How can that be determined?

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. In the same way that it is determined everywhere else.

Mr. BENTON. I will say to the gentleman that it is not the intention to go after members of Congress, because they are supposed to be taxed at home, if they have any property.

Mr. BELLAMY. Is it proposed to try to ascertain whether a man has abandoned his residence in the State from whence he came?

Mr. BENTON. That is exactly what we propose to do if we get the proper man in here as assessor.

Mr. MORRELL. You stated that it had been impossible to get any legislation here in the House in regard to raising the revenue. I should like to ask the gentleman why this was brought in here as a rule instead of as a separate bill, which would have given an opportunity to all members of the House to discuss it on its merits, instead of bringing it in tied onto an appropriation bill, which makes the appropriation fail unless it is agreed to, which is not fair.

Mr. BENTON. I will say in answer to that that if I were to give you a direct and honest answer to your question——

Mr. MORRELL. I should like an honest answer.

Mr. BENTON. If I should do that I think I should be animadverting on another committee of this House. I will state to you in general terms that the Committee on Appropriations have waited and hoped that legislation would come from a legislative committee, which we think the proper one to deal with this question. We have waited for years, and we waited even this session for five months in that hope, and no legislation was proposed by which personal property in this District could be reached. The session is drawing to a close, and unless we reach it in this way there will be no possible way of taxing personal property this year.

Mr. MORRELL. I do not consider that two wrongs make one right, and if one committee is derelict in its duty, that is no reason why this legislation should come in in this shape.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I want to ask the gentleman from Missouri in reference to the bonded indebtedness of the city. I understood him to say that there was a bonded indebtedness of about $14,000,000.

Mr. BENTON. A little over that.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I should like to ask what per cent of interest is being paid upon that debt, and whether or not the Government of the United States is paying any part of the interest upon it?

Mr. BENTON. The rate is 3.65, or nearly 4 per cent, and we are paying our part of it.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I want to know now, in addition to that, if this indebtedness was not incurred by reason of the city's failure to come up with its part of the appropriation.

Mr. BENTON. No; I understand it was away back of the time that the city was organized as now run. The old debt was $22,000,000; and we, in the organic act that was passed, undertook to shoulder our half of it.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. That is what I wanted to find out.

Mr. BENTON. In other words, the District of Columbia, under the old government, was swamped.

Mr. SIMS. Is any sinking fund being provided to meet this indebtedness?

Mr. BENTON. Yes; this year we appropriate $1,300,000 to pay interest and for the sinking fund. The total indebtedness is very slowly being decreased.

Mr. CREAMER. Does the gentleman intend to close debate this evening?

Mr. BENTON. Oh, no.

Mr. CREAMER. Because there are some views I should like to submit.

Mr. BENTON. Oh, no. I think we will give the gentleman a fair chance.

Now, gentlemen, on this taxing question all I have to say is this: Some gentlemen believe that the proper thing to do is to issue bonds and let the next generation pay them off. I have been raised and trained in that school of politics that teaches me that that is not business and is not correct. We owe a debt of $14,000,000, and we owe another debt of $1,000,000 or nearly so. If we make a fair assessment of personal property and real property as well, we will meet the requirements of the District as they are growing, and we will gradually pay off that indebtedness in the next ten or twelve years.

If real estate alone is to be taxed, we must tax it higher than it ought to be taxed or we shall have to let our debt run and not be able to meet the necessities of the law for a sinking fund and for an interest fund. Therefore it is the opinion of those of us who have given it study that we ought to have a law which will tax all the property of the District of Columbia that can possibly be reached, just as it is taxed in the sovereign States where you and I live, and when that is done we will lower our debt and keep up with the necessities of the times in the District.

I want to say for the information of some gentlemen who have asked me on the subject of salaries that an effort was made and recommendations were made to increase a large number of salaries, running up into the hundreds of thousands of dollars.

For two reasons your committee declined to go into the salary-raising business. In the first place, we were of the opinion that the greater number of the employees of the District were fairly well paid. In the second place, we were confronted with this condition of affairs which I have recited to you, and we could not afford to raise the salaries of gentlemen who were serving the District. Another effort was made to change a large number from the per diem list to the salaried list.

I do not know whether gentlemen understand it or not, but to change a man from the per diem list and put him on the salary list entitles him to thirty days' sick leave and thirty days' leave of absence. When he is on the per diem list he is not entitled to that. Your committee, after thinking it over, declined to change this great number of persons from the per diem list to the salary list and left it as it is. Not over a half dozen salaries have been raised. Perhaps twenty-four or twenty-five new salaries have been made, and those from the necessities of the public service. If there are no other questions, I shall reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. McCLEARY. Mr. Chairman, in view of the implied promise, I send the amendment that has been under discussion to the desk, simply to have it inserted in the RECORD for the information of the members of the House, and to be considered as pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the amendment he sends to the desk be printed in the RECORD, and be considered as pending. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The proposed amendment is as follows:

On page 4, after line 20, insert:

"That for all purposes of assessment and collection of taxes upon personal property in the District of Columbia the act of Congress approved March 3, 1877, entitled 'An act for the support of the government of the District of Columbia for the year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes,' as amended by specific acts of Congress, is hereby declared in full force and effect and to have been continuously so in force since its enactment; and that the board of assistant assessors created under the act of Congress approved August 14, 1894, be, and they hereby are, clothed with the duties and powers of the assessors mentioned in said first-named act, and, under the direction of the assessor, they shall assess personal property for taxation as required by law; and said board of assistant assessors, together with said assessor, are hereby constituted a board of equalization, appeal, and review of the assessments of personal property; and hereafter said board shall, between the 1st day of September and the 31st day of October in each year, hold daily sessions for the purpose of equalizing the assessments theretofore made by them, and of hearing and determining any and all appeals from the valuations theretofore made by them: Provided, That the tax on personal property shall be due, payable, and collected as now provided by law: And provided further, That each national bank, as the trustee of its stockholders, through its president, secretary, or cashier, shall make the like returns and pay the same taxes as other corporations are required to do in said first-named act: And provided further, That the assessor and the three members of the board of assistant assessors authorized by the act approved August 14, 1894, whose salaries are herein appropriated for, shall, within ten days after the approval of this act, be appointed by the President for a term of three years each, except that the terms of each of the three members of the board of assistant assessors shall terminate as follows: One each year, to be determined by lot among the three members of the board first appointed."

Mr. CREAMER. Will it not be possible to have this law of 1877 printed in the RECORD as well, so that we will have it before the committee?

Mr. McCLEARY. I am very well content to have that done; and I ask unanimous consent that the act of 1877 be also printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the statute of 1877 be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The statute is as follows:

CHAP. 117.—An act for the support of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That for the support of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, there shall be levied upon all lands outside of the cities of Washington and Georgetown held and used solely for agricultural purposes a tax of $1.25 on each $100 of the assessed value thereof, and upon all other real and personal property in said District, excepting only the real and personal property of the United States and that hereinafter stated, a tax of $1.50 on each $100 of the assessed value thereof.

SEC. 2. That the amount collected under the provisions of this act shall be distributed for the purposes required under the various acts in force in the District of Columbia, upon a just and fair apportionment, to be made by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia or their successors in office: Provided, That before any of said fund shall be expended said apportionment shall be established and published by said Commissioners at least six times consecutively in a daily newspaper of the District of Columbia; and said published apportionment shall stand as the law for the distribution of the funds herein mentioned: Provided further, That deficiencies in any of said funds enumerated in said apportionment may be supplied from any surplus in either of said funds so apportioned; but, unless a surplus exists, the revenues belonging to one fund shall not be applied to the purposes of any other fund.

SEC. 3. That one-half of the tax levied by this act upon real and personal property shall become due and payable on the 1st day of November, 1877, and the other one-half of such tax shall become due and payable on the 1st day of May, 1878; and in every case where the tax levied by this act shall be paid in installments as herein authorized, each of said payments shall be deemed to have been made on the several funds and for the different purposes indicated in the second section of this act; and an equal pro-rata proportion of the payments so made shall be carried to the credit of the respective funds.

SEC. 4. That if one-half of the tax herein levied upon the real and personal property taxed by this act shall not be paid before the 1st day of December, 1877, said installment shall thereupon be in arrears and delinquent; and there shall then be added, to be collected with such taxes, a penalty of 2 per cent upon the amount thereof, and a like penalty on the 1st day of each succeeding month until payment of said installment and penalty. And if said installment shall not be paid before the 1st day of June, 1878, together with the one-half of said original tax due before said 1st day of June, a like penalty shall then be added on said last one-half of said tax; and the whole together shall constitute the delinquent tax, to be dealt with and collected in the manner prescribed by this act.

SEC. 5. That it shall be the duty of the collector of taxes in said District to prepare a complete list of all taxes on real property upon which the same are levied, in arrears on the 1st day of July, 1878, including all taxes due to the late corporation of Washington City, Georgetown, levy court, and the District of Columbia; and he shall within fifteen days thereafter, publish the same with a notice of sale, in a pamphlet of which not less than 5,000 copies shall be printed for circulation; and it shall be the duty of said collector of taxes to give notice by advertising in the regular issue of two daily newspapers published in said District twice a week for three successive weeks, that said pamphlet has been printed and that a copy thereof will be delivered to any taxpayer applying therefor at the office of said tax collector; and that if the taxes due, together with the penalties and costs that may have accrued thereon, shall not be paid prior to the day named for sale, the property will be sold by the said collector at public auction, at office of said collector, in the city of Washington, on the second Tuesday of August following, and each day thereafter until all is sold, at a fixed hour, between the hours of 10 o'clock in the forenoon and 4 o'clock in the afternoon of said days to the highest bidder or bidders.

The expenses of said advertising and the printing of said pamphlet shall be paid by a charge of 20 cents for each lot or piece of property advertised. Upon the day specified aforesaid the collector shall proceed to sell any and all property upon which such taxes remain unpaid, and continue to sell the same every secular day until all the real property as aforesaid shall have been brought to auction. Immediately after the close of the sale upon payment of the purchase money he shall issue to the purchaser a certificate of sale, and if the property shall not be redeemed by the owner thereof within two years from the day of sale by payment to the collector of said District for the use of the legal holder of the certificate of the amount for which it was sold at such sale, and 15 per cent per annum thereon, a deed thereof shall be given by the Commissioners of the District or their successors in office to the purchaser at the tax sale or the assignee of such certificate, which deed shall be admitted and held to be prima facie evidence of a good and perfect title, in fee simple, to any property bought at any sale herein authorized; and all proceedings prior to said deed shall be presumed to have been regular until the contrary be proved: Provided, That no property advertised as aforesaid shall be sold upon any bids not sufficient to meet the amounts of tax penalty and costs; but in case the highest bid upon any property is not sufficient to meet the taxes, penalty, and costs thereon, said property shall thereupon be bid off by the said Commissioners or their successors in office in the name of the District of Columbia; but the property so bid off shall not be exempted from assessment and taxation, but shall be assessed and taxed as other property; and if within two years thereafter such property is not redeemed by the owner or owners thereof by the payment of the taxes, penalties, and costs due at the time of the offer of the sale and that may have accrued after that date and 10 per cent per annum thereon, or if any property two years after having been so bid off at any sale whatever in the name of said District, under this or any other law, and whether heretofore or hereafter made, is not or has not been so redeemed as aforesaid, then the Commissioners of the District or their successors in office shall, in the name and on behalf of the District of Columbia, apply to the supreme court of said District, sitting in equity for the purpose of enforcing the lien acquired as aforesaid by said District on the property aforesaid, and until such judicial proceedings shall be had the property so as aforesaid sold for taxes and bid off in the name of the District, either at any sale heretofore made or at any sale hereafter to be made, may be redeemed by the owner thereof by the payment of the taxes and all legal penalties and costs thereon.

Upon proof of the failure of the owner or owners of the property to redeem it as provided by law, unless it shall be shown by the defendant or defendants that the sale for taxes was irregular and void, the court shall, without unnecessary delay, giving these cases precedence over current business, decree the sale of said property to satisfy the taxes, penalties, costs, and interest due to the government of the District of Columbia; and the costs of suit and said sale shall be had in the same manner as of foreclosures, mortgages, or trust deeds in said court. No sale shall be made, unless by express order of the court, for an amount less than the aggregate of said taxes, penalties, costs, and interest. Any surplus received from said sale over said aggregate and the costs of the court, including the commission of the trustee, shall be paid to the person in equity entitled to receive it; and, on confirmation of the sale, the court shall cause to be issued to the purchaser a deed, which shall have the effect to convey to said purchaser all the right, title, and estate of all persons whomsoever claiming an interest to said property, except as hereinafter provided: And provided also, That minors or other persons under legal disability be allowed one year after such minors coming to or being of full age, or after the removal of such legal disability, to redeem the property so sold, or of which the title has, as aforesaid, become vested in the District of Columbia, from the purchaser or purchasers, his, her, or their heirs or assigns, or from the District of Columbia, on payment of the amount of purchase money so paid therefor, with 10 per cent per annum interest thereon as aforesaid, and all taxes and assessments that have been paid thereon by the purchaser, or his assigns, between the day of sale and the period of such redemption, 10 per cent per annum interest on the amount of such taxes and assessments.

SEC. 6. That the collector of taxes, immediately after he shall have made sale of any property as aforesaid, shall file with the comptroller a written report, in which he shall give a statement of the property advertised and the property sold, to whom it was assessed, the taxes due, to whom sold, the amount paid, the date of sale, the cost thereof, and the surplus, if any, and the lands so as aforesaid sold to the District. Any surplus remaining, after collection of taxes, penalties, and costs, on any real estate, shall be deposited by the collector of taxes to the credit of the surplus fund, to be paid to the owner or owners, or their legal representatives, in the same manner as other payments made by the District of Columbia.

SEC. 7. That when the installment of one-half of the taxes on personal property so as aforesaid due and payable before the 1st day of November, 1877, shall not be paid before said date, or when the remaining installment shall not be paid before the 1st day of June, 1878, then, and in either such event, the collector of taxes, or his deputy, may distrain sufficient goods and chattels found within said District, and belonging to the person, persons, association, firm, or corporation charged with such tax, to pay the taxes remaining due under the provision of this law from such persons, firm, association, or corporation, together with the penalty thereon and the costs that may accrue; and, for want of such goods and chattels, said collector may levy upon and sell at auction, in like manner, the estate and interest of such person, firm, association, or corporation in any parcel of land in said District; and in that case the proceedings as to such land subsequent to sale shall be the same as in the case of taxes against real estate, as in this act provided; and thereupon said collector shall immediately proceed to advertise the same, by public notices posted in front of the court-house, in the city of Washington, and in the office of said collector, and by advertisement three times for one week in some daily newspaper published in said District, as hereinafter provided, stating the time when and the place where such property shall be sold, the last publication to be at least six days before the day of sale; and if the taxes and penalty thereon for which such property shall have been distrained, and the costs and expense which shall have accrued thereon, shall not be paid before the day fixed for such sale, which shall not be less than ten days after the taking of such property, the collector shall proceed to sell, at public auction, in front of his office, to the highest bidder, such property, or so much thereof as may be sufficient to pay said taxes, penalty, and accrued costs and expense of such distraint and sale. The collector of taxes shall be allowed, for making such distress and sale, the same fees as are now by law allowed to the marshal of said District for making levy and sale of property under execution. Said collector shall report in detail every such distress and sale, in writing, to the Commissioners of the District, or their successors in office; and his accounts, in respect of every such distress or sale, shall forthwith be submitted by him to the accounting officers of the District and audited by them. Any surplus resulting from such sale shall be paid into the treasury of the District, and, upon being claimed by the owner or owners of the goods and chattels, shall be paid to him.

SEC. 8. That the property exempt from taxation under this act shall be the following and no other, namely: First, the Corcoran Art Building, free public library buildings, churches, the Soldiers' Home, and grounds actually occupied by such buildings; secondly, houses for the reformation of offenders, almshouses, buildings belonging to institutions of purely public charity, conducted without charge to inmates, profit, or income; cemeteries dedicated and used solely for burial purposes and without private income or profit; but if any portion of any such building, house, grounds, or cemetery so in terms excepted is larger than is absolutely required and actually used for its legitimate purpose and none other, or is used to secure a rent or income, or for any business purpose, such portion of the same, or a sum equal in value to such portion, shall be taxed against the owner of said building or grounds; thirdly, such property as is now exempt from taxation by laws of the United States; fourthly, personal property not in said District and taxed elsewhere, but owned by persons domiciled in said District; fifthly, personal property not held for sale and not over the value of $500.

SEC. 9. That from the assessed value of the credits only of any person there shall be deducted the amount of any valid and bona-fide debt or debts which any such person shall individually and absolutely owe, in respect of which he has no remedy over against any other person, upon the same being established by the affidavit of such person claiming deduction as hereinafter provided.

SEC. 10. That the Commissioners of said District or their successors in office shall cause to be prepared a printed blank schedule of personal property, including bonds, deeds of trust, mortgages, credits, and other choses in action or possession owned or held in trust or otherwise subject to taxation under the provisions of this act, together with deductions claimed for exemption or debts, to which shall be appended an affidavit in blank, setting forth that the foregoing presents a full and true statement of all the personal property, bonds, deeds of trust, mortgages, credits, and all other choses in action or possession, together with the amount of indebtedness on account of which deductions are claimed, and the kind of property claimed as exempt, under which class of exemptions, and that the property claimed as exempt under the fifth clause does not exceed in value $500. And when said schedule is ready for delivery, notice thereof shall be given by the assessors by advertisement for six successive secular days, in one or more of the daily papers published in said District, and a copy of said schedule shall be delivered to any citizen applying therefor at the office of said assessors.

Every person, corporation, or firm in said District liable to taxation hereunder, and every executor, administrator, guardian, or trustee holding property in trust liable to taxation hereunder, shall, within forty-five days after the first publication of said advertisement as aforesaid, fill up the proper blanks in said schedule with a full and true statement in this section above required, and make and sign an affidavit to the truth thereof as aforesaid before one of the said assessors, who is hereby authorized to administer such oath without charge, or before any person authorized by law to administer oaths; and the address in the District of the affidavit shall in each case be given below his signature, and thereupon any one of said assessors shall assess said property at its fair cash value, and enter the same in the columns upon said blank to be provided for that purpose, and the amount thus ascertained after making the deductions provided for in this act shall be entered upon the books for taxation: Provided, That if any person, firm, or corporation, administrator, executor, guardian, or trustee shall fail to make for forty-five days after the first advertisement of the notice above required, and deliver to the assessors, or one of them, the schedule of his or its said property held in trust or otherwise, as in this section provided for, any one of said assessors shall, without delay, from the best information he can procure, make an assessment against such person, firm, or corporation, to which he shall add 50 per cent thereof: Provided further, That if a majority of said assessors be not satisfied as to the correctness of the return of personal property so made by any person, corporation, firm, executor, administrator, guardian, or trustee, any one of said assessors may, from the best information he can procure, or by making such an examination of the personal property as may be practicable, assess the same in such amount as to him may seem just; and notice of the rejection of the sworn return shall be given to the party intrusted at the address given by him on the schedule, if he shall have given one; and he shall in all cases have the right of appeal to the board of assessors within the time hereinafter limited: And provided further, That if any person shall make a false affidavit touching the matters herein provided for, he shall be deemed guilty of perjury, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be subject to the penalties for that offense now provided for by section 5392 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

SEC. 11. That the capital stock of all corporations in said District not herein exempted shall be appraised in bulk by the assessor, and the corporation issuing the same shall be liable for the tax thereon according to such value and the shares in the same shall not be assessed against the individual owners thereof; but from the appraised value of the stock shall be first deducted the value of any real estate of said corporation in said District, which shall be separately taxed against said corporation.

SEC. 12. That the assessment of real property made under the provisions of the act of Congress entitled "An act for the support of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1875, and amendments thereto, is hereby ratified and approved as the assessment except as hereinafter modified, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and the Commissioners of the District, or their successors in office, shall appoint three competent persons to be assessors, and to hold office for the term of five years, unless sooner removed, the salary of each of said assessors to be $1,250 per annum.

Said assessors shall, before the 1st day of October, 1877, under the direction of the superintendent of assessments and taxes of said District assess the value of all the real property not embraced in the assessment for the fiscal year, ending June 30, 1877, inclusive of all buildings erected, or roofed, improved or enlarged and not heretofore taxed, and all personal property in said District liable to taxation, and shall state the same separately, in books to be kept in a systematic manner; and such value for taxation shall be the true value in the lawful money of the United States of the property so assessed. The assessed value shall have reference to the date of the 1st day of July, 1877, except in regard of buildings erected, roofed, improved, or enlarged subsequent to that date, or, in the case of stock in trade, shall be the average value of the stock of merchandise or other articles kept on hand during the year ending June 30, 1877.

Where a person, coming into the District subsequent to June 30, 1877, engages in trade of a permanent character, he shall pay a tax proportioned to the fraction of the tax year ending June 30, 1878, during which he conducts said trade, and the assessment in said case shall have reference to the average stock in trade for sixty days from the date of commencing business; but when any person shall bring a stock of goods of any character whatever into the District for sale by auction, a tax of 1½ per cent shall be paid to the collector of the District; and it shall be the duty of the auctioneer making such sales to deduct the said tax from the gross proceeds of each and every sale so made by him at the close of each day's sale and pay the same to the said collector; and when goods are so brought into the District to be otherwise disposed of than at auction, and in a place of business temporarily occupied for their sale, then before it shall be lawful to make any sales whatever, the owner of said goods shall notify the board of assessors, who shall assess the entire stock to be sold, at its fair cash value, and the owner thereof shall pay to the collector of the District a tax of 1½ per cent on such assessed value, and shall receive a receipt therefor, which receipt shall be his permit to proceed with the sale of the goods; and any auctioneer or owner of goods who shall violate the provisions of this section, or any part thereof, shall be fined in the police court of said District, on information filed therein, in the name of the District of Columbia, in the manner used for breach of municipal ordinances and laws, not less than $100 and not more than $1,000.

Said assessors shall, between the 1st day of September, 1877, and the 1st day of October, 1877, hold daily sessions for the purpose of equalizing the assessments theretofore made by them, and for the purpose of hearing and determining any and all appeals from the valuations theretofore made by them. Each assessor shall, at the meetings of the assessors as aforesaid, make full and detailed reports of his acts as such assessor. And during said period they shall have power to revise assessments theretofore made by them or any of them, or by their predecessors in office, appointed under the act of March 3, 1875, by either justly increasing or justly diminishing any particular assessment. Upon the assessment so as aforesaid made and finally revised the tax hereinbefore provided for shall be levied, and the collector of taxes shall be in readiness to receive payment of the same on and after the 1st day of November, 1877. Said assessors, before entering upon their duties, shall respectively take or subscribe an oath or affirmation, before any officer authorized to administer oaths or affirmations in said District, to faithfully discharge the duties of their said office; which oaths when taken shall be certified by the persons before whom the same shall have been taken, and shall be filed with the Commissioners of the District. In case the assessors shall fail to complete any of the duties in this act to be by them performed within the time provided therefor the taxation provided by this act shall not by reason thereof be invalid; but such assessors shall proceed with all reasonable diligence to complete such duties, and their acts shall be valid as if performed within the time fixed therefor.

SEC. 13. That the treasurer of the District, upon receiving any moneys, shall forthwith deposit the same in the Treasury of the United States; and said moneys thus deposited shall be drawn from the Treasury of the United States only in such sums and at such times as the same shall be actually required, and only for the expenditures authorized by law, and only upon warrants of the accounting officers of the District, and issued under the direction of the Commissioners of the District, or their successors in office.

SEC. 14. That the twenty-third section of the act of the legislative assembly of the District of Columbia, entitled "An act imposing a license on trades, business, and professions practiced or carried on in the District of Columbia," approved August 23, 1871, clause 20 of the twenty-first section of said act, and all other laws and acts, or parts thereof, inconsistent herewith, be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

SEC. 15. That the corporation of the District of Columbia is continued for all the purposes of this act and other acts for the collection of taxes, for suing and being sued, for causes arising prior to June 20, 1874, and for acquiring and holding real estate for school and municipal purposes.

SEC. 16. That hereafter no two lots or subdivisions of original or other lots in any square of ground in the District of Columbia shall be designated by the same number or by the same letter of the alphabet, and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, or their successors in office, shall cause the numbers and letters designating lots in all the squares of ground in said District to be revised and changed to conform to this requirement; and they shall make such further changes in the existing numbers or letters designating lots in any of the squares in the cities and villages in said District as may, in their opinion, facilitate and simplify the labor of assessing real estate therein.

SEC. 17. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to advance to said Commissioners, between the 1st day of July and the 1st day of November, 1877, such sums as may be from time to time required for the payment of interest on the old funded debt and for the current expenses of the District government, the aggregate sum so advanced not to exceed $400,000; and the Commissioners shall reimburse the Treasury the amount so advanced out of the revenues of the District on or before the expiration of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878.

SEC. 18. That this act shall remain in force as the tax law of the District of Columbia for each subsequent year after June 30, 1878, until repealed.

Approved, March 3, 1877.

Mr. BENTON. I yield to my colleague from Missouri twenty minutes.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I will avail myself of the privilege accorded me at this time to make some remarks upon matters not wholly germane to the bill under consideration, but which have more or less application to some of its provisions.

In 1878, when the organic act was passed—the act that created a kind of business copartnership between the District and the General Government—the District was practically bankrupt, hopelessly involved in a debt of $27,225,000 drawing interest at from 5 to 7.3 per cent per annum. Without expectation or hope of reward or of reciprocal benefit to the people at large, but animated and moved solely by generous impulses, to the exclusion, it would seem, of every consideration that should enter into and govern business transactions, the Government voluntarily assumed the payment of one-half of this vast indebtedness—took the sum of $13,612,500 out of the pockets of the people and presented it as a gift to the District.

Every year since 1878 the sum of $1,213,947.97 has been paid, half by the District and half by the United States, to reduce this debt, and yet there remained on June 30, 1901, an unpaid balance of $15,068,350—more than half of the original debt.

Annual appropriations have been made since 1878 of amounts varying from about $7,500,000 to nearly $10,000,000 to defray the current and ordinary expenses of the District. One-half of the sums thus appropriated has been paid each year out of the funds of the General Government, raised by taxing all the people.

According to the report and recommendations of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, the sum of $11,067,169.50 is required, in addition to current revenues, to make certain improvements in the District which are now in contemplation. A bill making this appropriation is now pending in the Senate. If enacted into law the people of the United States will be taxed to raise one half of this enormous sum of money to be used in making these improvements, which are wholly local in their character and necessarily local in their benefits, while the other half, $5,533,584.25, will be drawn from the public Treasury in the nature of a loan or advancement to the District, to be repaid, if it is ever repaid, in thirty annual payments, with the unusually low rate of 2 per cent interest added. I sincerely hope this bill will be defeated in the Senate and never reach the House.

The District is already deeply in debt, and has been for years, and good business sense and sagacity suggests that the old debt be satisfied before a new debt is created. As a purely business proposition the enormous loan that is now requested and being urged should not be made. To grant it would be to recklessly and wantonly disregard the rights and welfare of the whole people and impose additional burdens upon them for the comparatively few who reside here—a wrong and an outrage which could not be justified or palliated by the local benefits conferred.

If the proposed improvements are essential and demanded, then the District should increase its annual revenues by increasing its assessments, and thus raise a fund with which to pay its half of the necessary cost of these enterprises. They should assess valuable suburban real estate at a reasonable valuation and stop listing it as "agricultural land" of trifling value. They should assess and tax the hundreds of millions of wealth represented in personal property which now entirely escapes taxation. But these highly favored citizens have enjoyed special privileges so long they are likely to become frantic if one dares to suggest that District revenues can be increased by correcting these abuses.

At a meeting of the East Washington Citizens' Association on January 7, 1902, Mr. M. I. Weller is quoted in the Post of this city as follows:

> He explained that much of the property outside of the city limits is taxed at a rate of $1 per $100 as agricultural land, but which is not used for agricultural purposes, and upon which a very low valuation is placed by the assessors; * * * that the Government recently acquired for $75,000 a plat containing 7¼ acres from a tract of 250 acres. The portion bought by the Government was about one-thirtieth of the whole, and the entire property was valued by the assessors at $85,000. In addition to this, the heirs of the estate to which the tract belonged had gone into court to obtain $500,000 for less than half of the property. The actual valuation of the tract was about $1,200,000. The Government, he declared, recently acquired a piece of property beyond the city limits for which $25,000 was paid. The speaker looked up the valuation on the assessment books and found it to be $1,400.

The Post of January 10, 1902, contains a communication on the subject of taxation from Senator McMILLAN, chairman of the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia, addressed to the District Commissioners. In view of his thorough familiarity with the subject, his utterances will be accepted as conclusive of the facts stated. In the letter quoted the distinguished gentleman said:

> Again, suburban real estate should be assessed at its true value, and the remarkable discrepancies now existing between sale prices and official valuations should be remedied. Property not actually used for purely agricultural purposes should not be assessed as such. It is an absurdity to assess property within the fire limits as agricultural lands.

Senator GALLINGER, in a communication published in the Times February 9, 1902, said:

> I have never been able to discover why valuable real estate lying outside of the compact part of the city should be taxed as farm lands. For the most part such property is owned by men of wealth, who are holding it with the expectation that it will be subdivided and sold for building purposes. A fair valuation should be placed on all such property and taxes assessed accordingly.

I shall only present these three witnesses, one a resident citizen of the District and the others gentlemen of national renown, whose official positions enable them to speak with accuracy in reference to these matters.

I am warranted in asserting that abundance of evidence could be found to establish beyond the cavil of a doubt—to an absolute demonstration—that the capitalists, real-estate agents, and speculators in this city have, in effect, entered into a conspiracy to keep at the minimum the valuation of all unoccupied property, and thus avoid the payment of reasonable and just taxes thereon. Who denies it? Who can deny it?

Mr. McDERMOTT. If the gentleman will yield to me, I will suggest that the differences that the gentleman has discovered are in most instances to be credited to the vagaries of the assessors, as no two men are able to arrive at the same conclusion as to the value of a piece of property. Property in this city is assessed by valuing the land and superstructure separately. I have in mind a piece of property that is valued at $104,000. It has been in use for thirteen years, and could be reproduced to-day for less than $100,000, and yet it is assessed at $100,000. I have in mind another instance, where the property is over ten years old, and the superstructure is assessed at 100 per cent of the value. Take its value at the cost of reproduction, and it is listed at 300 per cent on the market value. The vagaries of the assessor can be found in every city, and not only in the city of Washington.

Mr. RUCKER. Granting the statements made by the gentleman from New Jersey to be true, they do not answer this question: Why is it that rich men owning real property in this city give it in and cause it to be assessed as agricultural lands, and have it taxed at $1 on the hundred, while other real estate is taxed at the rate of $1.50 on the hundred dollars of valuation?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I will ask the gentleman if it has not been repeatedly said upon the floor of this House, by many members, and particularly by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], that Congress should never again submit to a jury in the District of Columbia the question of the value of land in condemnation proceedings?

Mr. RUCKER. I do not know whether the gentleman from Illinois has so stated or not, but such a position would be in line, I think, with what I have heard him say.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. We have refused to submit the matter to juries.

Mr. RUCKER. I think it is eminently proper that such course should be taken in every case.

One would think the haughty citizen of this town would hang his head in shame and humiliation at the disclosure of the fact that valuable property "within the fire limits" of our nation's capital is assessed as agricultural lands, while the owners and those who are particeps criminis with them with painful regularity are bewailing the shortage of revenues and zealously petitioning Congress for relief.

As I understand the sentiment of Congress, there is no reluctance and never has been about taking money from the national Treasury by appropriate legislation to the full one-half of any amount ascertained to be necessary to pay current and ordinary expenses of the District. Not only is this true, but Congress has shown a perfect willingness to pay half of any sum within reasonable limitations that may be required to continue improvements of a permanent character here until the dreams of the most optimistic citizen shall have been realized and every tongue shall unite in proclaiming Washington the most beautiful city in the world.

But if they would enjoy the realization of their hopes and the consummation of their desires the citizens of this town must cease tax-dodging and, figuratively speaking, must abandon their efforts to forcibly break into the Treasury, and begin to practice the commendable habit of paying taxes, justly and equitably assessed, like the honest yeomanry of the country, who are taxed to provide many comforts and luxuries for the people here which they themselves do not enjoy.

Unless this reform occurs, so long as I have the honor to represent, in part, the imperial State of Missouri—which, I state for information, is the grandest Commonwealth in the proud galaxy of States composing this Union—I shall oppose, unsuccessfully, perhaps, but nevertheless persistently and vigorously, the appropriation of money wrung from the already oppressed taxpayers of the States for making or extending these improvements.

The introduction recently of a bill which authorizes and provides for the assessment and taxation of personal property in the District has aroused great consternation and caused considerable anxiety in certain circles. Many prominent citizens are quoted as being unalterably opposed to this legislation. They concede the urgent necessity for more money with which to execute their plans for beautifying Washington, but they greatly prefer obtaining it from the Government in the nature of a loan, with the hope, no doubt, that Congress will ultimately cancel the debt.

Numerous meetings of the "boards" and "associations" of this city have been held, and, if the press has correctly reported the proceedings, some remarkable declarations have been made by gentlemen who addressed these meetings. If the accusations made are false the accusers ought to be prosecuted for wholesale slander; if they are true there is no escape from the conclusion that a portion of the citizens of this city, who perhaps enjoy excellent reputations, ought to be in jail. I neither affirm nor deny these charges. I shall present some of them as they are recited in the newspapers, and content myself to let Congress and the public pass in judgment on them.

The Washington Post of January 11, 1902, quotes Mr. T. E. Roessle, proprietor of the Arlington Hotel, as follows:

So far as a personal tax is concerned, I want to say that its principle is entirely wrong, just as is the principle of the income tax. Neither of these laws should be permitted anywhere, and least of all in Washington. It has been my observation that they make liars out of everybody.

In justice to this gentleman I desire to emphasize the fact that the statement contained in his closing sentence is alleged to be founded upon "observation."

In the same issue of the Post, Mr. Charles J. Bell, president of the American Security and Trust Company, is reported as follows:

I am heartily opposed to a personal tax law for the reason that it is absolutely impossible to execute it.

While he does not so declare, it may be assumed that this gentleman has had some opportunity for "observation," too.

The same paper says:

The president of the National Metropolitan Bank is another financier who is opposed to Senator MCMILLAN'S plan of a general increase in taxes.

I have no doubt that this gentleman's position is correctly stated. The editor could have gone further, perhaps, without seriously endangering his reputation for truth and veracity, and told us that all the "financiers" of Washington are opposed to a tax on personal property.

The Post of February 8, 1902, says:

Prof. Louis L. Hopper stated that he was not in favor of a tax upon personal property, and would exert all of his powers to prevent it. He declared that such a tax would be a tax on honesty.

Mr. BURKETT. Will the gentleman allow me an interruption?

Mr. RUCKER. Yes.

Mr. BURKETT. The gentleman has made a statement that lands in the District of Columbia or in the city of Washington were taxed as agricultural lands.

Mr. RUCKER. The gentleman misunderstood me. I made no such statement. I quoted one of the distinguished Senators who made that statement.

Mr. BURKETT. I was about to inquire where the land was situated.

Mr. RUCKER. I do not know where it is. I am quoting a Senator whose letter was published.

Mr. BURKETT. The gentleman will understand that even the law of 1877 provided that land outside of Washington should be taxed as agricultural land where it was used solely for that purpose.

Mr. RUCKER. But the land I speak of evidently is not used for agricultural purposes.

Mr. BURKETT. The gentleman might have spoken of it as being valued the same as agricultural land, and it may have been outside of the city.

Mr. RUCKER. If it is not agricultural land, it ought not to be taxed as agricultural land; and whether or not it is agricultural land depends upon the use that is made of it. The distinguished Senator whom I quoted says that this land is held by rich men with the expectation that it will be subdivided into lots.

Mr. CREAMER. If the gentleman will allow me, he has mentioned the name of a citizen of this city——

Mr. RUCKER. I merely quoted from a newspaper.

Mr. CREAMER. The gentleman has mentioned the name of Mr. Theodore Roessle. I do not reside at this hotel, but I have known the gentleman for years. The gentleman has quoted him as evidence of those to whom he refers as tax dodgers. I want to ask the gentleman if he does not think that the personal tax should be put on the owner of the hotel and not on Mr. Roessle, who pays the rent? Mr. Roessle is not quoted as a poor man. I am taking this as an instance to throw a little light on the subject. He is not one of the drones of society. He is up every morning at daybreak and has been for the last forty years.

Mr. RUCKER. That is true of all the hotel people in Washington. [Laughter.]

Mr. CREAMER. I want to ask the gentleman whether the tax should be placed on Mr. Roessle or the owner.

Mr. RUCKER. If I understand the gentleman's question the answer is easy. The tax most certainly should be levied upon what a man has and not upon what he has not. It should be assessed against the owner of the property.

Mr. CREAMER. Then the gentleman should quote the owner of the hotel.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I have tried to do justice to the citizens of this magnificent city. I make no accusation against them; I simply reproduce statements made by them, as published in the papers. The utterances which I have quoted give us warning that not only the "bankers" and the "financiers," but the "professors," too, at the behest of the wealth of this city, have joined the crusade and are going to bombard the representatives of the American people, under the very Dome of our National Capitol, and subject us to a fire of persuasion and sentiment which may cause strong men to surrender. Since the "professors" have joined the adversary it might be well for each of us to fervently pray:

Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget, lest we forget.

[Laughter and applause.]

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Chairman, the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee has suggested that the committee rise, and that the gentleman from Missouri finish his remarks in the morning.

Mr. RUCKER. I will consent to that, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MCCLEARY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. PAYNE] having taken the chair, Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 14019, the District of Columbia appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, May 1, 1902.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. CULLOM, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Journal will stand approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. HARRIS presented a petition of Local Division No. 336, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, of Osawatomie, Kans., praying for the passage of the so-called Hoar anti-injunction bill to limit the meaning of the word "conspiracy" and the use of "restraining orders and injunctions" in certain cases, and remonstrating against the passage of any substitute therefor; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. QUARLES presented a petition of the Wisconsin Conference of the Evangelical Association, of Milwaukee, Wis., praying for the enactment of legislation authorizing the extension and improvement of the "post exchange;" which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented petitions of Lodge No. 191, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, and of Local Division No. 405, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, of Milwaukee, in the State of Wisconsin, praying for the passage of the so-called Hoar anti-injunction bill to limit the meaning of the word "conspiracy" and the use of "restraining orders and injunctions" in certain cases, and remonstrating against the passage of any substitute therefor; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. QUARLES. I call especial attention to a petition which I present on behalf of the Sons of the American Revolution, who are now in session in this city. It is their earnest recommendation that the population schedules of preceding censuses shall be preserved. They set forth that in their judgment these schedules will eventually become very valuable for many purposes. In a pending measure it is proposed that they shall be sold for waste paper. In view of the source from which the petition emanates, I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, which has charge of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wisconsin that the petition be printed in the RECORD? The Chair hears none.

Mr. CULLOM. I will state that the Senate is now considering the bill that affects the question involved in the petition, so I think it might be printed and laid on the table rather than referred to the committee. The bill is now before the Senate and it will be under consideration from day to day until it is disposed of.

Mr. PERKINS. I will state also, for the Senator's information, that the junior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] yesterday offered an amendment on the same line the petition proposes.

Mr. QUARLES. I am very glad to hear it.

The petition was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas in the making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government which is now on its passage in the Senate a provision has been incorporated looking to the destruction of the whole or a part of the census schedules, which contain the names of the inhabitants of this country at each decennial period since the year 1790; and

Whereas there is danger that these records of inestimable value may be destroyed for want of appreciation of their importance unless expression is given to public opinion upon the subject by parties interested in their preservation; and

Whereas the society of the Sons of the American Revolution, whose fundamental principle is reverence for the patriotic deeds of our sires and pride in their achievements, is the only body now in session which can enter a timely, and, it is to be hoped, an effective protest against the proposed legislation; therefore,

Resolved, That we place upon record our sense of the inexpediency and impolicy of any disposition of the records in question other than their permanent preservation at the national capital, either in the permanent Census Office or elsewhere. They are a treasure-house of original information as to the identity of individuals and families, from the point of view of the genealogist, and not infrequently an aid to the judicial settlement of controversies as to the property rights by inheritance. They shed light which can be procured from no other source upon the social, political, and economic relations of the people of the United States during the past hundred years. Their value to the antiquarian and to students of history will continually increase in proportion to their age. The people have paid many millions of dollars for them, and if destroyed they can not be replaced; if scattered they can never be reassembled. Science and sentiment unite in the demand that this contemplated outrage on both shall not be consummated, and in their name we appeal to the patriots of Congress to prevent its consummation.

Resolved, That a copy of this action by this society be furnished to the chairman of the Senate Committee on Appropriations, Senator ALLISON, of Iowa, and Senator QUARLES, chairman of Census Committee, with a respectful request that he will call the attention of his colleagues in the Senate to our views and this expression of them.

WALTER S. LOGAN,
President-General.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, I know the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] desires to submit some observations upon this matter.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President——

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The Senator from North Dakota, I understand, desires to address the Senate.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, I listened with a great deal of interest yesterday and the day before to the discussion of this measure. The debate took a very wide range, altogether too wide, I think, because some of the Senators undertook to criticise the action of the Interior Department in disposing of the lands in Oklahoma and others seemed to assume that quite all of the people who go into the Western country in search of homes are speculators and men of bad character.

I was particularly interested in what the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. QUARLES] had to say on this latter subject. It is true, doubtless, that the great army of home seekers who have gone out on the Western plains have, from time to time, been followed by a class of people who might be denominated as speculators. The fact is that no army ever moves in any enterprise that is without its camp followers. But as to the intimation that most of these people, or any considerable number of them, are speculators, I desire here and now to make my protest.

I do not know how it was in the State of Wisconsin or in the State of Michigan or any other State where the principal interest is pine lands. I do not know if the speculator dominated the disposition of the pine lands in Wisconsin. Perhaps I ought not to refer to the methods under which those pine lands were disposed of or compare the class of men who go into the country west of the Mississippi River to seek homes upon the prairies with the class of men who have remained in the State of Wisconsin and other pine-land States and taken possession of the pine lands. But I imagine that if an investigation was had it would develop that there were quite as many speculators in the pineries as there are to be found upon the prairies of the West.

Now, a word with respect to the methods under which these Indian lands are disposed of. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] yesterday criticised the methods employed by the Interior Department in disposing of the lands in Oklahoma and found fault with the plan known as the lottery plan.

Mr. President, I do not favor lotteries as a general thing. Indeed, while I was a member of the House of Representatives I introduced and had passed in that body what is known as the anti-lottery bill. That bill became a law, and under that law the Louisiana lottery has practically gone out of business. So that I am not, generally speaking, in favor of lotteries. But I submit that under the circumstances, with the great pressure that exists on the part of the masses of the people who are seeking for homes wherever there is vacant land, it was utterly impossible for the Interior Department to dispose of the lands in Oklahoma in any other way than by the method which was adopted; in other words, by the lottery plan.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I yield.

Mr. TILLMAN. The point I tried to make was not so much against the lottery as against the condition which resulted from the lottery, and that was that the speculators or persons who really had no intention or purpose of settling on the lands and making homes rushed in to get advantage of the benefaction or largess of the Government in opening the land to settlement by homesteaders. If the Senator can devise any scheme by which no one but bona fide home seekers, men who have no homes and want to get homes, will be alone allowed to receive the benefits and to make application for homesteads, I can see that such a scheme, if it can be devised, would largely reduce the danger of any future lottery.

The condition which I brought up here was that we ought not to subject ourselves to the charge of injustice to the taxpayers by buying land for which we pay two, three, five, or ten dollars an acre, whatever amount it may cost, and then turn around and give it to a lot of people who do not need it and who are better off than some of us, who rush in and seize upon the opportunity to make a homestead entry. If they draw a prize, they will go and locate, and then they will hire somebody to go in and do whatever is necessary to preserve their homestead rights, and as soon as they get a chance they turn in and sell their claim and get the profit and go about their business, so that the taxpayers are fleeced and the home seekers are robbed of the opportunity to obtain homes. That is the idea which, if the Senator will elucidate, will benefit us a great deal more, I think, than to discuss the question of lotteries.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, I hope to reach that phase of the case before I have concluded, but I desire to say a further word with respect to the lottery system. I think it would have been utterly impossible for the Secretary of the Interior to have disposed of the lands in Oklahoma and on other reservations in any other method than by the lottery method, because there were probably 50 people on the ground for every 160 acres of land to be disposed of in that conntry. Now, I ask the Senator from South Carolina and other Senators, How are you going to select from that number of people the particular individual who shall have the right to take and occupy 160 acres, if not by the lottery system?

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator will permit me, I can see the difficulty of the Government officials undertaking to differentiate or to pick out from among the applicants for homesteads those who are bona fide and those who are not, but if the land has a price fixed does it not at once eliminate to a great degree the speculative applicants? Will any gambler be there seeking a homestead if he has got to pay some money? Is it not the gambler who expects to get something for nothing, who is on hand in these large numbers seeking to elbow away and to shove aside the actual bona fide applicant for a homestead, who is poor and wants to get some mother earth under his feet and get a title to it?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Well, Mr. President, I do not believe——

Mr. TILLMAN. Will not putting a price on the land have a tendency to eliminate the speculator?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I think not. Wherever the land is valuable there is going to be a very large number of people who are ready to buy it. Then comes the question as to who shall be entitled to make the purchase. Suppose again, that if there are fifty men on the ground——

Mr. TILLMAN rose.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I do not want to yield just now. We will suppose that if there are fifty men on the ground to each 160 acres of land, and all of them will have to pay $2.50 or $3.50 or $5 an acre for the land, to which individual will you give the right to enter upon that land and make payment if not by the lottery system?

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator allow me now?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. In competition for any given land the easiest way and the only sure way to settle it is to put it up to the highest bidder, and if instead of a lottery to determine who shall by chance have the privilege of getting a homestead, if these lands are valuable, you simply say, "Well, here, lot No. 7 is for sale. Bid up for it." If John Smith wants it at $2 and nobody else wants to give any more, let John Smith have it; and so on through the line. You can eliminate the injustice which now obtains by the lottery system by letting the land bring what it is worth and letting the money come back to the United States which has bought it or have bought it. I do not know how to get that noun down to a singular verb, but I believe the courts have decided that the United States are to be considered as is, or in the singular.

We can determine that question very readily and easily and without any friction by simply saying that the lands on a given reservation, having been purchased by the United States and there being more applicants than there are homestead entries, we will, instead of having a fixed rate for all of it, put up each lot separately and "let the longest pole get the persimmon."

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I am afraid that under that system the Senator from South Carolina and myself would fare very poorly as against the class of gentlemen who have more money than we have. I think they would outbid us and we would come away without having procured any land, especially in the case of Oklahoma, where I understand the lands are to-day worth from $30 to $50 per acre.

I call the attention of the Senator from South Carolina to the further fact that right here in this body we decide who shall have seats, sometimes, by the lottery system.

Mr. TILLMAN. I have never known it to be done since I have been here.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. We are obliged to do it.

Mr. TILLMAN. I have never known it since I have been here.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. It has taken place.

Mr. SPOONER. That is because it has not been done since the Senator came here.

Mr. TILLMAN. Was it ever done?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes.

Mr. TILLMAN. When?

Mr. SPOONER. When two Senators——

Mr. TILLMAN. It is done in the House, but this body being a continuing body, without ever dying, and there always being old Senators here who have gotten the best seats, the new ones have to take what is left. It is "first come first served."

Mr. HANSBROUGH. When the State of North Dakota came into the Union, and two Senators were sent here, there was a question who should occupy the two years' term and who should fill the four years' term.

Mr. TILLMAN. That is the term and not the seat.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. And that was decided by lot.

Mr. TILLMAN. I say, Mr. President, if I may be permitted——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I shall be obliged to do so.

Mr. TILLMAN. That was a question of the tenure of the two Senators elected at the same time, as to which should have the short and which should have the long term. I thought the Senator was referring to our chairs here.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I do not care to prolong the discussion on the lottery aspect of this case, and I will now refer to the bill under consideration.

I think that each of these cases should be allowed to stand upon its own merit. In the case of the Rosebud Reservation I understand that the lands perhaps are not worth $2.50 an acre, the price specified in the bill, and if this bill is passed with that provision in it there is grave doubt whether the lands would be in such demand by settlers as to cause them to be taken by those who are seeking homes in the Western country at the present time.

If there is any such doubt, Mr. President; if there is a probability that there would not be sufficient demand for these lands to cause their occupation by settlers for the purpose of cultivating them and making farms of them, and with the additional purpose of putting white people among the Indians, with a view to their further civilization, then I believe it would be well to eliminate the provision under which it is proposed that $2.50 an acre shall be charged, and allow them to be taken under the free-homestead clause.

I am inclined to think that the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] on yesterday should be adopted, eliminating the commutation clause of the homestead act so as to require the settler who goes upon the land to live there five years, and thus eliminating the possibility, to a great extent anyway, of speculation. Of course, after a settler has lived there five years and has acquired title you can not prevent him from selling the land to some man who may want to buy a whole township, butif you have required him to live there five years, the Government has done its uttermost to prevent speculation. For that reason I think a provision should go into the bill eliminating the commutation clause of the homestead law.

I think that each one of these cases should stand upon its own merits, because in the different reservations there are no two cases alike. The land in the Rosebud Reservation is not of a quality which attracts settlers, whereas in my own State, in the Devils Lake Reservation, where we are proposing to throw open about 104,000 acres of land, the lands are worth to-day at least $15 per acre. I think it is no more than fair that the settler upon those lands should pay the price that the Government pays the Indians, and for that reason I yielded to the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut when that bill was up for consideration and allowed the free-homestead clause to be stricken from the bill, although the bill had been drawn by the Interior Department and the free-homestead clause inserted.

To-day, Mr. President, there are at least 1,000 people in the vicinity of that reservation anxiously awaiting the passage of the bill so that they may go upon those lands. When the time comes for them to go upon the lands it will be found that there is room for about 650 entrymen, and there are fully a thousand people on the ground now waiting to take advantage of the opportunity of securing a home there. So it would be absolutely necessary, if I may be allowed again to refer to the lottery phase of this case, for the Secretary of the Interior to provide some method whereby these people may decide by lot as to who shall take advantage of the opportunity.

Mr. President, there was a time in the history of this Government, when the homestead law was enacted, when the preemption law was enacted, and when the timber-culture law was enacted, when the Government of the United States was looking in every direction for settlers with whom to populate the public domain of the country. But that time has gone by. At the present moment the settler is soliciting the Government to secure a home for him. The arable public domain of this country is about exhausted. There is but very little of it left at the present time.

It was for that reason that the Senators and Representatives from the arid and semiarid States at the beginning of the present session of Congress got together and formulated the bill known as the irrigation bill, which passed this body some months ago unanimously and which now reposes in the sacred keeping of the leaders of the other branch of Congress. The purpose of the framers of that bill was to provide homes for the home seekers of the United States.

My attention was called recently to a most peculiar situation. Owing to the scarcity of lands in the Western States at the present time thousands of people are now going into Manitoba and the Saskatchewan country, in Canada, to secure homes—leaving the United States and going to a foreign country to secure lands. Could there be any better argument in favor of an irrigation bill, so that we might provide homes for these people and keep them here, keeping our own citizens in the United States?

A prominent official of one of the leading railroads of the country told me the other day that 7,000 people from the State of Iowa had gone to Manitoba in the past sixty days to find homes, which they could not find on this side of the line. I would be surprised if anyone should tell me that any man from the State of Iowa should stand in the way of the passage of the irrigation bill, so that the people who are now going from the State of Iowa to Manitoba and elsewhere in Canada might remain here as citizens of the United States.

So, Mr. President, without prolonging this debate, I want to say in a word that I think in the case of these Rosebud lands, if the Senators from South Dakota think the lands could not be readily sold for $2.50 an acre, perhaps an amendment might be put into the bill providing that they shall be sold for $1.25 an acre. If the Senators from South Dakota think that settlers would not be attracted by fixing the price at $1.25, then I think the land should be purchased and thrown open and settlers should be allowed to go in and live there five years, without paying anything whatever for the land.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I was about through, Mr. President, but I yield.

Mr. TILLMAN. I would ask the Senator, if he supposes there is any doubt about the bona fide settlers being willing to buy these lands at the upset price, what need is there to open up this reservation? Why should we be paying this million dollars, or whatever the amount is that we are going to pay to the Rosebud Indians to get land that nobody wants? Why should we pass a bill here at all? Why not let the Indians alone in the peaceful enjoyment of their reservation, and wait until the demand for homes or for more land by the Caucasians makes it desirable to open the reservation?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Right on that point, Mr. President, I desire to say that the purpose of throwing open the Indian reservations and allowing white settlers to come in and take the lands is that the Indians may have the opportunity of mixing with the white people and learning something of our methods. I think their civilization will be thereby greatly hastened. That is the object of opening the reservation.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator does not, of course, expect me to believe that, though he says it undoubtedly in good faith.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. Any man who has been in the West and who has run up against this Indian problem and the condition of those Indians, with their gradual pauperization and the absorption of their lands by the whites, knows that love of the Indian is about the smallest quality or quantity in the minds of men in the West.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. The Senator from South Carolina is constantly looking for fraud somewhere. He has always got the tail of his eye on some one whom he regards as a suspicious character, and if we come in here with any measure, no matter what the measure may be, the Senator is going to pick flaws in it.

Mr. TILLMAN. I picked no flaws in the irrigation bill; on the contrary, I got up here and advocated the passage of the irrigation bill.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. That is true.

Mr. TILLMAN. Then the Senator ought to apologize for the accusation he has just made.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I apologize to the Senator so far as the irrigation bill is concerned.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] desires to be heard on this matter. I have sent for him, and I hope he will soon be here.

Mr. TELLER. Whilst waiting for the Senator from Missouri, I want to call attention to the amendment I proposed yesterday, which will be found by looking at page 6, beginning in line 25, striking out the words "except that homestead settlers who commute their entries under section 2301, Revised Statutes, shall pay for the land entered the price fixed therein." The price fixed is $2.50. I propose to strike that out; and, not going any further, that would undoubtedly leave the settlers entitled to enter their homesteads at a dollar and a quarter an acre.

What I desire to accomplish by this amendment is not to allow the homesteaders on this land to commute it. I want to avoid what the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. QUARLES] and some other Senators seem to be disturbed about. I want to avoid speculators going in there and getting the land, and I think the amendment I have offered will accomplish that purpose, because no speculator will go in if he has got to live on the land for five years; but it will enable the poorer class of people to go in and make homesteads on this land.

Mr. President, I want to say a word or two about the complaint which has been made here that we are buying land from the Indians, paying money out of the Treasury to the Indians for the land, and then giving the land to settlers. The policy of the Government of the United States from its very organization has been that the Government was the trustee of the land for the benefit of the people; and when there did not appear to be in this country any speculative disposition the Government allowed, under the preemption act of 1842, entries under some limitations. Before that there had been very little limitation. The settlers had been privileged to go upon the public land, pay a dollar and a quarter an acre for the land, and obtain title to any quantity they saw fit.

After 1842, and perhaps before that time, the practice was this: The settler could go upon land, live upon it about two years and a half, and then pay for it; or if he had enough ready money he could find plenty of land that had been offered for sale. The Government having offered the land for sale and not finding a bidder, it was returned and then was opened to preemption, as we called it, without any occupation of it. The settler could go and buy 160 acres of land, or any other number of acres of land which he had the money to pay for, at $1.25 an acre. There was not under that system, which was an open system, any considerable aggregation of public land in the hands of individuals.

I have seen thousands and tens of thousands of acres of good land that could be bought for $1.25 an acre stand in the market year after year with nobody offering to purchase it. That was true in all the States of the West. That land is worth now a great deal of money, or at least some of it is. Of late years, within the last fifteen or twenty years, or probably twenty-five years, there has been a good deal of a disposition on the part of capitalists to buy lands in large quantities.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I understand that originally the law was that a person could go and locate land anywhere and pay $1.25 an acre for it.

Mr. TELLER. Yes.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. And he could also locate land under military bounty land warrants. But there came a time—and I should like the Senator to explain how it was—when large tracts of land were obtained for small sums per acre. I remember in 1863, when I was out in Omaha, I was told that a man who had been a Senator of the United States had acquired under the land laws, in some way or other, several thousand acres of land which had not cost him more than 10 cents an acre.

Mr. TELLER. Where had he bought the land?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. In Nebraska, which was then a Territory. There had been some law in existence under which he had been able to get that land at a low price.

Mr. TELLER. I think that is a mistake as to Nebraska; but this has been the rule for many years: After public land had been offered in the market a certain length of time, the price was changed from a dollar and a quarter an acre to something less, and so on down until the price had got as low us 12½ cents an acre.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Where there was no demand for the land, and it was open for entry and not taken, was it not put up at auction and sold?

Mr. TELLER. In the first place the land was put up and offered at $1.25 an acre to the amount of many thousands of acres. After the land was put up no one would go there, because a man could go the next day and take it at $1.25 an acre, just what he would have to bid, and after the land had been returned unsold, then it was open to any person who wanted it in any quantity. The longer settlers stayed off the land the lower the price went, until sometimes good land was sold in the State of Missouri for 12½ cents an acre. That was under what was called the graduated land act.

There was another method by which land could be acquired, and that was by military bounty land warrants, representing $1.25 an acre in locating lands, which sold in the West sometimes as low as 25 cents an acre. Yet, with all these opportunities, there was no considerable amount of land taken except by actual settlers.

In 1861 the Government of the United States changed its policy by the adoption of the homestead law, and allowed public land to be taken without any payment whatever, provided the settler would go upon the land and stay there for five years. Under that law there has been an immense quantity of land taken, thousands and tens of thousands of acres, and thousands and tens of thousands of homes have been made all over the West. Of course that to some extent reduced the income of the Government. These homesteaders, after they had lived on the land for the given period of time, could go and pay $1.25 an acre and get a good title. A great many homesteaders, after they had lived the required time on the land, so that they could do so, went and paid $1.25 an acre for the sake of having an absolute title and knowing that the property was their own. I think of all the things of which the Republican party can boast the most beneficial act of civil policy they have ever performed was when they freely donated to the people the public lands. The result was an increased settlement in the West and Northwest.

Mr. President, I have seen something of the settlement of the West in at least four or five States. I have been going back and forth through them for the last thirty-odd years—now pretty nearly forty years—and I want to say to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], who seems to think that these people ought to pay $2.50 an acre for this land, that any man who goes upon one of those quarter-sections of land and makes a home there is entitled to the land without paying a single cent for it, and the Government of the United States ought to be delighted to have him do so. There is not an acre of public land left to the United States Government, nor is there an acre inside of any Indian reservation, that the Government ought not to be glad to buy of the Indians and see some settler go on it.

Senators who live in the Atlantic States, and who were born so late in the history of this country that they have not seen that new country developed, do not know anything about what it costs to settle up a country; they do not know what it meant for a man to pioneer in the Dakotas, or in Iowa, or in Nebraska, or in Kansas, or in Colorada, or in Montana, or in any of those Western States. It is true, Mr. President, now that the lands which early settlers got for nothing may be worth $50 or a $100 an acre, but they have made them so. But for their presence those lands would not be worth any more than they were fifty years ago.

For myself, I have not any fear of the Government of the United States being robbed by taking in all the reservations at any price that we are likely to pay for them, and shearing them of all the land which is not needed and giving it to the settlers.

Mr. President, we have some new possessions now. We have ten or twelve million people under our control, whom we declare to be under our protection, who have had no opportunity of receiving the benefit of free homes from the Government. There are supposed to be 500,000 acres of land now owned by a religious order in the Philippines called the friars. I find in a bill pending here a proposition that we shall condemn that land, make it public land, and sell it to the people. I do not know how we are going to condemn it; but, leaving that question out of view, if we condemn it we have got to pay for it, and we probably shall pay twice what that land is really worth—twice what the Government ought to pay. My own judgment is that it would be well for us to pay almost any price that is demanded of us rather than not get the land.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. What is that?

Mr. TELLER. I am referring to what are called the friars' lands in the Philippines. That subject, of course, is not touched in this bill, but I was referring to the principle of this bill, which I think ought to be applied to those lands. What we shall pay for those lands I do not know, but I should think, from the information I have, that we are likely to pay twice the amount the land is worth. I would very much prefer to see the Government buy it for twice what it is worth than not buy it at all. When the Government buys the land at twice what it is worth, I do not want to see it sold to the people who are going to live on it at the price we buy it for.

On the contrary, Mr. President, I do not want to see it sold to them at all. Many of the occupants of this land are men who have lived upon it during all their lifetime and the lifetime of their parents before them. I believe it would be good policy for the Government of the United States to buy that four or five hundred thousand acres of land, divide it into holdings not to exceed 40 acres, and then give it to the people who are living on it. I think we could never invest a few million dollars with half the benefit and profit to us that that would be. I believe it would go far to compose the difficulties which exist there, and that it might create a friendship for the Government which can not be secured by all the armies that may march over that country with all the pomp of war. As it has been the policy of the Government for a good many years to make the land free, or so free that every man, no matter how poor he may be, can get a home upon it, I hope that principle will be applied when we succeed in securing that land. I have simply taken advantage of the pendency of this bill to say this because I have felt like saying it for some time.

Mr. President, I do not know how much land is involved in this bill, but the more land there is involved in it, the more anxious I am that the land shall be made free—the more anxious I am that the people who go upon it shall not be asked to pay a single dollar to the Government of the United States for the title they can get by living on it. I do not believe that the United States ever in its history invested any money that has been so valuable to it and has returned such great rewards as the money invested in these and other lands, and the money that they might have collected, but did not collect, out of settlers in the West and Northwest.

My friend from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], who sits near me, says that he does not want to see the taxpayers burdened by the passage of this bill. Mr. President, I have myself some little interest in the taxpayers, but I lose some of that interest in trifling things of that character from a financial point of view when I see the Government of the United States spending two or three hundred million dollars a year—$200,000,000, at least—on the Army and the Navy, and doing so without embarrassment, when we have a great overflowing Treasury, with $180,000,000 at the command of the financial department of the Government and $150,000,000 more which is locked up in the banks of the country and might, so far as the Government is concerned, as well be in the sea, and that money being kept there for the supposed purpose of the redemption of some obligations of the Government, never to be used. The Government of the United States can not plead poverty; it can not plead distress, with all these great expenditures. I think I shall be safe in saying that there is not any country in the world where the people feel so little the burdens of taxation of a national character as in this country.

I hope, Mr. President, that we shall economize; but I hope that we shall not commence economizing with the settlers. I know that $400 may not appear to be very much to members of this body; but $400 is a great deal of money to a settler. It is more money than a great many farmers in the West ever had together at one time; and there are thousands and tens of thousands of men who have good homes and who have valuable holdings who never could have had them because they never could have raised money enough to buy them if the Government had not said, "That is free land and you may go and take it."

I do not see how anybody, when he looks over the growth of the Northwest and the character of its population, which compares most favorably with any population on the face of the earth, can think we have made a mistake in giving to these people free lands, and I can not see why anybody should be disturbed now that we are going to remit to the settler the payment of $400 if he goes upon a quarter section of land and makes his home there for five years, as he must do under the terms of my amendment if it be adopted. As suggested to me, the Government is paying less than 25 cents an acre for this land when it buys it from the Indians.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. What is that?

Mr. COCKRELL. The Government pays $2.50 per acre.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Certainly; the Government pays $2.50 an acre for the land.

Mr. TELLER. The statement I made was based on a suggestion made to me by a Senator sitting near me.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. More than 4,600,000 acres.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Four hundred and sixteen thousand acres, I believe.

Mr. TELLER. I have not looked into the details to ascertain as to that.

Mr. GAMBLE. The number of acres purchased is 416,000.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I thought it was 4,600,000.

Mr. GAMBLE. No; 416,000 acres.

Mr. TELLER. Suppose it is. The property belongs to the people of the United States; they are entitled to it, and they are entitled to have it in such a way as will do the most good to all of them. Of course there are tens of thousands of people who can not go and take homesteads, but they will be benefited by every homestead that is taken. There is not a man, woman, or child in the United States who is not benefited when homesteads on those 416,000 acres are occupied by intelligent American citizens and farmers.

Senators who have lived in the West have seen communities built up there; they know what the settlers have had to do, taking the raw, uncultivated earth, with not a building of any kind in existence, but every building having to be erected, every road and every bridge to be constructed and to be paid for out of the hard earnings of that class of settlers. Mr. President, the very development of the country comes out of those people; and when you go over that country you see fine homes, fine farms, and fine roads, all of which have been built by the toil and the labor of the settlers; and inasmuch as a settled country is better than a desert, so it is better that we should let the people go there and occupy the land, and we ought to let them go upon terms that will cover the country with population as speedily as possible.

I do not know whether this land is distributed amongst the Indians or not, but I judge it is from a remark made by one of the Senators who spoke yesterday. If, however, it is not distributed around amongst them, it is the fact that the Government in giving to these Indians their allotments withholds the lands from the operation of the tax laws of the States. Within the last three years in the State of Colorado the Government has allotted lands to a large number of Indians, throwing open a portion of a reservation to settlement, which the people have taken. This land is to be reserved from the operation of the tax laws, according to my recollection of the treaty, for twenty-five years, during which time they will pay no taxes whatever upon personal property or upon the lands. That means an additional tax and an additional burden upon every settler who is upon those lands.

The intervening sections have been taken up, and a quantity of land on one side has been taken. They are all in the same municipal community or county, and the Indian who has thousands and thousands of acres contributes nothing in any shape or form to the development of the country. What he fails to contribute, or what he would have to contribute if he were a white man living on that land, must be contributed by the white man who lives on the other land.

When all these things are taken into consideration, there is absolute justification for giving these lands to the people without compensation. Nay, more than that, Mr. President, it is an absolute injustice to demand that they shall pay any price whatever for that land; it is contradictory to the policy we have been pursuing, which is to open the public lands to the settlement of an independent farming people just as rapidly as possible.

I do hope that this bill will become a law with that provision left out of it, and that settlers may be allowed to take the land, and not buy it, under the homestead law, with the exception that they shall not commute, but shall live on the land for five years.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, there is one phase of this matter to which I will briefly refer before we come to any vote, and that is to direct the attention of Senators to the fact that we have fixed charges on the Treasury amounting to some $1,800,000, or something like that, for the land-grant colleges. Under various acts of Congress the several States and Territories have had endowed, out of the fund received from the sale of public lands, experimental stations and schools of agriculture. I want to direct attention to the fact that if we continue to give away the arable land, and if we shall have the act which was passed by this body become a law by being passed by the other body, donating all the proceeds of the public lands to be sold hereafter to the irrigation scheme, unless we get some fund from the sale of the Indian reservations that are thus opened to settlement the source of endowment of the land-grant colleges will disappear, and we shall be called on to take money that will be derived from taxation to support those colleges. That is well worth the consideration of Senators whose States are not interested in this matter.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BLACKBURN in the chair). Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. TILLMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. GAMBLE. It is my understanding that during the discussion of the bill passed two years ago it was directly stated that the proceeds from the sales of public lands were insufficient to support the agricultural colleges and experimental stations, and that it would come directly from the Federal Treasury; and it is my understanding that for some years it has been paid directly from the Federal Treasury without any regard to the amount received from the sale of public lands. I think it has been so returned in the estimates of the Department.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. There has been enough received up to this time to make it good.

Mr. TILLMAN. There has always been more than enough from the sale of public lands to furnish the source of supply to keep the obligations or the implied pledge of the Government to the land-grant schools. But the demand will come sometime or other, when the condition of the country is not so prosperous and taxation bears heavily upon the people, that we shall economize. If we now by legislation dispose of all the public domain the condition will be this: There will be nothing left of the arid region, because all the lands in that region are to go for irrigation, and the only remaining arable land will be Indian reservations; and if we give that away, after buying it at these prices, I want to know where the money is to come from to meet the obligations to the agricultural and mechanical colleges. We have to meet it after we get rid of all of the land, and we should not, like a spendthrift, inaugurate a policy which will bring us face to face with a donation from the Treasury.

Mr. STEWART. I call the attention of the Senator from South Carolina to a paper which I desire to present out of order. It is the memorial of Charles Polkinghorne and sundry other citizens of Nevada, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to provide for the leasing for grazing purposes of vacant public lands and reserving all rights of homestead and mineral entry, the rental to be a special fund for irrigation.

I would suggest to the Senator that the proposition now before Congress will be worked up to a considerable extent to lease them all to cattlemen. That will dispose of irrigation and dispose of any proceeds to carry on these schools. My constituents all protest against it and hope no such measure will be passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the petition will be received and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. TILLMAN. I merely call attention to this phase of the question. The present endowment of these land-grant colleges and experimental stations, amounting to $40,000 to each—and as there are some 48 States and Territories, I believe, making something like $2,000,000, or in the neighborhood of it—is now derived from the proceeds of the sale of public lands. As soon as we have reached that point where the few remaining patches of arable land which people are willing to purchase and undertake to use in farming operations or in any other other than grazing are disposed of, and if this irrigation scheme shall go through the House, we are going to be face to face with the loss of the endowment fund to the agricultural and mechanical colleges throughout the United States, and I am opposed to any policy which shall handicap us or handicuff us and injure those schools by destroying the fund from which they now receive their endowment and thereby jeopardize those great institutions of learning.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to ask the Senator a question before he takes his seat. He alluded, in closing, to the irrigation bill. Is it not true that the whole of that system, in the bill which we passed, rests on the proceeds of the sale of public lands?

Mr. TILLMAN. Absolutely. The proceeds of the sale of every acre of the public land in a certain list of States west of the Mississippi, and that embraces all the public land practically, will go to the irrigation scheme.

Mr. LODGE. Then the policy of this bill would, in the first place, throw the agricultural colleges and the experimental stations onto the Treasury, and then would throw onto the Treasury the entire system of irrigation that we proposed in the Senate bill; and either the irrigation system must stop or the agricultural and experimental stations must stop, or we must make fresh appropriations for them all.

Mr. TILLMAN. I do not know that I would go so far as to say that, but I will say that my understanding of the condition is this: If the irrigation bill becomes a law all lands in the semiarid region—and that will begin with the Missouri River and everything beyond—will go to irrigation. There are some reservations east of that region involved in the irrigation scheme, but unless we sell the land which we propose to buy from the Indians, in order to get some money, the agricultural and mechanical colleges will be placed under the necessity of coming here and saying to us, "Appropriate out of the money derived from taxation, for the public lands are all gone."

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. With regard to the effect of the passage of this bill upon the scheme for irrigation, the facts are just these: The bill we passed provided that all moneys derived from the sale of public lands in certain States, among which is South Dakota, should be applied for irrigation purposes, and it was also provided in the bill that if the receipts from the sale and disposal of other lands not within the States enumerated should be insufficient to support the agricultural colleges there should be appropriations directly out of the Treasury for that purpose.

So as it stands now we appropriate for irrigation purposes the proceeds of the sales of public lands in South Dakota and the other States mentioned, and the proceeds of the sales of public lands outside of those States are applied to the support of agricultural colleges; but if there is not enough derived from the sales of land outside of those States, then appropriations are to be made from the Treasury to cover the deficiency. That is the precise statement of this matter with regard to irrigation.

With reference to the Rosebud Reservation, the Government is going to pay a million dollars to the Indians. If it gets it back by selling the land to settlers at $2.50 an acre, there will be a million dollars derived from the Rosebud Reservation to go into the irrigation fund. If the Government is going to let the settlers have the land for nothing, there will be nothing derived from this reservation to go into the irrigation fund.

Mr. TELLER. I feel a great deal of interest in the irrigation fund, but I do not want, and I know the people of my State do not want, to build an irrigation scheme in Colorado at the expense of the settlers of some other State.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. I was not here when the irrigation bill was passed, but as I understand it the proceeds of the sales of public lands in a State are not to be devoted to irrigation in that State.

Mr. TELLER. No.

Mr. SPOONER. So the money derived from the sale of public lands in South Dakota or in any other State may be applied to irrigation in another State?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. In Colorado.

Mr. SPOONER. In Colorado.

Mr. TELLER. Under the irrigation bill, if it should become a law, which I do not think it is quite fair to hold up here now, because it is not yet a law, if this land is sold to settlers in South Dakota the money can be taken and invested in the irrigation of Colorado lands.

Mr. SPOONER. If these lands are given to the settlers—and I do not know whether that ought to be done or not—so that the irrigation fund is deprived of that amount of money, money may be taken from the proceeds of the sales of public lands in Colorado and applied to irrigation in South Dakota.

Mr. TELLER. The same thing. But the irrigation bill has not become a law. I am afraid it will not for some time. Anyhow, we ought not to be basing our legislation here upon a bill which has not yet become a law. If I knew that the million dollars to be realized from settlers in South Dakota out of this land would be used in Colorado to build reservoirs, and if by my vote I could give the settlers this land free, I would certainly give it to them. I know we in Colorado do not want anything of that kind. We will not complain if the irrigation fund is depleted to the extent of a million dollars if it is for the purpose of giving free homes to settlers.

What is more, we have one of these land-grant colleges. I guess it is about as good as any in the United States. If the Government shall feel, when the time comes when money can not be derived from the sale of land, that it does not wish to put up the money for the college, I will guarantee that the State of Colorado will take charge of her agricultural college and run it. It will not be abandoned. It will be as good under our administration as it is under that of the Government. It may be, when the revenue from the lands ceases to come in—and it must some day; everybody knows that; we must reach that point ultimately, and it is not a great while ahead either, because there will be very little land that you can ever sell for more than the cost of irrigation—when the time comes when there is no money coming in from the sale of lands and the Government is met with the question whether it will maintain these agricultural colleges, and it says "no, it can not afford it," there is not a State in the Union which is going to abandon its agricultural college. There is not a State in the Union which is not prepared to take up itself and carry on its agricultural college. There may be one or two among the new States which would be somewhat embarrassed by it, but they would do it all the same. The colleges would not be abandoned. I do not think there need be any worry about that.

The simple question is whether it is a proper and just thing to put this burden upon the settlement of that particular part of the country and upon those settlers. I do not think you could put the million dollars to any use on the face of the earth which would justify this great rich nation of ours in taking it out of the pockets of the poor settlers.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I am in favor of the free-home law, and I have been in favor of the law, but what staggers me is the high price we are compelled to pay the Indians. There is no way of reducing it. There have been one or two bills passed where the price was reasonable. With respect to Montana the evidence shows that the land was good. Most of it will be commuted, so the Government will lose very little. The land is good and there will be no great loss. In North Dakota the Senators from that State had good land and they consented to take it and pay for it.

In this case I have all the while been laboring under the doubt whether the land—after they have selected out a hundred thousand acres, the best of it, along the stream, knowing the land as I do, which is in the semiarid region and is high land—is worth $2.50 an acre. It certainly is a fancy price to pay for it. If it is worth that it has been made so entirely by settlements. Originally it was worth very little for any purpose, and if it is worth $2.50 an acre it is because settlements have crowded in.

I do not think the Government should be forced up in price by the Indians in this way. That is true not only in this case, but in other cases. If there is no way to acquire these lands for reasonable sums, if we are bound to buy them at the Indian prices and then open them to settlement, it is going to burden the Government beyond all reason, and either we must let up at one end or the other.

If we have to pay fancy prices for the lands, more than they are worth, because the Indians say so, then we can not give the lands away. If we can buy them for what they are reasonably worth, all the conditions considered, and benefit the Indians by taking them, we ought to do so. The Indians are not benefited by having a large reservation. It is better for the Indians if you can keep them in close quarters where you can see them and attend to them. If they are permitted to roam over a vast country they will remain wild. These vast regions do them no good. We are educating their children. We are doing everything we can for them. We are supplying them with rations almost everywhere. We are treating them as wards. If we have to have these vast regions tied up until we pay the prices the Indians ask (and in many cases the Indians are not on the land at all, but are living around towns, off the reservation, and the reservations do them no good unless they cultivate them), we will have to stop the whole thing, because the country ought not to be burdened to pay these prices and then give the lands away.

I suggest that as reasonable men we ought to treat our wards as a guardian would be bound to do, for their own good. We educate them and feed them, and we ought to put them where they can learn agriculture. They can not learn it in a vast region. Put them on good land—we are doing it as fast as we can—and give them allotments. When there is a piece of land which the Indians do not want, which is of no use to them, then the Government should appoint a commission, which should state what the land is worth and what ought to be given the Indians for it. We have the power. That ought to be done. If we do that, we can go on and open the country. If we do not do it, if we have to send out inspectors who must make contracts, who must get treaties, who go out and have to do what the Indians say in order to get the treaties, the same result will ensue. We have several inspectors who are good men, who would like to make reasonable bargains, but they can not make any bargain unless they do what the Indians want. Their success has all been obtained by submitting to conditions. It is not only this case, but there are others.

In this case I shall, as it came from the committee, vote to sustain the committee. I shall vote against the amendment and vote with the Senators from South Dakota; but I tell them that from this time on I shall fight every other treaty made with the Indians where the Indians fix the price of the land. You can not open the lands on that condition, and that the country may as well understand. You have to change the policy, or I am in favor of making no treaties, opening no more reservations, unless we can get them at reasonable prices.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas obtained the floor.

Mr. DIETRICH. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. DIETRICH. I should like to ask the Senator from Connecticut if he believes that the money which we would derive from the sale of the lands we acquire from the Indians would be considered money to be used in irrigation?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Certainly. That is the express provision of the irrigation bill. All moneys derived from sales of public lands in South Dakota and other States are to be thus applied.

Mr. DIETRICH. Those lands are not public lands at the present time. They are lands belonging to the Indians.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. They will be public lands when they are sold.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, I was very glad to hear the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs make the statement he did a moment ago. I very earnestly believe in the homestead system. I do not believe any law was ever passed by Congress which was wiser or more beneficent than the homestead law. I believe the public domain ought to be devoted to making homesteads in the country, and I do not care whether the land comes from an Indian reservation or from anywhere else. Whenever any land comes into the public domain it ought to be opened to settlement and used for that purpose, wherever it is possible to make homes of it.

I believe there ought not to be any exception in this case to that rule, and I heartily indorse the proposed amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] and hope it will be adopted by the Senate. If this agreement is ratified and these lands become a part of the public domain, then they should be used for homestead purposes. But I have been somewhat struck with the fact that this debate has run along altogether on that question. It seems to me there ought to be no difference here. It seems to me everybody ought to be in favor of the settlers having the right to locate their homes on the public domain, no matter where it comes from.

The trouble about this business is the paying of these unreasonable and outrageous prices for the Indian claims on lands that they do not own. Now, we have gone forward with that to a most unreasonable extent. We have been buying lands from the Indians at fancy prices. Of course everybody knows how the Indians are. When they understand that the Government wants to buy what claim they have they will put a fancy price on it and ask just as much as they think they can make the Government pay. As was suggested by the Senator from Nevada one of these agents is sent out by the Government, and he is bound to make some sort of an arrangement, and to do that he must accede to the Indians' demands.

The Indians have a mere right of possession. In a great many cases they do not own the land. They are simply put there for the purpose of occupying it, and the large boundaries which were made in establishing these reservations in the first place were, as a rule, to give them hunting grounds and to keep other people from going in close where the Indians were. That has been changed.

Some years ago we bought the Great Sioux Reservation and agreed to pay 50 cents per acre for the lowest price land. There are thousands upon thousands, if not millions, of acres of that land which have not been used for any purpose, I understand. Nobody goes on it. Nobody can make homes on it. It is not fit for homes, and yet we have paid to the Indians a price at which no American citizen could have sold that land if he owned it.

I believe the time has come when Congress ought to put a stop to that sort of thing; that these extravagant and unreasonable arrangements for buying Indian lands at a fancy price ought to be stopped. We ought to pay a reasonable price for extinguishing their right of occupancy in the land they do not use and never would use, and it ought to be paid with some degree of discretion and common sense.

I do not know whether or not the treaty ought to be ratified as to the purchase of this land. I confess most of the arrangements which have been made for some years past have been contrary to my own judgment. We have been paying unreasonable prices for the lands. I do not know much about this land. I thought it was a very much larger body of land than it is. I misread the bill. I thought it was 4,000,000 acres, and it was I who told the Senator from Colorado there were 4,000,000 acres. I thought 25 cents an acre, perhaps, was not an unreasonable price to pay to extinguish some imaginary Indian title to a lot of this land which they have never seen and which they can not use and a good deal of which they never could use. Much of this land is utterly unfit for use. Some of it is doubtless good, and if private citizens owned it they could sell it for more, perhaps, than the Government will pay the Indians for it.

In the first place, I do not believe the Indians own the land, and I do not believe we should pay them as if they paid taxes and owned the property as other people own property. The Indians can afford to keep it for all time, if we allow it to be done, and thus prevent anybody from having access to it or deriving any benefit from it, as it carries no burden to the Indians, and they can insist that the Government shall pay them a fancy price whenever it wishes to extinguish their title.

That does not affect the fact with which I started out—that I believe any land which becomes a part of the public domain ought to be opened to the use of any American citizen who has not availed himself of his homestead rights to go and locate a home on it; and I hope there never will be any limitation of that kind put on any bill passed by Congress. If there is anything wrong about this—if too much money is to be paid for the land—let us cut down the amount and bring it down to a reasonable price, but do not undertake to disturb the homestead right, which I believe ought to be kept sacred as long as the Government exists.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, in that view of it, I think we had better recommit the bill and let the negotiations as to the value be renewed or resumed. There is a million dollars involved; there is a division of opinion and feeling here, the chairman of the committee advocating one policy and the Senators from South Dakota advocating another; and if we are not bound by some obligations in morals and equity and justice to the Indians why pay them anything? Where do the Indians get any title or any show of title? Why do we make treaties with them? We certainly pledged to these people the honor of this Government some time in the past that if they would go within certain limits and behave themselves they would be let alone and the land should be theirs. We now say, "We are going to ignore that pledge, because we want your land. You are no good anyway. Die; and if you do not die we will kill you." That is the sum and substance of this argument.

I recollect here that a year ago we went over into the Pacific and bought from Spain, at $2.50 an acre, some land there which we have given over to the Moros or to the parrots and the monkeys. I do not see why we should be fretting about land in South Dakota at $2.50 an acre, when we are buying land in the Torrid Zone, 10,000 miles off, and paying $2.50 an acre to Spain for it. In fact, I am very badly muddled about this whole business.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I do not think the statement made by the Senator from South Carolina should go unchallenged. The Government has made title to the Indian tribes, and when it has it has observed it. Patents have been issued to the tribes. We are undertaking right now to allot land in the Indian Territory among the Choctaws, Chickasaws, Seminoles, Creeks, and Cherokees. The land was given to these people, and the Government has insisted that every square inch of that land shall be given to those Indians. It is not sold to anybody else or opened to settlement or disposed of in any way, but is divided amongst those people equally and amongst themselves.

Mr. TILLMAN. What is the difference between the treaties we have made with the Chickasaws and the Choctaws and with the Indians on the Rosebud Reservation?

Mr. STEWART. It is very different.

Mr. TILLMAN. Just explain it.

Mr. STEWART. I will. The Choctaws and the Chickasaws were in different States, in Mississippi and down through that country, and it was desired to have them moved. They were under no obligations to move. They gave up what possessions they had there, and this land in the Indian Territory was given to them in a trade, a bargain.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. By treaty we gave them the land.

Mr. STEWART. A solemn treaty.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. We issued patents, and they own the land.

Mr. TILLMAN. A solemn treaty? Did not we make a solemn treaty with these Indians, or did we make an unsolemn treaty with the Indians on the Rosebud Reservation? What sort of a treaty was it?

Mr. GAMBLE. I will reply very briefly to the Senator. I meant to allude to that in my remarks yesterday. A treaty was made in 1868—I do not know that it is necessary to go back of that—whereby the Great Sioux Indians were confined to the western part of South Dakota; that is, the region west of the Missouri River. In that treaty it was provided:

> And in addition thereto all existing reservations on the east bank of said river shall be, and the same is, set apart for the absolute and undisturbed use and occupation of the Indians herein named.

It granted to them under the treaty of 1868 absolute and undisturbed use and occupation.

Mr. TILLMAN. Is not that a title?

Mr. GAMBLE. I will follow that by a further suggestion. Then it comes to the treaty of 1889. That was practically an act of Congress, when it was proposed by the Government to segregate the Great Sioux Nation, consisting, I presume, of 18,000 Indians, into different tribes, locating, I think, seven of them in different reservations in the State.

They were described by metes and bounds, the Rosebud Reservation in one place, the Standing Rock in another, the Cheyenne River in another, the Lower Brulé in another location, and the Crow Creek in another. Though the limits of the separate reservations were defined and there was a cession by them of about eight millions and a half of acres that were thrown open to public settlement, it is stated in the act of 1889, speaking of their separate reservations—> the lands described in each of the other separate reservations so created, and shall be held to confirm in the Indians entitled to receive rations at each of said separate reservations, respectively, to their separate and exclusive use and benefit, all the title and interest of every name and nature secured therein to the different bands of the Sioux Nation by said treaty of April 29, 1868.

It is further provided in this act of Congress that the surplus lands in each of these separate reservations may be treated for in regard to their cession when, in the judgment of the President of the United States, the surplus lands are unnecessary for the Indians. Last year a provision was placed upon the Indian appropriation bill authorizing the Secretary of the Interior at any time to negotiate with the separate Indian tribes for the cession of their surplus lands, and under that provision of law this negotiation was taken up. So this negotiation is not only in compliance with the law of last year, but it is in compliance with the law of 1889, wherein it is provided—

> That at any time after lands have been allotted to all the Indians of any tribe as herein provided, or sooner, if in the opinion of the President it shall be for the best interest of said tribe, it shall be lawful for the Secretary of the Interior to negotiate with such Indian tribe for the purchase and release by said tribe, in conformity with the treaty or statute under which such reservation is held, of such portions of its reservation not allotted as such tribe shall, from time to time, consent to sell, on such terms and conditions as shall be considered just and equitable between the United States and said tribe of Indians, which purchase shall not be complete until ratified by Congress: Provided, however, That all lands adapted to agriculture, with or without irrigation—

I do not know that I need read the further provision. So, then, this was an act of Congress which became operative only when it was ratified by the Great Sioux Nation. They did ratify it under the provisions of the treaty of 1868 by three-fourths of the male members of the tribe. The proclamation was issued, I think, on February 10, 1900, proclaiming the ratification, and then this act became operative.

So it does not seem to me, Mr. President, that we can apply here the general provisions as to treatment with other Indian tribes, but we must be bound by this law and this treaty. These Indians have rights of property in these lands, not the fee title, to be sure, but certainly Congress can not by main force and power take possession of the lands and dispossess the Indians, except under the form prescribed in this treaty and law.

Mr. McCUMBER. May I ask the Senator a question and see if we can not follow that a step further?

What practical difference is there between a right to use and occupation perpetually and a fee title, so far as the Government is concerned? When we, by a solemn obligation of Congress, in an enactment or a treaty which has been ratified, absolutely grant to these people the right to the exclusive use and occupation of territory without any limit whatever, have they not a title that is just as good as though they had a fee title as long as we have obligated the Government itself to give them that title and to protect them in it? That being the case, are we not absolutely at the mercy of every one of these Indian tribes that have reservations created by treaty to give them such a price as they may demand, or else break our own contract? Is not that true?

Mr. GAMBLE. I think that is true. It must be at a price mutually agreed upon between the parties under the stipulation of the law and the treaty. However, in further answer to the Senator from North Dakota, Congress having granted to these Indians the sole use and occupation of this territory perpetually, it is practically as good as a fee title unless the Indian title became extinguished, and then it would revert to the Government of the United States.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. GAMBLE. I yield cheerfully to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. STEWART. The use and occupation is only while they are in a tribal relation. We are proceeding to relieve them of that relation as fast as possible. In the Indian Territory we are breaking it up and giving them their land in severalty.

Mr. McCUMBER. May I interrupt the Senator right there? When we have once given them a tract of land as a tribe and guaranteed them the right to the occupation of that land as a tribe we have placed ourselves in a position so that we can not break up their tribal relations unless we do it by a contract with them. They can still hold the land under their contract.

Mr. STEWART. In the first place, it lasts only during their tribal relation. I am sorry that we have so many contracts in favor of barbarism and cruelty. I believe that while they are our wards we must take care of them whether the relation is tribal or not, but we are not bound to pay more than the land is worth. We need not buy it unless we have a mind to do it.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; we need not buy it unless we have a mind to do it, but we are placed in this position. The States need to have the land opened to settlement. There are vast tracts that you forced upon those States years ago when you created these reservations before they had any representation in Congress. Now, we wish to have them opened up. You have placed us, however, at the mercy of these Indian tribes.

Mr. STEWART. I deny that.

Mr. McCUMBER. And we must make some kind of an arrangement.

Mr. STEWART. I deny that. If this land is necessary for settlement, the Government has a right to take it and condemn it for public use.

Mr. McCUMBER. If I may answer the Senator again, I deny the proposition that where the Government has said to a tribe of Indians, "In consideration of your releasing this territory I grant you certain other territory to hold perpetually," we have a right to place a limitation upon that law and take the land without an arrangement with the Indians.

Mr. STEWART. I deny that the title of the Indians is any higher than your title to your farm, and that can be condemned for public use.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. But can it be taken for the purpose of selling it to another?

Mr. McCUMBER. It may be condemned for public use, but when it is opened to settlement it is for private use and not public use. No court will ever hold that it is taken for public use under such circumstances.

Mr. STEWART. Opening the land to settlement is a public use. There is no doubt about it. If that is not a public use I should like to know what is. We must have settlement on the land, and I believe it is a public use. I do not believe that we are in the power of those Indians. If we are in their power and have to pay more than the land is worth I do not want to have any more treaties or enactments made.

Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator say——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. STEWART. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator mean that if the Government wants to take 500,000 acres of land for free homes, in order to throw it open to settlement, the Government can condemn it?

Mr. STEWART. That is a different proposition.

Mr. TILLMAN. You are not an Indian.

Mr. STEWART. I am not an Indian. I am not a sham. I am a reality. This is a sham Indian that you are dealing with when you deal with an Indian tribe. If public policy requires land to be taken, whether it is 500,000 acres or any other quantity.

Mr. SPOONER. Would it be any more a public use to take it from the Senator from Nevada than to take it from an Indian tribe?

Mr. STEWART. Public policy might require it to be taken from a dedication to barbarism, where it is used for the purpose of pauperizing and barbarizing and destroying civilization, whereas it would not require it to be taken where it was used for purposes for civilization. Public policy is in favor of civilization. These large reservations are opposed to civilization. Where they have existed there never has been any progress in civilization. We have the spectacle in the United States of the Indians dwindling away and diminishing in number, on account of disease and laziness and misery, where they are fed. How is it with the Indians elsewhere? See the public policy in Mexico. There is a population of 10,000,000, and nine million and a half are Indians. Was it good policy to take the land from them and allow them to become civilized? Up in British Columbia every Indian is at work. Is not that good public policy? If you leave the land to be held by savages you monopolize the land in favor of barbarism, which is contrary to public policy. We are not wholly in the power of these Indians or their friends, the speculators out there.

Mr. McCUMBER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. STEWART. Certainly.

Mr. McCUMBER. I make a clear distinction between this case and obtaining the original title of the Indians to lands by mere occupancy. They are merely our wards. We may take that land so far as any title by reason of original occupancy is concerned. But we have recognized them as people capable of making a contract and have entered into a contract with them. Thereby we have estopped ourselves from denying their power. When we give them a certain tract of land for occupation simply in consideration of something else we are then in an entirely different position with the Indians, and we must treat them the same as we would treat white men.

Mr. STEWART. Do you think it is good policy to dedicate to barbarism enough land for four or five States?

Mr. McCUMBER. No, I do not; but we have done it already.

Mr. STEWART. No, you have not done it. You have not reclaimed them by the public policy you have pursued. I do not believe that we are in their power, and I shall vote against buying the land. I protested against that in the committee, but the committee reported it here, and I am at liberty to oppose it unless committed to it in committee. I do not think the agreement ought to be ratified, because it proposes to pay more than the land is worth.

Mr. COCKRELL. I wish to ask the Senator in charge of the bill whether a fee title can not pass from the United States to an Indian nation or tribe without the issue of a patent?

Mr. McCUMBER. There is no question about it.

Mr. GAMBLE. I do not know that I understand the question.

Mr. COCKRELL. Can not a title of the United States pass from the United States to a party by a law or by a treaty which is ratified, without the issue of any patent?

Mr. GAMBLE. Yes; I should say so.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. If the United States made a treaty with Indians to give them a fee-simple title to some lands which the United States owned, there is no question but that title would pass without the formal document of a patent.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to ask the Senator from Connecticut a question.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Perhaps I have gotten myself into more trouble than I thought I had. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPOONER. Of course, what the Senator says about an act passing fee is correct. But has the Senator any doubt that an act of Congress vesting a perpetual possessory title is not just as efficacious, as far as it goes?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. To convey that kind of a title?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. Now, the argument of the Senator from Nevada——

Mr. RAWLINS. Will the Senator permit a query there?

Mr. SPOONER. Now I have gotten myself into trouble. [Laughter.]

Mr. RAWLINS. If we pass any sort of a title except temporarily, continuing as long as a status or a tribal condition exists, is it not necessary to have a definite and ascertainable grantee? I put the question to the Senator from Wisconsin, How would the Government convey a title in fee simple to a tribe of Indians, the tribe being the grantee?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. A tribe will take——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

Mr. GAMBLE subsequently said: I ask unanimous consent that the bill in regard to the ratification of the agreement with the Indians of the Rosebud Reservation be taken up to-morrow morning immediately after the conclusion of the morning business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Dakota asks unanimous consent that to-morrow morning, after the completion of the routine business, the bill which has just been laid aside may be considered. Is there objection?

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the Senator will not make that request until the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] is in his seat. It can be done any time as well as now.

Mr. GAMBLE. I will state in reply to the Senator from Missouri that I spoke to the Senator from Connecticut just before he left the Chamber, and he suggested that I make the request.

Mr. COCKRELL. All right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT FOR THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2295) temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Mr. President, I had not intended to discuss the issues——

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order. If I am not mistaken, I am entitled to the floor. I had the floor when the Senate adjourned.

Mr. SPOONER. That is right.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Mr. President, I was not aware of the fact that the Senator from Tennessee had the floor at the hour of adjournment. I had intended on yesterday at the conclusion of the morning hour to-day to briefly discuss certain provisions of the bill. It escaped my attention that the Senator had the floor at the hour of adjournment. I shall be glad to yield to him.

Mr. CARMACK. I am sorry to inconvenience the Senator from North Carolina at all, but I should like to conclude what I began to say yesterday so that it will go compactly together.

Mr. PRITCHARD. That will be entirely satisfactory to me. Of course I do not wish to interfere with the Senator in what he has to say.

Mr. CARMACK. I shall try not to occupy the floor very long. I am very glad to have the Senator yield.

Mr. President, in the course of the discussion yesterday the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] stated it as a fact that all the witnesses with the exception of Governor Taft and Professor Barrows had been summoned at the instance of the minority. In disputing the accuracy of that statement I did not mean to deny, as I think I fully explained, that Democratic members of the committee had suggested the summoning of all those witnesses. The point I did wish to make and thought of some importance was that the committee had decided that we should not have witnesses summoned at the instance of a majority or of a minority of a committee.

I assumed in the beginning that this investigation was conducted with a common motive and for a common purpose, and that there was no division in the committee with reference to the objects for which the investigation was being prosecuted; that there were no two sides in the committee composed of a definite and fixed majority and a definite and fixed minority representing two sides of this question. We of the minority had objected to being put in that attitude, and it was therefore agreed that any member of the committee, without reference to the fact of his being a minority or a majority member, might suggest the names of persons whom he desired to have summoned as witnesses. No witnesses were to be presented to the committee as being witnesses of the minority or witnesses of the majority, and we did not desire to put any witness in the attitude of being summoned at the instance of any party, or as the representative of any party, or to sustain any particular contention or policy.

But it is true, Mr. President, as the Senator from Massachusetts suggests, that all of the witnesses have been summoned and examined at the instance of Democratic members, or, if he chooses to have it that way, of the minority of the committee, except two witnesses, and one of those might not have been included in the exception. Governor Taft himself was summoned to testify at the instance of Democratic members of the committee. Therefore the Senator's own statements refute the charge he subsequently made that we have been pursuing this investigation with a partisan spirit—that we consider no witness of importance unless he can be brought here to testify and give evidence to facts that will be regarded as hostile to the Administration—for the fact is that, with one exception, every witness who has been brought before the committee has been brought there at the instance of the minority members.

We have not been governed by any partisan motive in this matter, for we have asked for the summoning of witnesses who we knew were partisans and extreme partisans of the policy we opposed. We have suggested that Governor Taft should be brought before the committee, General MacArthur, General Otis, all of those military officers in the United States who have been in the Philippines. We wanted to give everybody ample opportunity to present his views before the committee, and for the purpose of doing so we have asked for the summoning of witnesses whose opinions we knew were extremely hostile to the policy we support upon this question.

But it is true, as shown by the Senator from Massachusetts, that almost every scrap of testimony that has been brought before the committee, every scrap of information that has been obtained from the War Department, or from whatever source whatever, has been obtained upon the initiative and at the instance of the minority members of that committee. If no other witnesses, except those suggested by the Republican members of the committee, had been summoned you would practically have had no investigation whatever by the committee. If the Senator from Massachusetts wishes to put it in that light and say that witnesses have been summoned by the minority and by the majority, then we are willing to stand by the record.

The Senator referred yesterday to the reason for refusing to summon Aguinaldo, Mabini, and other Filipinos to testify before the committee.

Mr. President, I can not see any good reason whatever in the objections urged against summoning these persons as witnesses and having them testify before the committee, because they have brought witnesses after witnesses to attempt to prove things by statements or alleged statements made by Aguinaldo and by Mabini. We have had testimony put upon the record that Aguinaldo has said so and so; that Aguinaldo has confessed so and so; that Mabini has said so and so; that he has admitted so and so. After the indirect testimony of those gentlemen is placed upon the record, coming from a partisan source, when we ask that they themselves shall be allowed to state their side of the case, the request is refused.

We had the statement made before the committee by Governor Taft, for instance, that Aguinaldo had assassinated Luna. He made that statement, he said, because General Funston told him that Aguinaldo had told Funston that he had assassinated Luna. Now, it so happens that General Funston has made several very contradictory statements on this very question. In the statements he has been making here in the United States he has said over and over again that Aguinaldo had confessed to him that he had assassinated Luna, that he had killed him simply because he was becoming too popular, and that Aguinaldo would be hung for that crime by any court in the world that would try him. Yet, when Governor Taft was before the committee he said that General Funston told him Aguinaldo acknowledged to Funston that he had had Luna killed, and that he did so simply because it was a question whether he should kill Luna or Luna should kill him; that he had killed him to save his own life.

That is the statement General Funston made to Governor Taft. He comes to the United States and makes another statement—that Aguinaldo admitted that he had assassinated Luna in cold blood, simply because he was becoming too popular. The difference between the two statements is the difference between self-defense and murder in the first degree. One statement or the other is false and, perhaps, both.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. CARMACK. With pleasure.

Mr. FORAKER. I should like to ask the Senator whether it makes any difference to us in the discharge of our duty here whether the one story or the other be true. We are now having under consideration a bill providing for civil government in the Philippine Islands. How does it reflect upon our duty here whether Luna was killed by Aguinaldo or by somebody else?

Mr. CARMACK. It seemed to make a great deal of difference to the gentlemen of the majority who are condemning this investigation, because they thought it worth while to have that fact proved and spread upon the record——

Mr. McCOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. CARMACK. Wait a moment. There is no use of the gentlemen saying anything of that sort, because in their whole policy they have thought it a very important matter to besmirch Aguinaldo and to brand him as a scoundrel, a murderer, a thief, a bribe taker, and everything evil that they could. Now, when these charges are being systematically made and it is sought to bring proof before the committee to sustain them, I say that common decency requires that the man so accused should be allowed to make his own statement. But it is not simply on Aguinaldo's account or on Mabini's account that I say that they ought to be brought here as witnesses to testify before this committee.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

Mr. CARMACK. We ought to be willing, in common fairness, to hear the other side of the story.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. CARMACK. In a moment.

The very question which now confronts the American people is whether we shall hold and govern the Philippine Islands or whether we shall give them their independence; and the majority are bringing in hearsay testimony indirectly from these very men in order to prove that they should not be given their independence and that they are not fit for self-government. I say in common fairness, and in order to elicit all the truth with respect to the condition of the Philippine Islands, we ought to hear the story on the other side, instead of relying absolutely and entirely upon the reports that come to us from our military officers there, which have been shown to be utterly unreliable.

Mr. BURTON. Will the Senator allow me?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield?

Mr. CARMACK. With pleasure.

Mr. BURTON. Will the Senator please tell us what were the contradictory statements made by General Funston? I do not understand that General Funston has ever been before the committee.

Mr. CARMACK. No, sir; he has not been; but General Funston's evidence has been brought indirectly before the committee, so that it becomes a proper subject of comment.

Mr. BURTON. I understand that; but, as I understand, the only witness the Senator referred to whose testimony related to General Funston's statement as to what Aguinaldo told him was Governor Taft.

Mr. CARMACK. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURTON. Then how can there be a contradiction?

Mr. CARMACK. The contradiction is in this: General Funston, while he has not been testifying before the Committee on the Philippines, has been testifying in every newspaper in the United States. He has been testifying before every banquet where he could get permission to attend, until the President of the United States shut down on him and stopped him from testifying. He has been making speeches all over the country, and in those speeches and in interviews he made the statement that Aguinaldo acknowledged to him that he had killed Luna, and had killed him because he was becoming too popular, and he said distinctly——

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President——

Mr. CARMACK. Wait a moment. He said distinctly that it was a cold-blooded assassination, and that any court in the world which would try him for the crime would hang him.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CARMACK. In a moment. Governor Taft's statement as to what General Funston told him was, that Aguinaldo had admitted to his having had Luna killed, but said he killed him in self-defense; that it was a question whether he should kill Luna or Luna should kill him.

Mr. BURTON. Will the Senator allow me?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield?

Mr. CARMACK. With pleasure.

Mr. BURTON. Will the Senator be so kind as to cite to the Senate the testimony of Governor Taft in which he said that General Funston told him that Aguinaldo had said to him that he killed Luna in self-defense?

Mr. CARMACK. I have not a copy of it here, but if the Senator will send to the committee room he can get the report of the hearings before the committee, and if he will look into the index, under the title "Luna" or "Aguinaldo," he will very readily find that the statement I have made is exactly correct. I do not say he used the term "self-defense," but I do say that he said that the question was whether Aguinaldo should kill Luna or Luna should kill Aguinaldo.

Mr. BURTON. Yes; but is not that the conclusion the Senator draws from the statement of Governor Taft rather than anything Governor Taft testified to, and is it not possible that all the statement was not given by Governor Taft?

Mr. CARMACK. I do not know. He did not appear to be concealing anything about it.

Mr. BURTON. My question did not import that at all. What I was saying is this: If I understand General Funston's statement, it was that Aguinaldo killed Luna because Luna was about to become a dictator like himself and might supplant him; or in that rôle would, of course, equal him; but the inference can not be drawn from that statement that Aguinaldo killed Luna in self-defense. What I am trying to get at is whether or not the statement of Governor Taft can be tortured to mean that General Funston told Governor Taft that he had understood Aguinaldo's statement to mean that Aguinaldo had killed Luna in self-defense.

Mr. CARMACK. It does not require any torture at all.

Mr. MCCOMAS. I know the Senator wants to be accurate about this matter.

Mr. CARMACK. Certainly.

Mr. MCCOMAS. I think I can remind the Senator that, in the mass of testimony, he has rather omitted a portion of about five lines on page 69 of Governor Taft's testimony. Governor Taft said:

> Upon that issue I have understood that Aguinaldo and Luna differed. Luna desired to continue the warfare as it had been conducted, in an open fight. Aguinaldo was for a guerrilla campaign. These two men were opposed to each other, at any rate, and Aguinaldo directed Luna's killing. I should not say that if I had not direct evidence on the subject from General Funston, who says that Aguinaldo said the question was whether Luna should kill him or he should kill Luna, and he took steps to secure the death of Luna. The killing was at the headquarters of Aguinaldo, and Luna was shot by guards.

Governor Taft, General Funston, and everybody else agreed that Aguinaldo caused the death of Luna, and I believe the Senator from Tennessee is in very great error so far as the majority of the committee are concerned. Whether Aguinaldo had Luna killed, whether he killed him from the first motive or from the second, the material fact is that he caused the assassination of his strongest general at his tent door.

Mr. CARMACK. That is not the part of the testimony to which I refer. Governor Taft was subsequently cross-examined upon that very subject, and he said then that as near as he could recollect what General Funston said to him, it was that Luna was killed at the door of Aguinaldo's tent, and that the question was whether he should kill Luna or Luna should kill him. That is in a subsequent part of the testimony, and I am quoting almost precisely the very language. What I was saying——

Mr. BURTON. May I interrupt the Senator for a moment with a question?

Mr. CARMACK. Yes.

Mr. BURTON. Then, the Senator does not claim that the evidence that has just been read by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. MCCOMAS] would indicate that Governor Taft wanted it understood that the statement had been made that Aguinaldo killed Luna in self-defense?

Mr. CARMACK. I do say that Governor Taft subsequently, in explaining that statement or correcting it, or whatever you may call it, when he was questioned particularly as to what had been stated to him by General Funston, mentioned the date and the occasion on which he had the conversation with General Funston. Then he related what General Funston told him, and that was that Aguinaldo had confessed to Funston the killing of Luna, and stated that it was a question of whether he should kill Luna or Luna should kill him. I say that statement is as different from the statement that General Funston has been making throughout the United States as night is different from day. It is the difference between self-defense and murder in the first degree.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. CARMACK. Yes, sir.

Mr. STEWART. Is there any want of harmony between the statement that Luna was getting too popular and dangerous and that Aguinaldo had him killed for that reason, or he might have added that there was a contest between them, in which he had to kill Luna or Luna would kill him? It seems to me the whole conversation is in perfect harmony with itself, and that there is no contradiction. The reason assigned for killing Luna was because Luna was getting too popular and too strong for Aguinaldo, so that both of them could not live together, and so Aguinaldo took measures to get him out of the way. I do not see any contradiction there. He might have assigned that reason among others in justification, and probably during the conversation he said that Luna had become too popular, and it became a question whether he would kill Luna or Luna would kill him, and that it was a matter of self-defense.

Mr. CARMACK. I think that is special pleading, but I shall not comment on it.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator fron Tennessee yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. CARMACK. Certainly.

Mr. PATTERSON. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. MCCOMAS] to the statement he has made for the purpose of correcting it. I understood him to say, in substance, that it was conceded on every hand that Aguinaldo had caused the death of Luna. Am I correct?

Mr. MCCOMAS. That is gathered from the testimony.

Mr. PATTERSON. The Senator, then, was not present when the testimony was given. The only evidence in the world, so far as our committee has knowledge, that the death of Luna was traceable to Aguinaldo was the statement alleged to have been made by General Funston to Governor Taft and, it is said, to another American officer—I think it was when General Otis was upon the stand, and the question was discussed, that I called the attention of General Otis to the fact, and read him the testimony that, as to whether or not Luna had been killed through the instrumentality of Aguinaldo, had been investigated, and that the result of the investigation was that he had not been so killed, but that he had been killed by one of the guards at headquarters and as the result of a personal altercation between the two men.

Mr. CARMACK. Who said that?

Mr. PATTERSON. It was stated in this investigation, and if the Senator will turn to the testimony he will find that such is the fact. So that we have an investigation upon one side which exonerates Emilio Aguinaldo, and the statement of General Funston upon the other that Aguinaldo told him the story, whatever it was, with reference to the death of General Luna.

Mr. CARMACK. I will say, Mr. President, that General MacArthur's statement before the committee supports that statement. He says the result of the investigation was that Luna was killed at Aguinaldo's headquarters in a violent altercation with the guard. General MacArthur said it had been charged that the guard had been ordered by Aguinaldo to provoke an altercation, but he very seriously doubted this statement, because Luna was a very violent and overbearing man and likely to get into an altercation with anybody or force a difficulty with anybody.

Mr. MCCOMAS. The Senator from Colorado has made the statement here and has assumed that the testimony was taken when I was not present in the committee, but I have the record of February 18, 1902, and the Senator from Colorado and myself were both present. I remember the matter very distinctly, and the Senator himself, taking the account from Sonnichsen's book, asked the question in the course of the examination of Governor Taft, which does put a very bad light upon Aguinaldo's position. The Senator from Colorado, in the question to Governor Taft, read a statement of the circumstances of Luna's death as given before the Schurman Commission, as follows:

> General Luna and Colonel Ramon sought an interview with Aguinaldo at his temporary headquarters at Cabanatuan, and were informed by the guard that he was absent. "Not finding him there," says the witness, "he (Luna) became angry and insulted the guard, and when the guard wanted to seize him and his companion they (Luna and Ramon) thought the man was half crazy and immediately began shooting and the guard returned the fire."
> And the following question was asked in this investigation:
> "Q. Did the guard fire at him?
> "A. All of them. They wanted to take him, but he had saber and revolver to defend himself and they could do nothing else."

The witness added, in answer to a question as to the effect of killing General Luna there, that "at first the people were much surprised, but afterwards they said it was better so, because he was very cruel."

Were you aware that an eyewitness had testified to that effect?

Finally, Governor Taft said in answer:

I have never heard it denied until now—

That is, the statement that Aguinaldo had caused the assassination of Luna, whatever the motive, whether it be the first or the second that caused his assassination—

I have never heard it denied until now, although it is possible that if I had looked further into the evidence I should have found just the statement that you have read—that the killing of Luna was the result of a factional difference between him and Aguinaldo; that he was killed, as I say, by the guard of Aguinaldo at Aguinaldo's headquarters.

And Governor Taft, throughout his whole testimony, on every page, insisted that the information he had was that Luna was assassinated at the instance of Aguinaldo at his tent door by his own guards, and that the statement referred to was new to him when offered, and that the statement as read by the Senator from Colorado was implicatory, and indicated that this oriental had caused the assassination.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I called the attention of one witness to the fact that there had been an investigation, and I want to say that I and the other minority members of the committee were amazed—to again use the word of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER]—that, without any provocation, without any question being propounded, without the testimony having reference to that which was under investigation, the governor of the Philippine Islands should have volunteered to give hearsay testimony which convicted a then prisoner of the United States of a horrible and infamous crime.

Mr. BURTON. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. PATTERSON. Yes.

Mr. BURTON. You say Governor Taft did testify, as you understood, that Aguinaldo had killed Luna or had him killed, not in self-defense, but in a criminal way?

Mr. PATTERSON. I think the honorable Senator from Kansas completely understands me. The way I understood the statement of Governor Taft, which was unprovoked and uncalled for, was that Aguinaldo had practically committed the crime of assassination. Governor Taft was then talking about a man who was at the time and is now a prisoner in the Philippine Islands. Afterwards came the statement of General Funston; and it has ever seemed strange to me that these accusations are brought against this man and that a majority of the committee have been standing like a stone wall against having that man heard in his own defense.

Mr. MCCOMAS. I think the Senator ought not to say what he has said.

Mr. CARMACK. I have the floor, Mr. President, and I am not going to let this discussion continue on that subject in this irregular manner.

Mr. MCCOMAS. Let me say a word.

Mr. CARMACK. Not now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee declines to yield.

Mr. CARMACK. The fact of the matter is simply this: Governor Taft did say, in answer to questions from Senators of the majority of the committee, what seemed to imply that a cold-blooded assassination had been perpetrated by Aguinaldo upon Luna; but subsequently, some days later, when Governor Taft was cross-examined as to what was said to him by Funston, he said that Funston had said to him that Aguinaldo had confessed to him that he had killed Luna in order to save his own life. That was the subsequent statement of Governor Taft with reference to the confession which Aguinaldo made to General Funston.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. CARMACK. Yes, sir.

Mr. FORAKER. I know the Senator from Tennessee would not intentionally or knowingly make any misstatement; but he has twice said that this statement of Governor Taft when he was testifying before the committee with respect to the death of Luna was brought out by a question propounded to him by the majority members of the committee.

Mr. CARMACK. No, Mr. President; if the Senator will wait a moment, I said Governor Taft made this statement in the first place. He was subsequently asked by certain Senators of the majority of the committee whether or not he had ever heard it doubted that Aguinaldo had had Luna assassinated, and he said he had not.

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator will allow me, I want to call his attention to the record, which shows that he is in error as to the first statement made by Governor Taft, which has already been cited and is found on page 69 of the record, and is in response to a question asked by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON]. Governor Taft was not asked any question in that connection by any of the majority members of the committee. So that, in the first instance, the statement was brought out——

Mr. CARMACK. But the answer to that was not responsive to the question of the Senator from Colorado, which, as it seems to me——

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator will also recall his statement that Governor Taft went on and volunteered the statement referred to. There is nothing of that kind manifested upon the face of the record. I was not in the committee and I do not know what the manner of the witness was, but certainly there is nothing in the language which discloses any such purpose on his part. The statement was brought out in a natural way, and he apologized for making the statement because of the serious nature of it, saying that he would not make the statement except only that he had this direct statement from General Funston.

Mr. CARMACK. That statement was not brought out by any question asked of Governor Taft.

Mr. FORAKER. Perhaps not; but he was interrogated, it will be found, in regard to the insurgent forces, and he went on, in what appears to be a very natural way, to state what occurred when the main army was broken up. Then he said that they had broken up into guerrilla bands; and as to whether that method of warfare should be pursued there was a difference of opinion between Aguinaldo and Luna, which resulted in Luna's death.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. CARMACK. Certainly.

Mr. PATTERSON. It is better for the record to be complete upon that question as to the manner in which the death of Luna occurred. I read from the record of the hearings of the committee on page 69:

Senator PATTERSON. What was the size of the army in the first instance?

Governor TAFT. I can not give you the figures. I do not know that anybody can exactly, but it certainly went above 10,000 men. I think there were more than that. Possibly Senator BEVERIDGE can say, because he was there at the time and I was not.

Senator BEVERIDGE. Are you speaking of its size originally? Originally it was supposed, at the outbreak of the hostilities, that they had something in the neighborhood of 30,000 men. Luna alone had 10,000 in San Fernando.

Governor TAFT. When that army was scattered——

Senator CULBERSON. Senator PATTERSON was asking about the American troops.

Senator PATTERSON. No, sir. I was asking about the insurgents.

Governor TAFT. I thought the question of Senator PATTERSON was directed to the insurgents.

When that army was scattered the question was, What were the insurgents to do—whether they were to surrender or to make guerrilla warfare, or attempt to gather their forces and make a continued fight, as they had been making.

DEATH OF LUNA.

Upon that issue I have understood that Aguinaldo and Luna differed. Luna desired to continue the warfare as it had been conducted, in an open fight. Aguinaldo was for a guerrilla campaign. These two men were opposed to each other, at any rate, and Aguinaldo directed Luna's killing.

There is how it was brought about.

Mr. BURTON. Was that in self-defense?

Mr. MCCOMAS. Does not the Senator now withdraw his statement?

Mr. PATTERSON. Wait until I finish.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators must observe the rules of the Senate. The Senator from Tennessee is entitled to the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. CARMACK. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado.

Mr. PATTERSON. Governor Taft continues—I was interrupted in the middle of his answer—

I should not say that if I had not direct evidence on the subject from General Funston, who says that Aguinaldo said the question was whether Luna should kill him or he should kill Luna, and he took steps to secure the death of Luna. The killing was at the headquarters of Aguinaldo, and Luna was shot by guards.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. CARMACK. Yes, sir.

Mr. PATTERSON. I had not quite completed what I had to say.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. CARMACK. Yes, sir.

Mr. PATTERSON. The record shows clearly and conclusively that the injection about the death of Luna was made voluntarily, without being called for by any question that was propounded, and, so far as I was concerned, it was the first intimation I had ever had that a charge of that kind had been placed at Aguinaldo's door by anybody.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. CARMACK. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I want to get some light from some lawyer, and my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] had better not get out of reach. I want to ask him if it is not a rule of evidence that where a witness himself is obtainable you can not take hearsay or secondary evidence? Is not that a rule of law?

Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator ask me that question?

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes; I ask that question of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator examine me as an expert?

Mr. TILLMAN. I will examine the Senator as an expert. I am a mere farmer, and I want to get the best legal advice I can without paying for it. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPOONER. I will say to the Senator that the rule is that the best evidence that can be produced should be produced.

Mr. TILLMAN. Then why not take Aguinaldo's own statement in defense of his own reputation, that being the best evidence available, as to charges that have been brought in here rather surreptitiously, so to speak, or indirectly? Is it not a matter obligatory upon us as a people not to smirch this man's character by these charges, bandied to and fro here, when he is our prisoner and can speak for himself if he is allowed an opportunity to do so, but the committee will not bring him here?

Mr. SPOONER. Does not the Senator think this controversy had better be referred to the Court of Claims——

Mr. TILLMAN. I do not know what the Court of Claims have got to do with it.

Mr. SPOONER. Or some other court to dispose of it?

Mr. TILLMAN. The courts have nothing to do with this subject, but it is pending here, and we are wasting a good deal of time apparently in trying to establish the fact that Governor Taft, voluntarily and without any just occasion, brought an accusation against Aguinaldo. That is the charge that is made, as I understand it, and I submit to the Senate, to Senators, and to the committee that it is due to their own self-respect to have this witness examined and let us know what he has got to say about the Philippine situation. He knows more than anybody else knows as to whether he told Funston what has been alleged or not.

Mr. McCOMAS. If the Senator from South Carolina will allow me, as a farmer, if he gives his note for fertilizer, and the note is overdue and the limitation passed—it has not happened to him, but it has perhaps happened to some of his neighbors—and he admitted to a third person that he owed the debt and would pay it, that form of admission is often the most convenient, ordinary, and useful testimony. The admission of Aguinaldo, himself interested, that he had procured the assassination of Luna would be in law an admission among the highest character of testimony to be used in the elucidation of a question of fact.

Mr. TILLMAN. The former professor of law, who has evoluted into the Senate, has given us his profound disquisition on this matter, and I may be pardoned just now for asking him a question. The question I want to ask him is this: Is there any evidence, except Governor Taft's, that Aguinaldo made this statement to General Funston?

Mr. McCOMAS. Yes.

Mr. TILLMAN. Would not Aguinaldo's evidence, if he said he did not make the statement, have as much right to be believed as that of Funston?

Mr. McCOMAS. It has been said by Aguinaldo—and it has not been denied—and perhaps the admissions have been repeated. When a man admits a fact against his own interests, I need no further evidence to satisfy my mind.

Mr. TILLMAN. How do you know he has admitted it?

Mr. McCOMAS. Then I suppose if there were somewhere in jail a man who had admitted guilt of a crime, the Senator from South Carolina would hold that a dozen admissions would not do. He must have a jail delivery and bring every man who was thus involved by his own admission with respect to a particular transaction. It can not be done. It is not practical.

Mr. TILLMAN. Is there any other witness besides Governor Taft who repeats what General Funston told him—that Aguinaldo had admitted that he killed Luna?

Mr. McCOMAS. I have not the time now, but there are half a dozen circumstances and at least three persons, but I can not state them now.

Mr. TILLMAN. Here we are, as a Senate, investigating the Philippines, and here is the former president of the Philippine republic, autocracy, or whatever you may call it——

Mr. McCOMAS. Dictator.

Mr. TILLMAN. Charged with murder, assassination, the dirtiest and lowest form of murder, and you are going to brand him as an assassin on the hearsay statement of a man repeated by somebody else. You do not even bring General Funston here. I do not doubt that Funston told Taft, but I say decency demands that you shall have Aguinaldo brought here and let him speak for himself.

Mr. McCOMAS. Do you mean to say Funston did not tell Taft?

Mr. TILLMAN. I do not pretend to say that Funston did not tell Taft, but I say Aguinaldo may contradict him, and then the people would be allowed to believe for themselves.

Mr. CARMACK. I do not think he told the truth.

Mr. TILLMAN. Our President has had to gag Funston by an order disgracing him because he has been running up and down the country shooting off his mouth, to use a slang phrase, because he had a diarrhea of words and very little argument.

Mr. SPOONER. He is not the only man who has had that trouble.

Mr. CARMACK. I do not know very much about law, but I do know that the kind of testimony referred to by the Senator from Maryland would not be competent in any court in the world.

Mr. McCOMAS. It would not be? The Senator differs from every elementary book.

Mr. CARMACK. The idea of the Senator from Maryland is that it would be perfectly competent for John Smith to come into the court room and testify that John Brown had told him that Tom Williams had committed a murder.

Mr. McCOMAS. No.

Mr. CARMACK. I have attended court rooms and trials enough to know that there is no such rule of evidence, and there never was. That is the kind of testimony you have introduced here on this subject. If the Senator said something else, then it was not at all pertinent to the kind of testimony we have had in this matter.

But I did not intend to spend all this time upon the question whether or not Aguinaldo killed Luna or how he killed him. The point I was making is that it has been thought important to bring in testimony indirectly from Aguinaldo and from Mabini, and to retail it at second hand. General MacArthur has had conversations with Mabini, and he has repeated those conversations before the committee. He has had conversations with Aguinaldo, and he has repeated those conversations before the committee, and General MacArthur has testified that Aguinaldo is a man of character. It is said now that Aguinaldo admits that they can not maintain an independent government in the Philippine Islands.

It is said that he has taken the oath of allegiance to the United States; that he has acknowledged the sovereignty of the United States, but still he is excluded from testifying as to conditions in the Philippine Islands on the ground that he is a traitor and is working to subvert the Government of the United States. They bring witnesses here to prove that Aguinaldo himself has admitted that the cause of independence is a failure, and that he has taken the oath of allegiance to the United States and does not intend any further to prosecute the war of independence, and yet his testimony is excluded because it is said he is a murderer and because he is a traitor to the United States.

Mr. DUBOIS. Will the Senator from Tennessee allow me?

Mr. CARMACK. With pleasure.

Mr. DUBOIS. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Tennessee to this very pertinent fact, and I am not reflecting on anyone at all. Yesterday morning the committee decided that Aguinaldo should not be summoned, and this morning, for the first time after that ruling was made, General MacArthur stated that Aguinaldo had told him that they could not maintain an independent government over there. He brought it in in his testimony without being asked any questions at all.

Mr. McCOMAS. What is wrong about that?

Mr. TILLMAN. You gag Aguinaldo.

Mr. DUBOIS. There is nothing wrong about it——

Mr. CARMACK. I will tell you what is wrong about it.

Mr. DUBOIS. Except that MacArthur may have misunderstood Aguinaldo, speaking through an interpreter.

Mr. CARMACK. And Aguinaldo may have misunderstood him.

Mr. DUBOIS. All of his state papers go to prove that he wants independence, and now for the first time, after the committee has decided that it will not summon him, you try to prove that Aguinaldo himself admits that they can not maintain an independent government. I am not a lawyer, but it strikes me as a layman that it is not fair.

Mr. McCOMAS. Did the Senator——

Mr. CARMACK. I decline to yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. McCOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. CARMACK. I decline to yield.

Mr. McCOMAS. The Senator will yield to a question?

Mr. CARMACK. No; I will not yield for any further questions on this line.

Mr. McCOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. CARMACK. I decline to yield.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee declines to yield.

Mr. CARMACK. I am trying to be as courteous as I can be, but I can not consume the whole day on one little question when other Senators wish to speak. Later I wish to put into the RECORD the cross-examination of Governor Taft on this matter.

Mr. PATTERSON. Let me read it.

Mr. CARMACK. I will put it in the RECORD.

Mr. BURTON. To what page does the Senator refer?

Mr. CARMACK. Page 373. However, I will read it. Here are the questions and answers.

Mr. BURTON. Will the Senator please state what the page is?

Mr. CARMACK. Page 373 of the Hearings before the Committee on the Philippines.

Senator PATTERSON. * * * Governor Taft, were you aware that it was the subject of an investigation by the previous Commission of which Schurman was president?

Governor TAFT. No, sir. I may have read it, but I do not recollect it.

Senator PATTERSON. Have you ever read Mr. Sonnichsen's book?

Senator BEVERIDGE. Whose book?

Senator PATTERSON. Sonnichsen's.

Senator CARMACK. Ten Months a Captive Amongst the Filipinos is the title.

Governor TAFT. I may have read something of his story about his experience in Ilocos Sur, but I do not remember any such incident as this.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PETTUS in the chair). Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. CARMACK. I do not yield.

Mr. BURTON. I do not want to ask a question. I merely wish to ask the Senator where he is reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas is out of order.

Mr. CARMACK. From page 373. It starts about the middle of the page. I told the Senator the page two or three times.

Mr. BURTON. I beg the Senator's pardon. I did not want to interrupt him.

Mr. CARMACK. It continues:

Senator PATTERSON. Are you aware that the following testimony was given on this subject in an investigation before the Schurman Commission and that the circumstances of the killing were as follows:

CIRCUMSTANCES OF LUNA'S DEATH AS GIVEN BEFORE SCHURMAN COMMISSION.

"General Luna and Colonel Ramon sought an interview with Aguinaldo at his temporary headquarters, at Cabanatuan, and were informed by the guard that he was absent. 'Not finding him there,' says the witness, 'he (Luna) became angry and insulted the guard, and when the guard wanted to seize him and his companion, they (Luna and Ramon) thought the man was half crazy, and immediately began shooting and the guard returned the fire.'"

And the following question was asked in this investigation:

"'Q. Did the guard fire at him?

"'A. All of them. They wanted to take him, but he had saber and revolver to defend himself, and they could do nothing else.'

"The witness added, in answer to a question as to the effect of killing General Luna there, that 'at first the people were much surprised, but afterwards they said it was better so because he was very cruel: '"

Senator PATTERSON continues his question:

Were you aware that an eyewitness had testified to that effect?

Governor TAFT. No, sir. I only knew generally that the circumstances were that Luna was shot at the door of Aguinaldo's tent or his headquarters by his guard.

The CHAIRMAN. That is unquestioned.

Then he goes on with a further statement which I will put into the RECORD.

Now, as I was saying, I did not intend to take all this time in discussing the question of the killing of Luna. I do not regard it as of such vital importance in this debate, but I simply refer to it because it is one of the things which has been brought up against Aguinaldo in the general charge that he is such a man that we have no right to summon him and bring him here to testify before this committee, when they say he has taken the oath of allegiance to the United States; when General MacArthur says he is a man of high character, and has abandoned all purpose of prosecuting any further insurrectionary movements against the United States; that he has confessed that the cause of independence is a failure. But in spite of all that they say he is a man of such bad character, a traitor to the United States, and should not be allowed to testify in regard to conditions in the Philippine Islands.

Here is Mabini, a man of high character, a man of high intelligence, a man who certainly knows a great deal about conditions in the Philippine Islands. General MacArthur has talked with him again and again, and extracted information from him, and he has retailed some of it at secondhand before the committee.

Now, in this way these gentlemen get all they want to get or all they care to put before the public from these men, who are thus indirectly made witnesses to support a particular policy, while the men themselves are not allowed to come and present the other side of the story or to detail the circumstances or to explain statements that are attributed to them.

There is Sixto Lopez, a scholarly man, a man who has written with remarkable intelligence about conditions in the Philippine Islands. They say he is a traitor, but if he can give information to the American people in regard to affairs in the Philippines the fact that he is fighting or supporting those who are fighting for their own country ought not to brand him with infamy or to justify the statement that he is not worthy to be believed on oath in a court of justice.

Mr. President, I have said there has been no great eagerness on the part of the Administration to inform the American people or to keep them informed as to the real facts of the situation in the Philippine Islands or with respect to facts of the most important character bearing upon the very question which we are considering every day in the Senate; that is, the question of our policy in the Philippine Islands.

Sir, here are some resolutions introduced by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], resolutions that certainly have a very direct bearing upon this whole question. How much money is being spent annually in the archipelago for maintaining the army? That is a fact we want to get at. Nobody except the Secretary of War knows, and he is silent. What is being expended upon the Navy? Nobody knows but the Secretary of the Navy, and he does not tell. For what purposes are the millions of dollars of revenue which are being collected in the islands being expended? Nobody knows but the officials in Manila, and their reports are of the most meager character.

I understand that the Senator from Texas wrote to the Secretary of War making inquiries upon this particular matter, and that the letter lay there for a month unanswered. Is that correct, I will ask the Senator from Texas?

Mr. CULBERSON. I will not undertake to be exact about the time, but I am satisfied it was fully a month before the letter was answered, and then it was not answered until his attention was a second time called to it, and the answer was a refusal to give the information.

Mr. CARMACK. That is right. The first time the letter was absolutely ignored—a letter from a member of the Senate; from a member of the committee charged with an investigation of all these matters.

Mr. WELLINGTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. CARMACK. Certainly.

Mr. WELLINGTON. It is just for a moment. I wish to state, in connection with the matter which the Senator from Tennessee is now discussing, that I directed a letter of the same kind to the same source of information and received no reply for quite a long time, and the reply, when a second letter of inquiry was written, was of a very unsatisfactory character.

Mr. CARMACK. That is the way information is being given upon this question. Letters to the Secretary of War from Senators who are seeking for information of the most vital importance to them in the discharge of their public duties—one of them a member of the committee charged by the Senate with an investigation covering that very question—are treated with absolute contempt. No notice is taken of them whatever. And when a second letter is written the Senator gets a reply refusing to give the information. A resolution has now been adopted calling for that very information, and there is no answer to the resolution.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. CARMACK. With pleasure.

Mr. CULBERSON. I will state to the Senator from Tennessee that I happen to have with me at my seat a copy of the letter of the Secretary of War in answer to my second letter, in which he practically declines to give the information, and in order that his exact language may be known to the Senate and to the country, so far as I am concerned I am willing to have it read at this time.

Mr. CARMACK. I would be glad if the Senator would have it read.

Mr. CULBERSON. I will state that my inquiry was in substance the inquiry of the resolution which was adopted on the 16th of last month, asking the Secretary of War to give me a statement of the amounts of money expended annually on account of the Army in the Philippine Islands from May 1, 1898, down to the present time, and his letter, which I send to the desk to be read, will show that he declined to give that itemized account for reasons stated by him, or failed to do it at all events.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, February 10, 1902.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your letter of January 17, 1902, inquiring as to the amount of money expended and the amount for which the Government is liable remaining unpaid, for equipment, transportation, supplies, and military operations in the Philippine Islands for each year of occupation thereof by the United States.

The expenditures on account of the military establishment, embracing the personnel of the Army, exclusive of the cost of fortifications, the armament thereof, arsenals, military posts, and other public works, for the fiscal years referred to in your communication were published in the annual report of the Secretary of War for those years, respectively, and are as follows:

1899	$234,480,206.51
1901	109,012,101.02

These expenditures include every item of cost incident to the pay, transportation, subsistence, clothing, equipment, medical supplies, and attendance of all the officers and men of the Army and all contingent expenses of every kind pertaining to the military service during the periods mentioned.

It has not been customary for the War Department to arrange accounts of expenditures with reference to the place where the ultimate service depending upon them is rendered. For example, expenditures are made for clothing and equipage, transportation, subsistence supplies, ordnance stores, etc., and they are charged against the respective appropriations on the books of the War Department, but no separate account has ever been kept of expenditures of the Army according to the different localities in which troops might be stationed for carrying on military operations. It is therefore impracticable to answer your questions without diverting a large number of clerks from the current work of the Department, which can only be kept up by their unremitting efforts.

Very respectfully,

ELIHU ROOT,
Secretary of War.

Hon. C. A. CULBERSON,
United States Senate.

Mr. CARMACK. We have had a great deal of discussion here about the brutal order issued by General Smith for the wholesale slaughter and destruction of people in that province, including everyone above the age of 10. Senators have said here that they had no intimation of anything of that sort until it was developed in the course of the Waller court-martial proceedings. It is true we have not had any definite information of any such order having been given. Yet the Administration and the War Department and the whole country were fairly forewarned months ago that just such things were being done in this very province.

On the 4th day of last February the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] presented a petition to the Senate signed by many of most distinguished citizens of the United States, including Carl Schurz, Moorfield Storey, George F. Edmunds, Judson Harmon, J. Sterling Morton, George S. Boutwell, Charles Francis Adams, and numbers of others, and in this petition I find the following quoted from the Manila News, an American paper published in Manila, which has been all through a supporter of the Administration and a supporter of the very conduct which it details in this statement:

The transport Lawton returned yesterday afternoon from a two weeks' cruise, touching at Catbalogan, Cebu, Perang-Perang, and Davao. On her outward passage she took 200 Ilocano scouts for the Samar service.

On the arrival of the Lawton at Catbalogan Brigadier-General Smith had been in Samar about ten days, and his strong policy was already making itself felt. He had already ordered all natives to present themselves in certain of the coast towns, saying that those who were found outside would be shot and no questions asked. The time limit had expired when the Lawton reached Catbalogan, and General Smith was as good as his word. His policy of reconcentration is said to be the most effective thing of the kind ever seen in these islands under any flag. All suspects, including Spaniards and half-breeds, were rounded up in big stockades and kept under guard. Among these were numerous presidentes of some towns on the western coast of Samar who assisted in smuggling rill to the insurrectos. A number of these rascals were gathered in and made to give up the proceeds of their traffic, amounting to thousands of dollars, which were confiscated.

That was published in an American newspaper in Manila, an Administration newspaper, on the 4th day of last November, and it was included in the petition presented to the Senate by the senior Senator from Massachusetts on the 4th day of last February.

But, again, in the same petition there is an extract from the Philadelphia Ledger, one of the oldest and most respected newspapers in Philadelphia, which is in political sympathy with the Administration. In a recent letter to that journal from its correspondent in Manila occurs the following passage:

The present war is no bloodless, fake, opera-bouffe engagement. Our men have been relentless; have killed to exterminate men, women, children, prisoners, and captives, active insurgents and suspected people, from lads of 10 up, an idea prevailing that the Filipino, as such, was little better than a dog, a noisome reptile in some instances, whose best disposition was the rubbish heap. Our soldiers have pumped salt water into men to "make them talk," have taken prisoners people who held up their hands and peacefully surrendered, and an hour later, without an atom of evidence to show that they were even insurrectos, stood them on a bridge and shot them down one by one, to drop into the water below and float down, as examples to those who found their bullet-loaded corpses.

This correspondent goes on to excuse it:

It is not civilized warfare, but we are not dealing with a civilized people. The only thing they know and fear is force, violence, and brutality, and we give it to them.

The new military plan of settling the trouble by setting them at each other is one that looks promising. We have now sent a thousand Macabebes to Samar to avenge the treacherous murder of Company C of the Ninth Infantry. They are hereditary enemies of the "ladrones" and go forth to the slaughter gayly.

Mr. President, a statement of that sort, coming from such a newspater and presented to the Senate of the United States by a man of such distinguished character as the Senator from Massachusetts, and signed by men of such distinguished character as the signers of this petition, does convey something which at least needs and requires investigation from the War Department. That was on the 4th day of February. Yet we have no evidence that any effort whatever has ever been made by the War Department or anybody connected with the Administration to find out the truth in respect to these charges. There is the very statement that is made in General Smith's order, that everybody above the age of 10 shall be killed, whether he has arms in his possession or not.

That statement, I say, was presented to the Senate and published on the 4th day of last February, and the former statement had been published in a Manila newspaper on the 4th day of last November. It was notice, at all events, coming from the source it did, that there was something in the Philippines which demanded an investigation, and no effort, I say, has ever been made on the part of the Administration or the War Department to find out the truth of a single one of these charges or these accusations. It was not until the matter was forced upon them by the reluctant investigation of a reluctant committee, and the committee began to drag facts to light and to show something as to the real conditions in the Philippine Islands, and not until the court-martial proceedings in the trial of Major Waller were brought to light and published in the American newspapers, that the Administration began to bestir itself and undertake something that it calls an investigation.

Why, Mr. President, this policy of suppression, of falsification, of misrepresentation, has been going on from the very beginning of our hostilities with the Filipinos. I will ask the Secretary to read a statement from Mr. Robert M. Collins, Philippine correspondent of the Associated Press. It is an extract from a letter written by him to Mr. Melville E. Stone, general manager of the Associated Press, under date of July 30, 1899, describing the circumstances which led to the protest of the newspaper representatives against the censoring of news by General Otis. This statement, which was written by him, and a similar statement signed by all the newspaper correspondents in the Philippines, shows that there was a deliberate suppression of information in the Philippine Islands from the very beginning, and that it was not done with any view to military necessity, but solely and entirely with a view to the suppressing of information that might hurt the Administration of the Republican party. I will ask the Secretary to read the statement I have marked, beginning at page 131 and ending at page 133.

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator will pardon me, from what book is it?

Mr. CARMACK. It is a book entitled The Other Man's Country, by Herbert Welsh.

The Secretary read as follows:

But when General Otis came down in the frank admission that it was not intended so much to prevent the newspapers from giving information and assistance to the enemy (the legitimate function, and, according to our view, the only legitimate one of a censorship), but to keep the knowledge of conditions here from the public at home, and when the censor had repeatedly told us, in ruling out plain statements of undisputed facts, "My instructions are to let nothing go that can hurt the Administration," we concluded that protest was justifiable.

Three hours of exceedingly plain talk followed. The general did not contradict our statements that the purpose of the censorship was to keep the facts from the public, but said that what we wanted was to have the people stirred up and to make sensations for the papers. We told him that there never had been any subject furnishing more good material for sensations than this war, and that he should be exceedingly grateful to the papers for handling it so temperately.

In that connection we reminded him that the stories of looting in soldiers' letters home had been little, if any, exaggerated. Davis and Bass told him that they had personally seen our soldiers bayoneting the wounded, and I reminded him that the cutting off of the ears of two American soldiers at Dasmarinas had been merely retaliation for similar mutilations of dead Filipinos by the Americans. (No one could possibly tell stronger stories of the looting and blackmailing of our soldiers than Otis has told, although he charges it all to the volunteers.)

We told him that we had refrained from sending these things and others of similar nature because we did not wish to make sensations. We told him that the censorship was purely for the purpose of giving the impression at home that everything was lovely here, otherwise he would suppress the local papers which print all sorts of clippings from American papers denouncing the Administration, and which kept the enemy posted on the position of every company in our Army, and even give advance notice of intended movements.

* * * * * * *

Recently I filed what I thought a most inoffensive statement that the business men who had appeared before the Commission had advocated the retention of the existing silver system of currency. The censor said: "I ought not to let that go. That would be a lift for Bryan. My instructions are to shut off everything that could hurt McKinley's Administration. That is free silver." I explained that the silver system here was not 16 to 1, and, with seeming reluctance, he O. K.'d the item.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Has the Senator from Tennessee yielded the floor?

Mr. CARMACK. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. I think the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD] desires to address the Senate.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Mr. President, I do not desire to go on at this hour if the Senator from Kansas wants to speak. I give notice that at the conclusion of the morning hour to-morrow I will address the Senate on the pending measure.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to enter into the discussion of this question. I interrupted the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK] because he had made the statement that General Funston was contradicted, first, by the statement he had published that Aguinaldo had told him he had Luna killed because he was afraid Luna would take the dictatorship away from him, and that Governor Taft had testified that General Funston had told the Governor that Aguinaldo had told the General that he had had Luna killed in order to prevent Luna from killing him; or, in other words, to use the language of the Senator from Tennessee, that it was a clear case of self-defense.

In order to show the very irresponsible statements that are constantly coming from the other side and the malevolent and unjust attacks that were made by the Senator from Tennessee upon General Funston at this time, I want to inquire what the basis of the Senator's statements are, and I will be permitted to read from the RECORD.

When that army was scattered the question was, What were the insurgents to do—whether they were to surrender or to make guerrilla warfare, or attempt to gather their forces and make a continued fight, as they had been making?

DEATH OF LUNA.

Upon that issue I have understood that Aguinaldo and Luna differed. Luna desired to continue the warfare as it had been conducted, in an open fight. Aguinaldo was for a guerrilla campaign. These two men were opposed to each other, at any rate, and Aguinaldo directed Luna's killing.

What is the necessary inference up to that time of Governor Taft's statement?

I should not say that if I had not direct evidence on the subject from General Funston, who says that Aguinaldo said the question was whether Luna should kill him or he should kill Luna, and he took steps to secure the death of Luna. The killing was at the headquarters of Aguinaldo, and Luna was shot by guards.

Will the Senator pretend for a moment that any kind of a fair construction of that statement is that Aguinaldo killed Luna in self-defense? Can any kind of a construction of that sort be placed upon that language?

Now, turn to page 373 and examine it as far as Governor Taft testifies upon this question. I read, beginning where the Senator read:

Senator PATTERSON. We will see. Governor Taft, were you aware that it was the subject of an investigation by the previous Commission, of which Schurman was president?

Governor TAFT. No, sir. I may have read it, but I do not recollect it.

Senator PATTERSON. Have you ever read Mr. Sonnichsen's book?

Senator BEVERIDGE. Whose book?

Senator PATTERSON. Sonnichsen's.

Senator CARMACK. Ten Months a Captive Amongst the Filipinos, is the title.

Governor TAFT. I may have read something of his story about his experience in Ilocos Sur, but I do not remember any such incident as this.

Senator PATTERSON. Are you aware that the following testimony was given on this subject in an investigation before the Schurman Commission, and that the circumstances of the killing were as follows:

CIRCUMSTANCES OF LUNA'S DEATH AS GIVEN BEFORE SCHURMAN COMMISSION.

"General Luna and Colonel Ramon sought an interview with Aguinaldo at his temporary headquarters, at Cabanatuan, and were informed by the guard that he was absent. 'Not finding him there,' says the witness, 'he (Luna) became angry and insulted the guard, and when the guard wanted to seize him and his companion, they (Luna and Ramon) thought the man was half crazy, and immediately began shooting, and the guard returned the fire.'"

"And the following question was asked in this investigation:

"'Q. Did the guard fire at him?—A. All of them. They wanted to take him, but he had saber and revolver to defend himself, and they could do nothing else.'

"The witness added, in answer to a question as to the effect of killing General Luna there, that 'at first the people were much surprised, but afterwards they said it was better so because he was very cruel.'"

Were you aware that an eyewitness had testified to that effect?

Governor TAFT. No, sir. I only knew generally that the circumstances were that Luna was shot at the door of Aguinaldo's tent or his headquarters by his guard.

The CHAIRMAN. That is unquestioned.

Senator PATTERSON. Mr. Sonnichsen in his book upon that question says:

SONNICHSEN ON LUNA'S DEATH.

"After stating that it was among the Spaniards that the rumors of Luna's assassination by Aguinaldo's orders were circulating, Mr. Sonnichsen gives the story as told to him by a young Ilocano officer (Lieutenant Villamor), whom he 'certainly put down as a sympathizer with the Ilocano general.' Villamor said that Luna had no mercy on officers or soldiers who shirked their duty or showed cowardice in battle, and that 'on several occasions he had culprits executed or otherwise severely punished for such offenses.' 'This severity,' said Villamor, 'combined with the fact of his being an Ilocano, caused a certain faction of young Tagalo officers to entertain a deadly hatred for him, as many of them had already felt the weight of his iron hand.'"

He then continues as to a statement of this Lieutenant Villamor:

"We as Ilocanos have lost a good deal of sympathy for the cause since then, but none of us have ever accused Aguinaldo of being the cause of Antonio Luna's death."

Governor TAFT. If the Villamor to whom that alludes is the Villamor whom I know, and I know three of them, if he is the judge whom we have appointed, I should place a great deal of credence in his evidence.

Senator PATTERSON. That is the statement in Mr. Sonnichsen's book as to the interview with Villamor.

Governor TAFT. I have never regarded it as a point that needed investigation by me. I can only state to you what has been told to me in Manila by various Filipino gentlemen in the course of casual conversation.

The suggestion made with respect to Aguinaldo's remaining in seclusion and not going abroad has been that he was afraid of being killed by Luna's friends. I do not think that is true. It has been stated, however.

Senator PATTERSON. It is very hard to curtail or suppress statements that reflect upon the integrity and honor of almost any man.

Governor TAFT. That is quite true, but what I do mean to say is that the general impression always has been—I have never heard it denied until now, although it is possible that if I had looked further into the evidence I should have found just the statement that you have read—that the killing of Luna was the result of a factional difference between him and Aguinaldo; that he was killed, as I say, by the guard of Aguinaldo at Aguinaldo's headquarters.

Now, it is not a question of much consequence as to how Luna was killed, as to whether Aguinaldo assassinated him or whether Aguinaldo killed him in self-defense. I did not interrupt the Senator because I thought or think now that that was of much consequence; but the Senator for some reason seems to have a very strong feeling against General Funston. He volunteered the statement here to-day that he did not believe General Funston was telling the truth, and then he proceeds to claim that General Funston had made one statement and Governor Taft had contradicted it. I have read all the evidence, as I am told, that Governor Taft gave about this matter, and I submit to the fairness of the Senator from Tennessee that when he makes the statement that General Funston was contradicted by Governor Taft, when he seeks to put that kind of an interpretation upon the language of Governor Taft, he simply shows that he is being controlled by feeling and not by a discriminating judgment.

Mr. President, I beg the pardon of the Senate for paying attention to this matter at this time. At some opportune time I may take further notice of the attacks against our soldiers.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD], I understand, does not desire to continue the debate to-day, and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], I believe, desires to go on with the sundry civil appropriation bill. I suppose when he returns to the Chamber he will ask unanimous consent to lay the unfinished business aside.

WM. M. STEWART,
O. H. PLATT,
J. L. RAWLINS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. S. SHERMAN,
CHARLES CURTIS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. STEWART. I ask permission to have inserted in the RECORD a brief statement showing the result of the conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The statement submitted by the Senator from Nevada will be printed in the RECORD.

The statement is as follows:

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL, 1903.

Amount of bill as passed by the House	$8,441,505.69
Net increase made by the Senate	858,834 19
Amount of bill as passed by the Senate	9,300,339.88

Of the increase made by the Senate of $858,834.19, the House has agreed to $638,517.41 and the Senate has receded from $220,316.78, making the total of the bill as agreed to in conference $9,080,023.10.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I suggest that the conference report be printed, and then lie over until to-morrow morning. Some Senators may want to examine it.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope that course will be taken, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made in the absence of objection.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent that the pending order, being the bill for the government of the Philippines, may be laid aside informally, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13123) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes.

Mr. ALLISON. Before the reading of the bill is resumed, I desire to have acted upon an amendment on page 56 which was passed over yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 56, line 15, after the words "shall be," the Committee on Appropriations reported to strike out:

Subject to the approval of said Government board and management and of the Secretary of the Treasury, as now provided by law.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Under the direction of the United States Government board and subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, and the number, compensation, and selection of persons not already in the Government service shall be in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury; and the appropriations herein made shall be so allotted and distributed among the several Executive Departments, the Smithsonian Institution, the National Museum, the United States Fish Commission, the Department of Labor, the Bureau of the American Republics, and the Library of Congress as to prevent any deficiency therein.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I ask leave to modify that amendment by striking out all after the word "herein," in line 15, down to and including that portion of the text proposed to be stricken out by the committee, and also including the word "Treasury," in the part proposed to be inserted by the committee, on line 22, and to insert in lieu of the part I propose to strike out what I send to the Secretary's desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Iowa to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "herein," in line 15, on page 56, it is proposed to strike out—shall be subject to the approval of said Government board and management and of the Secretary of the Treasury, as now provided by law under the direction of the United States Government board and subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, and the number, compensation, and selection of persons not already in the Government service shall be in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

And the number, compensation, and selection of persons not already in the Government service shall be under the direction of the United States Government board and subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. How will the whole proviso then read?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proviso will be read as proposed to be amended.

The Secretary read as follows:

Provided, That all expenditures made for the purposes and from the appropriations specified herein, and the number, compensation, and selection of persons not already in the Government service, shall be under the direction of the United States Government board and subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, and the appropriations herein made shall be so allotted and distributed among the several Executive Departments, the Smithsonian Institution, the National Museum, the United States Fish Commission, the Department of Labor, the Bureau of the American Republics, and the Library of Congress as to prevent any deficiency therein.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I believe there was an amendment adopted in line 2, on page 57, striking out the words: "Provided further, That the," inserting a period instead of a semicolon; and then beginning a new clause with the words:

The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to cause to be assembled at the city of St. Louis, etc.

I do not know whether that amendment was agreed to or not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment is agreed to.

The reading of the bill will be resumed.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill at line 20, on page 83.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "Miscellaneous objects, Department of the Interior," on page 84, line 2, after the word "expenses," to insert "including cost of all printing;" so as to make the clause read:

Census Office: The unexpended balance of the appropriation made by the sundry civil appropriation act approved March 3, 1901, for salaries and necessary expenses for taking and compiling results of the Twelfth Census is hereby reappropriated and made available for continuing the work of taking the Twelfth Census, and for all expenses, including cost of all printing, arising under and authorized by the act to provide for a permanent Census Office, approved March 6, 1902, including the purchase of necessary law books, books of reference and periodicals, and manuscripts: Provided, That estimates in detail for the expenses of the permanent Census Office for the fiscal year 1904 and annually thereafter shall be submitted in the regular Book of Estimates.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 84, after line 9, to strike out:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to cause to be sold as waste paper or to destroy all population schedules of the Eleventh and prior censuses of the United States. The population schedules of the Twelfth and all subsequent censuses of the United States shall likewise be sold or destroyed as soon as the results therein contained shall have been tabulated and published. All expenses arising and requisite hereunder shall be paid from the appropriations for contingent expenses of the Department of the Interior.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to assemble in the office of the permanent census all the schedules of the several decennial censuses of the United States taken from 1790 to 1900, both inclusive, and to cause to be preserved in the office of the permanent census the schedules of the First, Second, Third, and Eighth censuses; and he shall cause to be offered to the several States all or any portion of the schedules of the Fourth, Fifth, Sixth, Seventh, Ninth, Tenth, and Eleventh censuses relating to said States, respectively, and if said schedules or any of them shall be accepted by any or all of the States interested therein within five years from the passage of this act they shall be delivered to the proper authority of said State or States, and all of the said schedules hereinbefore last mentioned not distributed within said period shall be sold as waste paper or destroyed; and a like offer shall be made to the several States as respects the schedules of the Twelfth and all subsequent censuses, which schedules, when completed and the results published, shall be proffered to the States as hereinbefore provided, and if they or any of them shall be accepted within five years from the publication of the results of the said censuses those accepted shall be turned over to said States or any of them in like manner, and if said offer shall not be accepted in whole or in part within said period of five years the remaining schedules shall also be sold as waste paper or destroyed as hereinbefore provided. All expenses arising and requisite under this paragraph shall be paid from the appropriations for contingent expenses of the Interior Department.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] has offered an amendment to take the place of the entire provision reported by the committee.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. If it is in order, I ask that that portion of the amendment which inserts other language in place of that proposed to be stricken out may be so changed that the whole amendment will read in the way I sent it to the desk yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Connecticut will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In place of the words proposed to be inserted by the Committee on Appropriations, beginning in line 19, on page 84, it is proposed to insert:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to assemble in the office of the permanent census all the schedules of the several decennial censuses of the United States taken from 1790 to 1900, both inclusive, and to cause them to be preserved in the office of the permanent census. All expenses arising and requisite under this paragraph shall be paid from any general appropriation for the expenses of the Census Office.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I hope the chairman of the committee will, if he feels authorized to do so, accept this amendment, and if he does not that he will not feel himself obliged to oppose it.

Mr. ALLISON. Of course, while the Senator has the floor, I can not do anything that I know of. I will say, however, to the Senator that I am not at liberty to accept the amendment, but I shall be glad to hear what he has to say upon the subject.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, the House of Representatives, as it seems to me, did a very unwise thing, if I may so speak of that body without transgressing parliamentary propriety, in inserting the provision that—

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to cause to be sold as waste paper or to destroy all population schedules of the Eleventh and prior censuses of the United States. The population schedules of the Twelfth and all subsequent censuses of the United States shall likewise be sold or destroyed as soon as the results therein contained shall have been tabulated and published.

The provision includes the last census.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir; it includes the last census; that of 1900.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, I can not conceive of any reason for destroying the schedules of the censuses which have been taken in the United States. The Senate committee, I think, was of the same impression, and proposed an amendment to the House proposition to destroy which provides that—

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to assemble in the office of the permanent census all the schedules of the several decennial censuses of the United States taken from 1790 to 1900, both inclusive, and to cause to be preserved in the office of the permanent census the schedules of the First, Second, Third, and Eighth censuses; and he shall cause to be offered to the several States all or any portion of the schedules of the Fourth, Fifth, Sixth, Seventh, Ninth, Tenth, and Eleventh censuses relating to said States, respectively.

That is to say, by the amendment of the committee it is proposed to preserve certain of the schedules of the censuses and to keep them in the office of the permanent census, and as to the others to offer them to the States, and if the States will not take them, to sell them for waste paper or destroy them.

My amendment proposes to keep all the schedules and keep them in the office of the permanent census. A very great interest has been aroused throughout the United States with regard to this amendment by members of associations—literary, scientific, historical, economic, and otherwise—and I think if this matter could have the discussion it deserves throughout the country there would be almost a universal voice in the country against the destroying of any of these schedules and for the preservation of them all.

I understand we have a building for a permanent census in which they can be preserved, and if we have not room there, we certainly hope to have a hall of records. It seems to me the information contained in these schedules is not only valuable, but is going to grow more and more valuable as the years roll on. They will be a great deal more valuable fifty years from now than they are now. I think it is an everyday experience, almost, in the Interior Department that people are asking for information which is only to be obtained from the schedules of the early censuses, and the same demand will exist fifty years from now with reference to schedules of the censuses which have been recently taken.

I can not conceive of any reason for the House proposing to destroy all the census schedules that we have. We have already, in years past, passed an act providing that some portion of them shall be bound for their present preservation; and a certain portion of them have been bound, upon the theory that they were important to be preserved. The more recent ones have not been bound, and now comes this, it seems to me, an act of vandalism, a proposition to destroy them all or to give them to the States. Originally it was the practice of the Government, as I understand, that the schedules, after the census was completed were given to the several States.

It was found that the States were not keeping them and that some of them had been lost, and then a law was passed that they should all be returned to the Secretary of State. Those not lost or destroyed were returned to the Secretary of State, and since then they have been kept either in the State Department or in the Interior Department until this proposition which I present, which is that they shall all be preserved and kept in the office of the permanent census. If there were no room in the Census Building, which I understand there is, we could put them in the hall of records, or we could put them in the Congressional Library. Certainly I hope that these records will not be destroyed.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Connecticut has truly stated that the bill came to the Senate and to the Committee on Appropriations with a provision for the absolute destruction of all these census schedules from the beginning of the Government down to the present time. It also provided for the like destruction or sale of the schedules of all subsequent censuses after they were properly tabulated. So the Committee on Appropriations was confronted with the question of dealing with these schedules. Representing the committee as nearly as I can represent them, there seemed to be a variety of views in the committee as to what should be done. Without particularizing, some gentlemen of the committee were in favor of the House provision.

This difference of opinion, however, led to an examination of the subject, and whilst I do not wish to burden the RECORD unnecessarily, I think it should be stated that the Secretary of the Interior protested against the destruction of any of these schedules in a long letter, able in many respects, and also gave the history of the situation as respects the schedules. I have the substance of that before me, which I should like to call to the attention of the Senate. It will explain why the committee itself recommended the preservation of a portion of these schedules, namely, the schedules of the First, Second, Third, and Eighth censuses. The schedules are all bound——

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Up to the last census?

Mr. ALLISON. No; up to the Eleventh Census.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. That includes 1880?

Mr. ALLISON. It includes 1880. The Eleventh Census is not bound, and of course the Twelfth is not. There are some very interesting matters connected with these early censuses.

The First Census, taken in 1790, consists of 26 volumes. The committee thought we would be able perhaps to find an opportunity to store those without any very great expense. The census of 1800 contains 27 volumes. The Third Census, that of 1810, contains 44 volumes. So those three censuses which are left contain 97 volumes in all.

Mr. TELLER. How many are there all told?

Mr. ALLISON. Four thousand six hundred and sixteen volumes. The number of volumes of the Tenth Census is 1,329; of the Ninth Census, that of 1870, 826. The Eighth Census schedules are to be preserved with a particular view. That was the census immediately preceding the civil war, and we thought there were in them a great many things of value as respects our country which ought to be preserved in the interest of historical accuracy.

We propose to preserve by our amendment 926 volumes, plus 97, making 1,023, or about one-fourth of all the volumes that are bound.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to ask the Senator what is the objection to taking care of them all and keeping them all? Is it simply the question of storage?

Mr. ALLISON. I think that was the principal objection made, that they were of no historical value, especially the schedules relating to population, which are the schedules the House proposed to destroy.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Why is the census of 1860 to be preserved from destruction rather than any other census?

Mr. ALLISON. I mentioned the fact that it was considered by some members of the committee; in fact, I think it was agreed to by all the members of the committee that it marked the period immediately preceding the civil war, and that the schedule would, at some time in the future, be very valuable historically.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do not see, if the Senator will excuse me, why the census immediately preceding the war is any more valuable than the one immediately following it.

Mr. TELLER. I was about to make that suggestion—that if the census preceding the war is to be preserved, it seems to me the one that followed immediately after should be—that is, the census of 1870.

Mr. ALLISON. Senators, of course, may not be able to see quite as clearly as the committee did why the schedules of that census especially should be preserved if we were to burn the rest of them.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to say that I think before these schedules are disposed of by destruction there ought to be somebody authorized, a committee or somebody, to look into this question. It has not been examined by anyone.

Mr. ALLISON. It has been examined pretty thoroughly by the Secretary of the Interior and people in his office.

Mr. TELLER. He does not want them destroyed?

Mr. ALLISON. He does not wish to have them destroyed.

Mr. TELLER. If we are to act contrary to his wishes it seems to me we ought to have somebody to look over the matter and see whether or not he is right. I think the best thing we can do is to keep these until a later period, because in the new census building there will be plenty of room until we get ready to take the next census, and by that time I should hope we would be able to build the hall of records.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. There is one other thing which I did not speak of, but in which I think there must be some force, and that is that the tabulations and published volumes of the results of the census do not include all the facts that are gathered in the census. Is not that true?

Mr. ALLISON. It is impossible, of course, for those publications to contain more than a synopsis. For instance, all the earlier censuses were taken in schedules containing a hundred names. But I think, beginning with 1870, perhaps 1880, the schedules were changed, so that as respects population and the usual questions answered in the schedules the census was taken by families, and thus the number of population schedules was very largely increased. I think in the last census—the one just taken—there are about 13,000,000 individual schedules, covering every family in the United States, and it was in view of those who specially think they ought to be destroyed that there would be such an accumulation of these schedules in the near future as to make it impossible to find room in the ordinary building for their preservation.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. When that does occur, it seems to me, it will be time enough to go into the business of destruction. Of course this is a great country——

Mr. ALLISON. I think so.

Mr. TELLER. With 13,000,000 families, it ought to be.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. And all the records of the Government increase in bulk as the country increases.

We used to publish the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in a very small space, but now it is increasing at a rate, owing to the unlimited debates which we have, in this and the other branch of Congress, where it has become very cumbersome, and it will become much more cumbersome in the future unless there is a change made in the way of preserving the thoughts and wisdom of Senators and Representatives. But I should not think for a moment, because it has become cumbersome, because no private library has room to store all the volumes of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and all those which are to accumulate in the future, that we ought to go to work and burn the volumes or sell them for waste paper. Still I think there would be just about as much sense in it as there would be in the destruction of census schedules.

I hope the Senator from Iowa will so insist upon this proposed amendment, but that he will accept an amendment to preserve them all, and then it will go to the House, and the Senate conferees will have to have it out with the House conferees.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Connecticut seems to overlook the fact that in a large degree the Appropriations Committee were in accord with him, because we do not provide for the destruction of any of these schedules. We provide that certain of them shall be preserved in the archives of this great country of ours, as was well stated by the Senator from Connecticut. Then we provide that certain others of them may be offered to the several States. I gave such notice as I could give that I would be responsible for the State of Iowa taking all the volumes and schedules that might from time to time be gathered in that State, because I think our people would have a sufficient interest in its progress and growth and development to have at least the schedules of the State of Iowa preserved. I have no doubt a good many other States will follow the example which I think will be set by my own.

But the Senator will observe that the amendment proposed by the committee is an alternative to an amendment for absolute destruction, and I think the committee generally agreed that it was wise and better at least to give the States an opportunity of preserving these schedules if they desired to do so. Our amendment was somewhat carefully prepared with that view. I do not like myself to see an amendment prepared so carefully mutilated in a very short space of time on motion of the Senator for Connecticut. I would rather, if he will allow me, to pass from this amendment, as the Senate is rather thin, a quorum of course being present. At some stage of the debate I shall be glad to insert in the RECORD a printed statement which I have gathered in some way giving a very accurate historical review of these schedule tabulations, etc.

Mr. TELLER. Put in the RECORD the Secretary's letter.

Mr. ALLISON. I also desire to put in the RECORD a letter addressed to the Director of the Census by Mr. Wines, the Assistant Director of the Census, who has had much experience in statistical matters. Both of these documents I will say are not only valuable for the facts they contain, but the letter of Mr. Wines is also valuable as it supports the view of the Senator from Connecticut. I think it due to these administrative officers that they should have an opportunity of presenting their views.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEAN in the chair). Without objection, the papers will be printed in the RECORD.

The papers referred to are as follows:

Through the one hundred and ten years of American census taking these original schedules have been preserved with great care, and the schedules to and including 1880 have been bound up into 4,616 volumes. The plan of enumeration was changed at the Eleventh Census, 1890, by the use of a separate schedule for each family, instead of entering 100 names on a schedule, as was done at the previous census. This change multiplied the schedules to nearly 13,000,000, and, although the census of 1900 returned to the former method of entry, our vast population increased the total of schedules to nearly 8,000,000. No attempt has been made to bind the schedules of either of the last two censuses, and the packages are piled away in storerooms.

All the schedules for the first century of the census are in the custody of the Interior Department. Those for the First to the Fourth Census, inclusive, are in a room on the first floor of the Patent Office, and those for the Fifth to the Tenth, inclusive, are stored on the top floor of the Interior Department building, between F and G and Seventh and Ninth streets. The schedules for the Eleventh Census are stored in the basement of the Union Building, in G street, and those for the Twelfth Census are in the possession of the Census Office.

The original census schedules for the first four censuses are in bound volumes, as follows:

"First Census, 1790, 26 volumes of original population schedules; Second Census, 1800, 27 volumes of original population schedules; Third Census, 1810, 44 volumes of original population schedules; Fourth Census, 1820, 74 volumes of original population schedules and 22 volumes of original manufacturing schedules; total, 193 volumes."

The original census schedules for the Fifth to Tenth Censuses, inclusive, are in bound volumes, as follows:

"Fifth Census, 1830, 190 volumes of original population schedules; Sixth Census, 1840, 273 volumes of original population schedules and 31 volumes of original industries schedules; total for 1840, 304 volumes.

"Seventh Census, 1850, 669 volumes of original population schedules, 101 volumes of original agricultural schedules, 32 volumes of original mortality schedules, 20 volumes of original social statistics, and 21 volumes of original industries schedules; total, 843 volumes.

"Eighth Census, 1860, 760 volumes of original population schedules, 108 volumes of original agriculture schedules, 18 volumes of original manufacturing schedules, 21 volumes of original mortality schedules, and 19 volumes of original social statistics; total, 926 volumes.

"Ninth Census, 1870, 649 volumes of original population schedules, 114 volumes of original agriculture schedules, 28 volumes of original mortality schedules, 4 volumes of original social statistics, and 31 volumes of original industries schedules; total, 826 volumes.

"Tenth Census, 1880, 824 volumes of original population schedules, 322 volumes of original agriculture schedules, 72 volumes of original manufacturing schedules, 51 volumes of original mortality schedules, and 60 volumes of original defective, dependent, and delinquent schedules; total, 1,329 volumes."

There are also 5 volumes of original population schedules for Minnesota Territory, taken in 1857.

The total number of volumes in which the original schedules are bound is 4,616, including 5 for the census of Minnesota Territory taken in 1857. The number of volumes required to contain the schedules for each census is as follows:

First Census, 1790, 26 volumes; Second Census, 1800, 27 volumes; Third Census, 1810, 44 volumes; Fourth Census, 1820, 96 volumes; Fifth Census, 1830, 190 volumes; Sixth Census, 1840, 304 volumes; Seventh Census, 1850, 843 volumes; Eighth Census, 1860, 926 volumes; Ninth Census, 1870, 826 volumes; Tenth Census, 1880, 1,329 volumes; total, 4,616 volumes.

Probably no matter-of-fact American would quarrel with the Government for destroying the schedules for 1890 and 1900. There are two evident reasons for thus disposing of the schedules for these two decades. The first is that the system of electrical tabulation, invented between 1880 and 1890, and applied for the first time to the tabulation of the latter census, tabulates and combines facts with such marvelous rapidity and accuracy that practically all the facts likely to be of statistical value, whether singly or in groups, have been drawn off, and the schedules of these two censuses may be said to have been wrung dry. The other reason is that the enormous number of schedules makes their retention, even if it were clear that they possessed some value, a very great burden upon the Government. The error which the House has fallen into seems to be a failure to distinguish between these recent burdensome and comparatively valueless schedules and the earlier ones, which are not subject to any of these objections, but, on the contrary, deserve preservation by every consideration of good sense and sentiment.

Prior to 1890 all tabulation was done by hand, involving an amount of labor so great in 1880 and involving so much expenditure that the tabulation of certain tables of nativity was suspended when the work for the whole country was about half completed, and from the data obtained up to that point the remainder of the table was "estimated." Moreover, because of the labor and expense the conjugal condition shown by the schedules was not tabulated at all. Therefore the statistics of that subject are not of record back of 1890, but the data for the previous decade are available from the schedules at any time desired, and could be tabulated by the electrical system at comparatively small expense at any time. It is probably only a question of time when this subject will become as serious in the United States as it is now in France and elsewhere. Similar arguments apply to the schedules of the Ninth, Eighth, and Seventh censuses—1870, 1860, and 1850—which all belong to the class known as the modern census.

The schedules for all the earlier censuses, from the Sixth back to the First, constitute only 687 volumes. The reasons for preserving these volumes are entirely different from the practical ones mentioned above in connection with the group of volumes from 1880 back to 1850, inclusive. The volumes for 1840, 1830, 1820, 1810, and 1800 are valuable as sources of national and family history. They were prepared before the days or general use of all the great inventions which revolutionized the succeeding decades. The country was thinly settled; parts of the continent now set off into populous and powerful States were inhabited then by hardy pioneers. Indeed, in such localities the Indians and the buffalo were the most numerous inhabitants. Difficulties of communication isolated the States, national characteristics were not developed, and private records were carelessly kept. The national decennial record, therefore, becomes of priceless value. It is the official record, by the name of the citizen and the facts about him, of communities which literally have been transformed.

The schedules for 1830 and 1840, for example, would tell the story of the origin and rise of Chicago, with the name and record of each one of the handful of energetic citizens who launched that great community on its successful career. How great is the historical value of these early schedules and their importance to the student and genealogist can readily be surmised.

Quite apart from their actual value, these early volumes are interesting on their own account. Printed schedules were not used before 1830. Paper was scarce and expensive, and the early enumerators used whatever they found at hand. The early volumes, therefore, contain the most extraordinary collection of worn and age-stained blanks, the shape and character of which were as various as the men who ruled them by hand and filled them in. Some were found in newspapers of the period, one or two in wall paper, others were sent in neatly bound and lettered in colors. Many of the margins contain quaint comments, and the descriptions of local boundaries are often amusing and most interesting.

If all this can be said of the census schedules of 1800 to 1840, how much more can be said of those of 1790!

The 26 volumes of irregular, time-stained schedules of 1790 are a national curiosity. They are the original records of the first complete periodic census in the world. The names which there appear are those of every head of a family in the United States when George Washington was President. To men and women of Revolutionary ancestry that record has no counterpart, but its pages are as complete for the Tory as the Continental.

These early census schedules are the decennial entries in the national family Bible. They are of value to us all, for they contain the names and records of all of our American ancestors.

There is no good reason for the destruction of these volumes. They are already bound; they require comparatively little room for storage. On the other hand, sentiment and utility demand their preservation.

CENSUS OFFICE, OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR,
Washington, D. C., April 30, 1902.

DEAR SENATOR ALLISON: I inclose a letter from Dr. F. H. Wines, Assistant Director, who has some reputation as a statistician, concerning the destruction of the census schedules. You will note he does not approve of the destruction of any of them, and gives his views in regard to the subject. I think he represents a certain phase of thought that is opposed to the destruction of any of the records of the Census Office from a scientific standpoint.

Truly, yours,

W. R. MERRIAM, Director.

Hon. WM. B. ALLISON,
Senate Chamber.

CENSUS OFFICE, OFFICE OF THE ASSISTANT DIRECTOR.
Washington, April 29, 1902.

Hon. W. R. MERRIAM,
Director of the Census.

SIR: I have examined H. R. 13123, being an act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses, etc., as printed in the Senate (Calendar No. 1160), especially the paragraphs printed on pages 84 and 85 with reference to the disposition to be made of the census schedules, and have the honor to submit the following observations relating thereto.

The original proposal by the House of Representatives to sell for waste paper or to destroy all population schedules, past, present, and future, so soon as the results therein contained shall have been tabulated and published, appears to be based on a failure to appreciate their value as historical records, forming a portion of the archives of the Government. Our laws require the preservation of other records of far less importance. It is difficult to imagine why the population schedules alone should have been selected for destruction. The agricultural and manufactures schedules are far less frequently consulted.

The impulse to burn and destroy these records, which cost so many millions of dollars to produce, and which can never be reproduced, doubtless had for its occasion the request by the Secretary of the Interior for an appropriation which would enable him properly to bind the schedules for 1890, now stored in the basement of the Union Building, on G street.

It is perhaps unfortunate, for this as well as for other reasons, that in the census of 1890 the population was enumerated on what is known as "the family schedule." The theory of that schedule was that it would be generally written up by parties interested in the accuracy of the return, in advance of the call at each eouse by an authorized enumerator. This expectation was sadly disappointed. The result of the adoption of the family schedule was that in the Eleventh Census the population division had to handle 12,500,000 schedules, or thereabout, as against, let us say, 500,000 separate sheets in the present census, or what would have possibly made 400,000 sheets in 1890. Hence the immense accumulation of material requiring to be bound. All of the schedules prior to 1890 have been bound in 4,616 volumes, which occupy 1,400 or 1,500 lineal feet of shelf space. It is estimated that the population schedules alone for 1890 would occupy four or five times the space required for all the schedules of the 10 censuses prior to 1890.

The Senate amendment to the House bill is less objectionable than the original paragraph, because it provides for the preservation of the schedules of four out of twelve censuses, and because it grants to the several States the option to preserve those of other censuses, if so disposed.

I do not know why the schedules of the censuses for 1790, 1800, 1810, and 1860 are more valuable than those for other years. If any schedules are preserved, why not all? If any are destroyed, why not all?

I further question whether the proposal to sell census schedules to dealers in waste paper is not a virtual violation of the promise of the Government to respect the secrecy of the communications made to it in confidence.

Why should the records prior to 1890, which are already bound and available for reference, and require but 1,500 feet of shelf room—why should they be destroyed? Can any good reason be assigned for such an act of vandalism?

But even if the States should by their separate action rescue these records from the destruction which threatens them, which is very doubtful—some of them may accept the offer made in the act, but others will not—the information contained in them will be so scattered as to be rendered practically inaccessible. And the failure of a portion of the States to provide for their custody and care will destroy their completeness and thus greatly impair their value.

Before 1830 these schedules were in possession of the States. Then Congress required that they should be deposited with the Secretary of State. Many of them had even then been destroyed or lost Will not history repeat itself in this regard?

I am informed that no day passes without the receipt of letters at the Department of the Interior, many of them from courts of justice, asking for information which can be obtained from no other source than from the old census schedules. Their value increases with the lapse of time. The schedules for 1900 will be as interesting to students of history in 2000 as those of 1800 are to students at the present day.

If it were generally known that Congress was considering the question presented in these paragraphs of the sundry civil bill, a storm of indignant protest would be heard from the universities, colleges, and scientific and other learned bodies in the United States, from the National Historical Society, from the National Statistical Association, from the National Economic Association, etc., which would compel further reflection and discussion before what these bodies would regard as an outrage could be consummated. If it should be consummated without opposition or protest on the part of the authorities in charge of the Census Office, when the magnitude and the irreparable nature of the loss thus incurred shall hereafter become apparent to the scientific world, we should share in the reproach visited upon the heads of all concerned in it. For this reason I wish to enter and place on record my most earnest protest, as a statistician, as a citizen, and as a man interested in economic science and in historical research, against the inclusion of this paragraph in the sundry civil act as finally agreed upon and passed.

Besides, these records are needed in this office for further study in years to come. The statistical abstracts published in the census reports are merely tables of figures. They furnish no information as to individuals. At every census some of the inquiries formulated are not included in the fiscal tabulation. There are relations of the facts reported which have not yet been investigated, but for whose investigation the schedules contain much material.

When these new questions are raised and the answer is sought, it will be necessary to go over the former records again in order to secure the proper basis for comparisons.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

FRED. H. WINES, Assistant Director.

P. S.—Have I your permission to lay a copy of this communication before the Secretary of the Interior for his information?

Mr. ALLISON. Later on I will ask the Senate to pass over this amendment until there is a larger attendance in the Senate.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator speaks of this amendment as if it had been thoroughly discussed and examined by the committee. I believe the subcommittee did, but I do not recall any considerable examination given by the remainder of the committee. It was passed over rapidly and with very little consideration, I think.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator may be right as to the details, but the subcommittee went into it very exhaustively, and I may say that I prepared the amendment in accordance with the views of the subcommittee. The amendment was submitted to the general committee for such discussion as they chose to have about it.

Mr. TELLER. So far as I am concerned, I have never given my consent to the destruction of any of these records. I am like the Senator from Connecticut. I think when we reach the point where we can not take care of them it will be time enough to do it; and we have not yet reached that point. With a new Census Office and with a new census force, which we are putting in, there will be abundant room, at least for the next ten years, or until we take the next census, to take care of these records without any embarrassment to anybody, and in the meanwhile we can consider the question whether we shall dispose of them by allowing the States to take such as they wish or whether we will preserve the valuable features, reducing the bulk, or what we will do with them.

Of course, as this country grows the records are going to continue to grow. The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is getting pretty voluminous. That fact has already attracted attention, and suggestions have been made about adopting a method of eliminating some of the useless speeches. I saw recently a suggestion that in the other body the Committee on Rules might say what should go out, and I believe that met with favor on the part of the committee at least. I do not know how it was with the House generally. In this body we have not any committee with such extraordinary powers, but I suppose we could create one in a short time. We might perhaps reduce the RECORD to a volume, leaving the committee to determine what ought to go in and what ought to go out.

Mr. DEPEW. May I interrupt the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. DEPEW. In appointing a committee of this body or of the House of Representatives to eliminate useless speeches, would the Senator suggest that the committee should be formed of those who make speeches or those who do not?

Mr. TELLER. I do not think it would be a very valuable committee if it were formed of those who make speeches. I think, in order to be effective, it ought to be composed of those who are the silent members of the body. It would hardly do to compose it of the talkative members, I am afraid. However, I suppose we shall do nothing of that kind for a session or two, at least. But I hope we will preserve these records.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Certainly there is no objection to having this matter passed over. I desire that the whole Senate shall understand it. I have only a single word to say now, which is that from the explanation made by the chairman of the committee it seems to me I may draw the inference that the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate were somewhat alarmed, as I have been, at the proposition of the House to destroy these documents, which seem to me to be of great importance, and that, fearing they might not be able to hold their own with the House, they adopted something in the nature of a compromise; that is, to save some of the records and distribute the rest among the States.

I think we may as well meet the question squarely and have the Senate say that it is unalterably opposed to the destruction of these documents or of the scattering of them. They ought to be in the national capital. If anybody wishes to consult them, he ought not to be obliged to travel to all the States in the Union to get the information desired, and I hope when this matter comes up again before a full Senate there will really be but one opinion on the subject.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, the Committee on Appropriations had to deal with this matter, and we thought we dealt with it in a better manner than it had been dealt with elsewhere.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I think so, too.

Mr. TELLER. The committee did.

Mr. COCKRELL. As a matter of course, it is for the Senate to determine. It is a very important question. Some of the records are of historic value. I have had occasion once or twice to refer to the old censuses to get a genealogy, a history of transactions, etc., and I found them valuable in that respect.

As a matter of course, the thing that is pressing on the Census Office is room for the records. We are now about to make an arrangement to purchase the present building, and I hope if it has not already been agreed to, it will be.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Such an amendment has been agreed to on the pending bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. Did the Senator from Iowa offer an amendment appropriating $250,000 for that purpose?

Mr. BATE. Yes; and it was adopted.

Mr. ALLISON. It was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will inform the Senator from Missouri that the amendment has already been agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I knew we had authorized the Director of the Census to see if he could get the building upon satisfactory terms. I did not know the amendment had been agreed to.

But it is for the Senate to determine what disposition shall be made of these records. The Committee on Appropriations is not wedded, so far as I know, nor is any member of it, to any particular thing. We want to do what is for the best. We thought it was far better to distribute these schedules among the States, to keep certain important years for reference here, the years in which the people of nearly all the States would be interested, as some of the new States had come from the older ones and the records would be here. Then the later ones would be given to the States, and would refer very largely to their own population. If they are to be parted with, I still think that the best course to pursue. I do not think any better disposition could be made of them than has been indicated in the bill if we are to part with them, and that is for the Senate finally to determine.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, I do not wish to pursue this subject too far, for some of the most interesting of these census schedules appertain to the Territories. There is no provision here to distribute them to the Territories. One of the most interesting of all the schedules relates to the Indian Territory, where we have not any organized government as yet. I happen to know that in the Eleventh Census there was a vast amount of information in regard to the Indian statistics of that Territory which was not published at all and which can only be found in the original papers. That is only one instance where the original papers will have to be consulted to ascertain the facts which they are supposed to contain.

Mr. COCKRELL. As I recollect, a controversy came up about the size of the publication.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Exactly, and so the tables and the returns and what was said about them were cut down and put into a smaller compass.

Mr. COCKRELL. It was very greatly reduced, and some charged that it was the most valuable part that was stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be passed over for the present.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee if he will not consent to an amendment which I propose to the paragraph we have been discussing. The amendment is, after the word "censuses," in line 25, page 84, to insert what I will read:

And the Director of the Census is hereby authorized, upon the request of a governor of any State or Territory, to furnish such governor with copies of so much of said schedules, files, or records as may be requested, at the discretion of the Director of the Census, upon payment of the actual cost of making such copies; and the amounts so received shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States and placed to the credit of and in addition to the appropriation made for the taking of the census.

A bill embracing this amendment has passed the Senate during the present session.

Mr. ALLISON. That seems to be a very sensible amendment.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. That we passed. Is it not now the law?

Mr. SIMMONS. It passed the Senate, but has not passed the House.

Mr. ALLISON. It has not passed the House. I ask the Senator from North Carolina to waive his amendment for the present until we take up this question.

Mr. SIMMONS. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. Of course it involves an implication that all these schedules will be preserved.

Mr. SIMMONS. You do provide, I understand, for the preservation of the First Census.

Mr. ALLISON. The First, Second, Third, and Eighth.

Mr. SIMMONS. It is the First Census that I want. My State is now preparing certain records, and we are especially anxious to get the schedules of population of the First Census in order to incorporate them in that record.

Mr. ALLISON. I will not object to the insertion of the amendment later on when we take up the question again.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 86, after line 13, to strike out:

For completing the survey of and marking, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, of a portion of the west boundary of the Yellowstone National Park, estimated at 8 miles, at not exceeding $50 per mile, $400.

And to insert in lieu thereof:

Mr. ALLISON. Before passing from page 91, I move to insert, after the word "projectiles," in line 20, in the item for powder depot, near Dover, N. J., the words:

Increase of transportation facilities and for construction of new wagon roads.

And in the same line, before the word "thousand," I move to strike out "sixty-seven" and insert "eighty-seven;" so as to read "$87,700."

The amendments were agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued. The next amendment was, in the items for Springfield Arsenal, at the top of page 92, to insert:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the items will be passed over.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. All of the paragraphs under this head?

Mr. ALLISON. All down to line 10, on page 98.

The reading of the bill was resumed at line 10, on page 98. The next amendment was, under the subhead "Engineer Department," on page 103, line 18, to reduce the appropriation for improving the channel in Gowanus Bay, New York, from $130,000 to $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to page 105, line 10.

Mr. BATE. The last three or four pages are rather peculiar. They involve questions of rivers and harbors which belong to the Committee on Commerce, and I do not understand the matter. I should like to have it explained.

Mr. ALLISON. The committee hardly understands it either. The Committee on Commerce are in the habit of appropriating various sums for rivers and harbors, and then authorizing the Government to enter into a contract for other sums with a view to the completion of the work. It has been decided that the Committee on Appropriations has jurisdiction of this class of appropriations.

Mr. COCKRELL. On the report of the Committee on Commerce Congress authorizes contracts for them, and then they belong to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. ALLISON. After the contracts are made the Committee on Appropriations takes jurisdiction of all the appropriations that are to be expended for those particular improvements.

Mr. BATE. Without any further legislation or authority?

Mr. ALLISON. Without any further legislation. They are estimated for by the War Department, transmitted to the Secretary of the Treasury, and sent here and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SPOONER. Being already provided for by law?

Mr. ALLISON. Being already provided for by law. That has been the custom now for eight or nine years, and if the present river and harbor bill shall pass, it looks to me as though it might be the custom for three or four years longer.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. In reference to one of these appropriations, for improving the harbor at Gulfport, there was a contract made some years ago for the dredging of a channel there from Gulfport to Ship Island, the cost of which it was estimated by the engineer would be more than $600,000. But the contract was taken for $150,000 by Mr. Jones, of Buffalo, N. Y., I believe, who is president of the Gulf and Ship Island Railroad Company. He was to dredge the channel 19 feet deep. That will have been finished before the next meeting of the Congress of the United States, as I am informed by an official of the War Department, and it was necessary to put this provision in here in order to pay the $150,000. There is no provision for that in the river and harbor bill. That is the only item of which I have any knowledge.

Mr. ALLISON. To what page does the Senator refer?

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. The item for Gulfport, Miss., is on page 104.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is no provision in the river and harbor bill for any of these items.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. I did not know about that. I only know with reference to one of the items. I can not explain about the others.

Mr. COCKRELL. Some years ago great complaint was made against the river and harbor bill concerning the enormous amount that was appropriated in it, and thereupon reasonably small sums were appropriated for a specific object. The Department was authorized to enter into a contract to go through a number of years and not to exceed an aggregate amount, sometimes nearly ten times the amount that was appropriated. Then these liabilities created by law were imposed upon the Appropriations Committee to comply with. Only such as have been created by law and are continuing obligations are taken charge of by the Appropriations Committee. There is no trespassing upon the rights of the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, it seems to me very peculiar that the Commerce Committee should appropriate so largely as they have for all these rivers and harbors at this session and at former sessions and still have nothing to do with these items. There is, as I understand it, no expression in the legislation of this session in regard to this matter at all, but it just goes to the Committee on Appropriations. This appears to me to be very singular.

Mr. SPOONER. But the river and harbor bill failed a year or two ago. It would have been rather a bad thing if there had not been some committee to take care of these continuing contracts.

Mr. BATE. It seems to me some legislation should have been had. I am not undertaking to criticise the committee at all, but I think it ought to be looked into.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is legislation that creates this condition. It is laws of Congress that authorize the Department to make these contracts.

Mr. SPOONER. River and harbor legislation.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is river and harbor legislation, and now, after the contract is made, just like we authorize other Departments to make contracts, it is incumbent upon the Appropriation Committee to appropriate the amount that the contract calls for. As to the propriety or impropriety of the work, the Committee on Appropriations has no jurisdiction and no power to say a word. But I call the attention of the Senator from Tennessee to the fact that by placing upon the appropriation bill the appropriations to complete these contracts the Committee on Commerce are relieved from a large sum every year, and so the amount for rivers and harbors does not appear except in the bill making appropriations for rivers and harbors.

Mr. BATE. If I understand the situation, Mr. President, there was no legislation in regard to rivers and harbors last year, and so this must be legislation for several years back—two, three, or four years.

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes; some of it going back six or seven years.

Mr. BATE. There has not been any legislation for the last two years, and the continuing contracts have been going on all this time.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I understand this money is all really appropriated in the river and harbor appropriation bill by the Committee on Commerce. That committee, however, are not credited with it, but it is charged up to the Committee on Appropriations, because that committee has become the paymaster for paying debts already contracted by the Committee on Commerce in the river and harbor bill.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] states the case exactly as it is. The Committee on Commerce gets credit for providing for all these great works, while the expense is charged up to the Committee on Appropriations. [Laughter.]

I understand the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE] criticises our reporting the several paragraphs in this bill relating to rivers and harbors.

Mr. BERRY. I presume there is nothing personal in that.

Mr. BATE. I had no idea of criticising the Committee on Appropriations, but I thought it rather strange that such items should be contained in the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. ALLISON. There is but one explanation in reference to it, and that is that several years ago, under the guardianship and guidance of the distinguished Presiding Officer of the Senate [Mr. FRYE], who was then, as he is now, the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, that committee devised a scheme whereby appropriations should be made for particular rivers and harbors, and authorized contracts to be made for the entire scheme, thereby assuming—and I think very wisely in some instances—that a contract could be made to greater advantage if the contractor had the opportunity of dealing with the whole subject, as in the case of Galveston Bay—if I may be permitted to introduce a special case—where we provided for the expenditure of $6,000,000 for the improvement of Galveston Harbor. We did not then appropriate the amount, but we authorized a contract to be made not exceeding $6,000,000 for Galveston Harbor, to produce a waterway there, I think, 23 feet deep.

After that river and harbor bill was passed the Committee on Appropriations was given jurisdiction of all that remained of that $6,000,000 and not appropriated in the bill itself. So we kept on for five or six years in the Committee on Appropriations looking into the river and harbor laws to see how much had been appropriated and what was the limit of the appropriation. We have dealt with this subject ever since. Four or five years ago the Committee on Appropriations reported an amendment authorizing the Committee on Commerce to take charge of these appropriations, as seems to be suggested now by the venerable Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE]; but it was ruled out on a point of order, and the Committee on Appropriations were unable to get rid of the task.

Mr. WARREN. It is somewhat like the public building appropriations.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, these river and harbor appropriations are somewhat like the public building appropriations.

Mr. BATE. I understand really, Mr. President, that the Committee on Commerce found the amount too large for them to shoulder, and they tried to divide the responsibility and put part of it on the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. ALLISON. Not at all. That is not my criticism. I am simply stating that the law having been passed, the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations attached to this subject, because it is the duty of the Committee on Appropriations to appropriate money in pursuance of law.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, a good many years ago it was our custom to make appropriations for rivers and harbors, in this way: The engineers would make estimates of the amounts needed for the improvement of the rivers and harbors, and perhaps we would appropriate one-tenth of the total amount. The next time the river and harbor bill came in we might not make any appropriation at all. Then the work stood still until the whole benefit had perhaps disappeared.

I myself recall that I criticised that system in the Senate as much as twenty years ago and suggested that the only proper way for the doing of such work was to make a contract for the entire work, appropriate a certain amount, and then appropriate for it every year, as you would for any other contract. Some years ago that system was adopted, and I want to say that, so far as I have seen and observed, it has been a very desirable change from the old system. There is no question about that.

When a river and harbor bill failed, as would be the case once in a while, all the work upon the improvements of rivers and harbors stopped. We should not have had the Galveston Harbor in the shape it is now for many years yet under the old system. I think the new system is a most valuable and economical one; one that is calculated to carry on river and harbor improvements in a businesslike way. I have never heard it complained of until now, and I do not think it is susceptible of any complaint.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. Mr. President——

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to say a word further in response to the suggestion made by the Senator from Mississippi as to Gulfport, if that is the one.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. Yes, sir. If the Senator will allow me, I do not know that it is of any importance, but I wish to make a statement——

Mr. ALLISON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. I may be mistaken as to the party with whom the contract was made by the Government for the dredging of the channel, but a contract was made by the Government for the dredging of the channel from Gulfport to Ship Island, which was for $150,000, to be paid when the channel was completed to the depth of 19 feet. I was informed by the War Department, when I inquired there, that that work would be finished before Congress again met, that it was a proper appropriation, and that it should be made in the sundry civil bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand that an appropriation for it is already in this bill.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. I know it is.

Mr. ALLISON. And the appropriation is exactly for the amount estimated.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. I have made the statement in explanation of the question asked by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE]. The Senator from Tennessee asked how it came that these improvements in reference to rivers and harbors should be provided for in this bill.

Mr. ALLISON. The provision for the harbor at Gulfport, Miss., was contained in the river and harbor act of 1899.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALLISON. No appropriation was made last year, but this year there is an estimate for $150,000 and an appropriation of the same amount.

Mr. COCKRELL. I suggest, after this animated discussion, that we had better take a little rest.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Missouri suggests an adjournment. Before the adjournment is taken, I inquire of the Chair if all the river and harbor items have been acted upon?

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes; they have all been acted upon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has been acted upon down to the provision for national cemeteries, beginning in line 11 on page 105.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, May 1, 1902.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father who art in heaven, from whom cometh our noblest and highest ambition, help us with firm resolve and lofty endeavors to satisfy the demands of our better nature in all that we undertake this day, and hear us when we pray for the member who is so near to death's door. Restore him, we beseech Thee, if it is in accordance with Thy will, to life and strength, that he may return to the place which he has so faithfully and nobly filled these many years. Hear us in the name of Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read.

CORRECTION.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Texas wish to correct the Journal or the RECORD?

Mr. LANHAM. I wish to correct the Journal. The application of my colleague [Mr. RANDELL of Texas] on yesterday for leave of absence was intended to be for three weeks, and I notice the Clerk read three days. I would like to have the correction made in accordance with the fact.

The SPEAKER. The correction will be made as indicated by the gentleman from Texas. Without objection, the Journal will stand as approved.

There was no objection.

MILITARY OPERATIONS IN THE ISLAND OF SAMAR.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs to submit the following report on a privileged resolution, No. 231.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the question of who is primarily responsible for orders which Gen. Jacob Smith, United States Army, is alleged to have issued (and which by the public press he is alleged to have admitted to have issued) relating to military operations in Samar, Philippine Islands, is involved in doubt and is a matter of public interest: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives, That the Secretary of War, if not incompatible with the public interest, be, and he is hereby, requested to furnish to the House a copy of all orders and instructions which have been forwarded to the commanding military officer in the Philippine Islands relating to the conduct of military operations in the island of Samar, and especially those orders issued prior to and relating to the campaign of said General Smith in said island of Samar.

With the following amendment recommended by the Committee on Military Affairs:

Strike out the preamble.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as the preamble of this resolution has been stricken out, does not the gentleman from Iowa think it would be well——

Mr. HULL. We struck out the preamble because it recites simply what appears in the newspaper, and we did not regard it as adding anything to the resolution.

Mr. BURLESON. I make no point about that; but inasmuch as you have stricken out the preamble, does not the gentleman think he ought to specify what particular Smith is referred to?

Mr. HULL. The whole resolution refers to the island of Samar, and General Smith is the only one in command in the island of Samar.

Mr. BURLESON. I suggest that the gentleman insert the words "Jacob H."

Mr. HULL. I have no objection to that, although it seems to me that it is definite enough as it is.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Texas send up his amendment?

Mr. BURLESON. I will. It is to insert "Jacob H." after the word "General" in line 8.

The Clerk read the amendment as follows:

In line 8, after the word "General," insert the words "Jacob H."

The amendment was agreed to.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I am also instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs to report back the resolution which I send to the desk, with the recommendation that it lie on the table.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas it is stated in the public press that at a court-martial held in Manila, P. I., April 25, 1902, Gen. Jacob H. Smith, an officer of the United States Army, charged with conduct prejudicial to good order and discipline, counsel for defense admitted that General Smith gave instructions to Major Waller to kill and burn and make Samar a howling wilderness; that he wanted everybody killed capable of bearing arms, and that he did specify all over 10 years of age: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, requested to report to the House of Representatives if said orders were issued with the knowledge and approval of the War Department; and if not, be it further

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, requested to ascertain and report to the House of Representatives whether said orders were issued by General Smith acting on his own responsibility or under the instructions of any superior officer.

The report of the committee was as follows:

Your committee having reported House resolution No. 231, which is for a similar purpose, recommend that this resolution lie on the table.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee that the resolution lie on the table.

The report was agreed to.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call attention to the bill (H. R. 13480) to provide an American register for the steamer Brooklyn. This bill, by an erroneous reference, went to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and was reported by that committee. I ask that the bill be recommitted to the same committee, and that then the reference be changed to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. I have spoken with the chairman of that committee, and he agrees with me that this course is proper.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks that House bill 13480, now upon the Private Calendar, having been reported by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, be recommitted to that committee, and that then the reference be changed to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. Without objection, the change of reference will be made.

LANDS IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. BRUNDIDGE, by unanimous consent, submitted the views of a minority of the Committee on the Public Lands on the bill (H. R. 2025) to provide for the examination and classification of certain lands in the State of California; which were ordered to be printed.

EXAMINATIONS AND APPOINTMENTS UNDER CIVIL SERVICE.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I desire to present a privileged report from the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

Resolved by the House of Representatives, That the Civil Service Commission be requested to furnish to the House of Representatives the following information:

First. The number of persons on the registers of the Commission eligible to appointment.

Second. The number of persons appointed to office in the Government service of the United States from the registers of the Civil Service Commission from July 1, 1901, to April 15, 1902.

Third. The number of persons who ranked No. 1 on their examination who have been appointed to office from the registers of the Civil Service Commission from July 1, 1901, to April 15, 1902.

The question being taken, the report of the committee was agreed to, and the resolution was adopted.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I can not consent to the consideration of this bill at the present time. I am compelled to object.

REMOVAL OF PORT OF ENTRY TO ELIZABETH CITY, N. C.

Mr. SMALL. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

The bill (S. 3361) providing for the removal of the port of entry in the Albemarle collection of customs district, North Carolina, from Edenton, N. C., to Elizabeth City, N. C., was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2555 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, second edition, 1878, be amended by striking out the word "Edenton" in the last line of the first subsection and inserting in lieu thereof the words "Elizabeth City."

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SMALL, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MANATEE RIVER, IN THE STATE OF FLORIDA.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4768) to authorize the United States and West Indies Railroad Company, of the State of Florida, to construct a bridge across the Manatee River, in the State of Florida, which I will send to the desk.

The Clerk read the bill at length.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4768) to construct a bridge across the Manatee River in the State of Florida, which the Clerk has read. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SPARKMAN, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

LOUDON PARK NATIONAL CEMETERY.

Mr. SCHIRM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4932) providing for the extension of the Loudon Park National Cemetery, near Baltimore, Md., which I will send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase such additional land as may be necessary for the extension of the Loudon Park National Cemetery, near Baltimore, Md., to provide burial for such soldiers, sailors, and marines as are by law entitled to interment in said cemetery; and to provide for the purchase of said land and for the necessary improvement of same the sum of $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4932) providing for the extension of the Loudon Park National Cemetery, which the Clerk has read. Is there objection?

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker, observing the right to object, I would like to have this bill explained.

Mr. SCHIRM. Mr. Speaker, this bill provides for the extension of the Loudon Park National Cemetery. That cemetery now contains about 3½ acres. There is a certain space reserved for memorial services. Upon this space are built four monuments and a rostrum. It was reported by Lieut. Col. C. F. Humphrey, deputy quartermaster-general, to the Quartermaster-General of the United States Army in 1897 that on the lot set apart for burial purposes there was available space for about 165 graves. Now, to my actual knowledge, we have encroached upon the ground set apart for memorial services, and have already made about 120 graves on the space between the monuments and the rostrum. The bodies of the regular soldiers from Fort McHenry and of the veterans of the civil and the Spanish wars are buried in this cemetery, and unless this extension is made there will be no available space to dispose of them.

Mr. MADDOX. How much does the bill carry? I could not hear it as it was read.

Mr. SCHIRM. Fifteen thousand dollars, or as much thereof as will be necessary. There is a statement appended to the report here, which has been carefully gone over by the War Department and by the Committee on Military Affairs, and it is conceded to be a small estimate for the land and the work required for extending the walls and making the necessary improvements.

Mr. MADDOX. Was it reported by the committee unanimously?

Mr. SCHIRM. Yes.

Mr. MADDOX. This is a national cemetery?

Mr. SCHIRM. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SCHIRM, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

JAMES M. OLMSTEAD.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 13659) to correct the military record of James M. Olmstead, which I will send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to amend the military record of James M. Olmstead so as to fix September 8, 1863, as the actual date of said Olmstead's discharge from the service as second lieutenant Company F, Eleventh Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, the same being the date to which he was paid and upon which his service terminated.

Amend by striking out in line 4 the words "and directed."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 13659) to correct the military record of James M. Olmstead. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

THIRD AND FOURTH CLASS MAIL MATTER.

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 13169) relating to third and fourth class mail matter, which I will send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That third and fourth class mail matter shall not be remailed to sender until the proper postage has been fully prepaid on the same: Provided, That in all cases when undelivered mail matter of the third and fourth class is of obvious value the sender, if known, shall be given the opportunity of prepaying the return postage or accepting delivery to himself, or upon his order, at the office where it is held, upon the payment of 1 cent postage for each card notice given him, under such regulations as the Postmaster-General may prescribe.

Amend by striking out the commas after "himself" and "or" in line 8 and by adding a comma after "order" in line 9.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 13169) relating to third and fourth class mail matter, which the Clerk has read. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. RYAN, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. McCLEARY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 14019) making appropriations for the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 14019) making appropriations for the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 14019, with Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts in the chair.

Mr. McCLEARY. Mr. Chairman, at the close of the session last evening the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] had the floor with the understanding that he should continue his speech this morning, and he is to have such time as he wants to finish his remarks.

Mr. RUCKER rose and was recognized.

Mr. BENTON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. BENTON. I rise to yield such time to my colleague [Mr. RUCKER] as he desires to finish his speech.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already recognized the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, when the House adjourned on yesterday, I was discussing the proposition of authorizing and requiring the assessment and taxation of personal property in the District of Columbia. In connection with my remarks I took occasion to read the language of certain citizens of this District, as reported in the papers, in opposition to the enactment of such a law. I concede that these gentlemen have a right to the views they entertain, and a perfect right to express those views; but since they have publicly discussed pending legislation, I claim the right to refer to their utterances and to criticise them if the language used justifies criticism.

I quoted declarations of gentlemen to the effect that a law requiring the assessment of personal property in the District could not be enforced; that it would make liars of everybody, and that such a law would be a tax on honesty. I now read from the Washington Post of February 15, 1902:

Mr. Thomas Blagden said he personally opposed personal taxation. He wished to know how the assessor was going to get at the facts. He said it was a tax on honesty.

Another Richmond in the field who entertains grave fears that this law can not be enforced and that its attempt will corrupt and debauch the citizenship of this community. It is strange, passing strange, that so many of these self-constituted guardians of public morals and advocates of the rich men of this town are in such perfect accord and so harmonious in their views as to the practical operation of the proposed law.

If the statements of these eminent gentlemen who are "native here and to the manor born," and who profess personal knowledge, are accepted as sufficient to establish the proposition for which they contend—that a personal tax is a tax on honesty—then perhaps the strongest argument which may be made in opposition to the enactment of this law has not yet been made. The purpose of this legislation is to raise increased revenues for the District; but if its effect will be to put a tax on honesty, as these gentlemen insist, then the result may be disappointing to its friends.

But, Mr. Chairman, in whose behalf have these distinguished gentlemen spoken? Who doubts for one moment that the power behind the throne is the owners of the hundreds of millions of wealth, which, under existing law in this District, wholly, or nearly so, escapes taxation? To suppose that all the energy and activity we have witnessed is prompted by a worthy and righteous desire to protect and shield the poor or those in moderate circumstances would do violence to the intelligence of any gentleman on this floor. What prominent citizen has taken it upon himself to call a public meeting in this town in their behalf, or who has shown the courage to utter one word in defense of this class of people? What newspaper published in Washington has espoused the interests of the humble citizen or contained one line in advocacy of his cause? A tax upon personal property is of benefit to the poor man, because its logical and necessary result is to lower the rate of taxation.

A prominent Washington paper of January 28, 1902, said editorially:

The first requisite for such a personal tax scheme as the Post expects Congress to establish is a liberal exemption provision.

And further it said:

To assess real estate and mortgages on such real estate is to duplicate taxation. Let the tax reach visible assets, tangible effects, such as horses, carriages, etc., and let it avoid the inquisitorial feature and we are confident good citizens will not object.

Who are the good citizens who, after all opposition has signally failed, would welcome with approval a law which "avoids the inquisitorial feature" and imposes a burden upon "visible assets," "tangible effects" not borne by other kinds of personal property? Evidently the newspaper speaks for the rich, for the money lender, for the millionaire. Real estate is "visible" and "tangible," but the debt secured by mortgage is not.

In the absence of the dreaded "inquisitorial feature" this class of property—this token of wealth—might go into hiding, and thus continue to escape taxation. As far as possible double taxation should be avoided, but if either the mortgaged home or the debt secured upon that home must escape, then, I submit, every dictate of reason, every suggestion of fair play and common honesty requires that the mantle of protection should be thrown around the shattered home and give it the benefit of the exemption. But there should be no exemption.

Mr. CLARK. May I ask my colleague a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUCKER. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK. Do you not believe that if the right of suffrage was restored to the people of the District of Columbia, as I provide in a bill that I have pending here, they would pass such laws as would hunt out this concealed property and make it pay its part of the taxes?

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, answering in a very general way the question of my colleague, I desire to say that I am satisfied every bill he has introduced in this Congress possesses merit, but I am opposed to giving the citizens here any more liberties until they assume more of the burdens. I expect they ought to be allowed to vote.

Mr. CLARK. Couple the responsibilities with the privilege and throw the burden on them instead of having it assumed by the House of Representatives, and do you not think they would hunt up the tax dodgers like they do in the States?

Mr. RUCKER. Judging from the expressions I have read in the press of distinguished citizens of this town, I doubt the capacity of my friend, with all his ingenuity, to devise any scheme which would make a Washingtonian love to pay taxes. [Laughter.]

Other objections urged to the passage of a personal-tax law are of a character which tempts me to exclaim, in the language of Mark Antony, "If you have tears, prepare to shed them now."

Mr. Roessle, according to the Post, said:

> Taxes are so heavy in Washington that people are being driven to suburban towns in Maryland and Virginia.

Mr. Parker is quoted in the same paper as saying:

> It would ruin Washington to increase taxes now. It would drive away from here just the people we have to depend upon. The people who have large holdings of personal property, who would be most affected by the levy of a personal tax, are the rich men who have come here to reside. This is a resident city, not a business city. If a personal tax is imposed on the wealthy resident he will move away.

If this be true, if there be a rich man in this city so purely selfish and so very parsimonious and niggardly that he would change his domicile rather than submit to the just and equitable provisions of a law that exacts of him only the same reasonable tribute it demands of his less fortunate neighbor, then, in my judgment, the sooner he moves the better. If he has no broader conception of the duties of citizenship, if he has no loftier aspiration than to become a parasite upon the community, he is not a desirable citizen here and will not be elsewhere. But, go where he may, he will find no place of retreat, no haven of security from taxation such as is now being enjoyed by the owners of great wealth in Washington.

Yes, he may "take the wings of morning and fly to the uttermost parts of the earth," but when he alights, thank God, he will find on the one hand a vigilant assessor clothed with an "inquisitorial" blank to force him to uncover and disclose his wealth, and on the other a diligent tax collector, armed with legal process to compel him to "render unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's." And in the end, when hope has departed and he is engulfed in deep despair, he may be led to proclaim, in the language of the blind poet—

> Me miserable! Which way I fly is hell;
> Myself am hell.

[Laughter and applause.]

I hope a law subjecting all personal property to taxation will pass at this session regardless of all opposition that has arisen or may arise to defeat it. It is a shame that it has been so long deferred.

Mr. Chairman, in no section of the United States are the people treated with such unprecedented and inexcusable partiality and favoritism as in the District of Columbia. The time honored but almost obsolete principle of "equal rights to all and special privileges to none," which we all still profess to respect, seems to have no application here. It has been ruthlessly brushed aside and repudiated in our discriminating and fostering care of the interests and welfare of the inhabitants of this city and District.

The civil-service law expressly provides that appointments to public service in the Departments at Washington shall be apportioned among the States and Territories and the District of Columbia according to population as shown by the last census. This has not been done. This provision of the law has been ignored and defiantly violated in the interest of resident place hunters, in utter disregard of the rights of citizens of the States.

The law as administered has become a doorway which opens easily to the favored citizen of this city and enables him to reach the goal of his ambition—a desirable and lucrative position in public service—and then abruptly closes with a self-acting double-combination lock to the vast majority of applicants from the States. It seems to me the law as administered has become a farce and a fraud, and that it ought to be promptly repealed, unless its provisions can be fairly executed.

In a pamphlet recently issued by the Civil Service Commission I find this table:

SEC. 184. The following table shows the apportionment of appointments in the departmental service at Washington, D. C., from July 16, 1883, to January 1, 1902, under the census of 1900:

In this service the District is entitled to 9, but enjoys 263 positions. In the various departments at Washington there were on January 1, 1902, as shown by the tables just read, a total of 8,347 employees, of which the District was entitled to 37, but enterprising citizens here have managed to secure 718—nearly one-eleventh as many as the entire United States. These official figures render comment unnecessary. They show an abuse of the civil-service system which ought not longer to be tolerated.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in conclusion I desire to say the people of the United States are proud of their capital city, and heartily share with its citizens the worthy and laudable ambition and determination to make it the most beautiful city in this grand Republic. But I shall urge, as earnestly as I can, that the people here must perform their part of this great work. They must stop trying to evade the payment of reasonable and just taxes, and they should also learn to understand and appreciate the fact that all public offices were not created for their sole, separate use and benefit.

It would be well, too, for them to understand that members of Congress can not be swayed or influenced in the discharge of duty by being treated to excursions on the historic Potomac or by invitations to board of trade banquets, where the invited guests are regaled and refreshed with oratorical declamations on the necessity of increased appropriations and additional loans to the District—a torture, I fancy, scarcely less excruciating in its severity than the "water cure," which we are told is being administered without rebuke to our fellow-citizens in the Philippine Islands.

Nor will the ravings and vituperations of the press of this city deter any man in the performance of duty as he sees it. With unwavering confidence in the rectitude of his purpose, pursuing undisturbed the path of duty, ever conscious of his obligations to his constituency, he will view with calmness and serenity the venomed darts hurled by these papers, while enjoying perfect immunity and security from harm in the reflection, "They pass by me as the idle wind, which I respect not." [Prolonged applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. CAPRON having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 1964. An act to provide for a light-house keeper's dwelling, Ecorse range light station, Detroit River, in the State of Michigan.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

S. 312. An act providing that the circuit court of appeals of the eighth judicial circuit of the United States shall hold at least one term of said court annually in the city of Denver, in the State of Colorado, or in the city of Cheyenne, in the State of Wyoming, on the first Monday in September in each year, and at the city of St. Paul, in the State of Minnesota, on the first Monday in June in each year; and

S. 3316. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to create a new division in the western judicial district of the State of Missouri," approved January 24, 1901.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. MCCLEARY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask my friend from Missouri whether he is ready to come to an agreement as to the duration of general debate?

Mr. BENTON. I am not quite able to agree at this time, Mr. Chairman. I have been asked for an hour and a half more time. My impression is that it will be better to leave it open, and I think we will get through by 3 or 4 o'clock. I hope the gentleman will let the debate run on indefinitely for two hours at least.

Mr. MCCLEARY. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the time be controlled one-half by the gentleman from Missouri and one-half by myself.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be difficult to divide the time unless some definite time is set for the close of general debate.

Mr. MCCLEARY. What I had in my mind was the controlling of time by the gentleman from Missouri and myself.

Mr. BENTON. I am willing to make it definite and end it at 4 o'clock.

Mr. MCCLEARY. I accept the suggestion to close the debate at 4 o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that general debate may close at 4 o'clock, the time to be divided equally, and to be controlled by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MCCLEARY] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BENTON]. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MCCLEARY. Mr. Chairman, I now yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHATTUC].

Mr. SHATTUC. Mr. Chairman, during the time granted to me I propose to review in a very brief manner some of the aspects of the present industrial situation in the United States, particularly as it applies to the interests of the great army of toilers whose brawn and brain contribute so materially to the progress of the Republic and whose welfare should be sought by all. I am aware that, with the best intention to be thorough in my treatment of the subject, I will be able to touch upon the salient points only, but I also know that the good judgment of the members of the House will carry the argument to its logical conclusion. In considering the question it must always be borne in mind also that tremendous changes in methods have been made even within the last decade, new factors have entered into the problem, and long-held theories, applicable to former conditions, have become obsolete when applied to the new environment under which large masses of the workers are now employed.

ELEMENTS OF THE PROBLEM.

It is proper to consider first some of these elements of the problem that affect conditions of employment, labor environment, and rate of wages, such as machinery, immigration, industrial combinations, transportation, and policies of governmental control.

MACHINERY.

First of these in extent and importance is machinery. The inventive genius of the human brain is constantly alert contriving devices to aid, and often to supplant, hand labor in production. How prolific this invention has been is attested by the nearly 700,000 patents issued by the Patent Office; over half of which have been issued since 1885. These devices have not only made possible modern methods, but in many instances they have completely revolutionized whole trades. They have often caused a displacement of skilled by unskilled labor and an entire rearrangement of methods.

For example, the invention of the power loom and the spinning jenny transformed the manufacture of textile fabrics and transplanted the industry from the home of the cottager to the mill. The steam motor on land and sea brought closer together the producer and consumer, while the telegraph and telephone have annihilated space and made the nations of the earth next-door neighbors one to another. What the power loom and spinning jenny did for textile manufactures the McKay and Goodyear sewing machines did for shoemaking, and the huge factories of the shoe manufacturing centers of the country rival in size and importance the mills in which textile fabrics are produced. The invention of the Bessemer process and other similar improvements in the manufacture of steel have caused steel to supplant iron in a great number of uses and created vast enterprises of a character and magnitude unthought of a half century ago.

Electricity, as yet but partially understood and utilized, rivals steam as a motor, drives our street cars and private carriages, and gives us illumination by night the semblance of the noonday sun. And yet it is scarcely more than twenty-five years since the telephone was a toy and the arc light a sputtering suggestion of its present steady brilliancy. The American idea of interchangeability of parts lessens the first cost of the machine, reduces cost of repairs, and facilitates production. Hand labor is given a furlough wherever a machine can be fashioned to do the work of the man. All these changes have been for the great benefit of mankind as a whole, but they have brought hardship and suffering to those who have been supplanted by the machine and who have been compelled to learn a new trade, or the old trade in a new way, after many years, perhaps of greatest skill, given to old forms of production.

CHILD LABOR.

One of the first effects of the introduction of machinery has been the degradation of labor by the subdivision of labor and by the substitution of the labor of women and children for the labor of men. Incredible as it may seem in these enlightened days, there are States in the Union where children of tender years, as low as 6 years of age, are employed twelve hours per day, and when the mills are run by night these infants are worked from dark to dawn by the side of the adults. It is gratifying to state, however, that enlightened public sentiment in most of the States has compelled the enactment of laws taking children under 14 years of age out of the mills and factories and sending them to school, where they belong.

This sentiment realizes the impossibility of building up a sturdy future manhood and womanhood from a present generation of children who in their tender years are stunted in growth and dwarfed in intellect by confinement at hard labor in the stifling atmosphere of mills and factories. Therefore the workday has been gradually shortened in most States, as I have intimated, from the twelve hours of the past to the nine hours and eight hours of the present.

INTENSIVE TOIL.

But the reduction of the hours of labor has increased the exhaustiveness of toil. To maintain the amount of total product a swift machine supplants a slow machine and the employment becomes more intensive for the worker. Here again new phases of the problem are created. The available years of a man's life in which he may keep pace with the demands of machinery have been curtailed.

Already there is a disposition to set aside the man of 45 years of age and more, and put a younger man, more nimble fingered, in his place. Thus many men now become superannuated at the time of life when in former years they were thought to be most desirable by reason of skill and experience; and a demand is heard for some method by which to provide for the toilers whose usefulness in mechanics has ended and whose opportunity to get employment in gainful mechanical occupations has been barred by the age limit. In foreign countries this condition is being met by systems of state insurance, while trade unions seek to provide for it, in a limited degree as yet, by the establishment of "superannuation funds" for the benefit of their aged members.

IMMIGRATION.

Another serious factor in the problem is immigration. I will not enlarge upon it here, because in support of the bill on that subject, reported from the committee of which I have the honor to be chairman, my views are fully presented. In this connection it is sufficient to say that the addition of 5,000,000 immigrants to the labor supply of our country since 1890 and a current increase of 600,000 yearly form a menace to the labor of our land entitled to serious consideration. It may not be so perceptible now, but should a period of depression again visit our industries the oversupply can not fail to add to the disastrous effect upon American labor. The result will be a positive reduction in the standard of wages, the standard of living, and the standard of civilization. These immigrants have mostly settled in the manufacturing States and in the cities thereof, thus intensifying the perplexities of the situation should depression come.

TRANSPORTATION.

The three primary factors of national progress are production, distribution, and consumption. We must produce to have value; we must consume to make that value useful. When the producer and the consumer are widely separated, distribution sometimes becomes the most important factor. Hence the importance of the transportation problem in our national life. Occupying a territory with an area of over 3,000,000 square miles, not counting outlying possessions, our present attainment would have been impossible without the tremendous growth of our railroad systems, which, with a network of steel, unite the different trade centers. We had but 9,000 miles of railroad in operation in 1850. We now have more than 200,000 miles, giving employment to more than 1,000,000 men, and paying them over $600,000,000 a year in wages. We have 40 per cent of the mileage, and nearly as much of the capitalization, of the world. The value of railroad assets in the United States equals one-seventh of our total wealth, and the annual freight bill on the railroads exceeds $1,600,000,000.

MERCHANT MARINE.

In only one important matter does the United States seem at disadvantage in the struggle for industrial supremacy, and that is in her merchant marine engaged in foreign trade. While our shipyards built 483,489 tons in 1901, we had but 889,129 tons engaged in foreign trade, against 4,635,089 tons engaged in domestic trade and 1,706,294 tons engaged in the commerce of the Great Lakes. The tonnage engaged in domestic trade is a matter of great pride, but it is somewhat humiliating that 90 per cent of our exports and imports of merchandise should be carried under foreign flags. If press reports are true, American capital is about to take over bodily more than a million tons of the best steamships upon the ocean, and even though the flag they sail under will still be alien, the guiding influence and ownership will be loyal to America and to American commerce.

Pertinent to the subject of our merchant marine, past and present, is the following clipping from a recent number of the Scientific American:

THE FLEETS OF THE WORLD.

The latest records of Lloyd's Register show that the fleet owned by the United States Steel Corporation has grown to such proportions that it now ranks as the fifth among the great steamship companies of the world. Considerably the largest of these is the Hamburg-American Company, which owns 134 vessels of an aggregate gross tonnage of 668,000 tons. The next largest is the North German Lloyd Company, whose 120 vessels aggregate 556,000 tons; the third company is the British Elder Dempster Company, which owns 153 vessels, aggregating 431,000 tons. Then follow the British India Steam Navigation Company, with 122 vessels and 384,000 tons, and the United States Steel Corporation, with 113 vessels, aggregating 343,517 tons.

From the same source we gather that in point of total number of vessels owned and of their gross tonnage the fleets of the United States stand second among those of the world. Great Britain and her colonies, out of a total for the whole world (including countries possessing over 1,000,000 tons of shipping) of 29,091 ships, aggregating 30,600,510 gross tons, possesses 10,869, with a total tonnage of 14,708,205 tons, one-seventh of which is composed of sailing ships.

The United States owns 3,286 vessels, with a gross tonnage of 3,077,344 tons, of which two-fifths are sailing vessels; and then follow Germany, with 2,905,782 tons, of which one-sixth are sailing vessels; Norway, with 1,627,220 tons, one-half of which are sailing vessels; France, with 1,406,853 tons, a quarter of which are sailing vessels, and Italy with 1,117,538 tons, of which two-fifths are sailing vessels. While the lead shown by Great Britain is so great, strenuous efforts are being made by competing countries to reduce, by means of judicious subsidies, this great preponderance. Germany and France subsidize many of their lines heavily, and the policy has proved to be, particularly in the case of Germany, a wise one.

The ship-subsidy bill now before Congress would very materially assist in the development of our merchant marine, discourage the purchase of foreign-built vessels, and stimulate the shipbuilding industry on our own seacoast. Contemplating the figures we have given above, there is much food for thought in the fact that about the year 1840 Great Britain possessed under 800 vessels, whose aggregate registered tonnage was less than 150,000 tons, and that during this period the aggregate tonnage of the steamships owned by the United States was about 155,000 tons, or 5,000 tons more than that owned by Great Britain. That was in the days of wooden shipbuilding, and before the advent of steel, and more particularly before Bessemer steel had given that wonderful impetus to British shipbuilding the influence of which still enables her to maintain such a commanding lead.

INDUSTRIAL COMBINATIONS.

In 1893 began that system of reorganization of industry which was partially completed in 1897, and which has now advanced far enough to indicate its ultimate effect upon production, distribution, and consumption, and to justify the suggestion that the fate of nations may hang upon its final culmination. The industrial combination, commonly known as "the trust," is a marvel in purpose and audacity, bringing the highest type of administrative efficiency yet known. With rapidity of action and boundless energy characteristic of our people, the United States in a few years has passed all competitors and now pitches the tune in the concert of nations. In 1897 Pittsburg for the first time undersold Europe in the price of steel. Since then the forces has been assembling in production, transportation, and commerce by which are to be influenced the future currents of industry, and by which are to be transferred to the United States the powers of trade and finance that dominate the industrial world.

I shall not attempt to attack or defend these vast aggregations of wealth and industrial power. It is yet too soon to say if they are to bless or to curse mankind. If they prove to be beneficial, they will not need defense. If they seek to oppress instead of to benefit the people at large, the mightiest power of the Republic—public opinion—will crush them, as in days gone by it has destroyed all forms of human slavery among civilized nations. [Applause.]

As the individual employers gave way to the corporations, the corporations in their turn have merged into the large industrial combinations. They represent one side of the controversy between capital and labor, the employer. They have their counterpart on the other side in the great labor federations, representing the labor. The other interested element, the public at large, is observant of the progress of events, and, though the timid may fear and the pessimist may croak, is calmly confident of final supremacy through the courts and the ballot box when the rights of the people are assailed or the progress of civilization obstructed or endangered. [Applause.]

One thing of great encouragement is patent. These combinations need stability of trade conditions for success fully as much as does labor. Their influence may be safely counted upon, therefore, to prevent violent fluctuations in the markets with their consequent periods alternately of feverish activity and ruinous depression. Thus, by continued employment, the consuming power of labor will be maintained and all the people receive due meed of benefit in the continued universal prosperity that must result therefrom.

OUR LABOR ARMY.

About eighteen millions of our people, in round numbers, are wage-earners and literally obey the Divine injunction, "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread." One-quarter of our people, then, toil in mine and field and factory and other gainful occupations to form the aggregate of the vast productive energy of our country, which by its giant strides in recent years has placed us at the head of all the nations in material wealth and prosperity. Shall we not wisely consider the interests of this great army of toilers? And when we conserve their interests are we not building upon foundations broad and deep for future stability and continued prosperity in commerce and industry?

The laborers, as above defined, and those dependent upon them form 90 per cent of the population of the globe. Whatever affects the prosperity of the workers, therefore, affects the general welfare. The heart beats of commerce throb in unison with those of busy, contented, well-employed, and well-paid labor. Let us carry the proposition a little further and see if a guide for intelligent action may not be evolved from the study. Eliminating the comparatively few who live upon inherited wealth and add nothing by the product of their own hands or brains to what their ancestors by honest toil accumulated, it is exact truth to say that all men are workers either by hand or brain, or both combined.

The highest type of labor is that in which the brain guides the hand, thus giving us the skilled worker, who is the last to be discharged in time of depression and the first to be called back to labor when the wheels of industry again begin to turn, and who at all times commands the highest compensation for his toil. Hence the vast majority of our people are closely interested in the welfare of the toiler. They thrive in his time of employment and prosperity; they suffer in his time of idleness and adversity. How true this is may be amply proved by experience so recent as to be within the memory of all.

CONTRASTS OF A DECADE.

From that experience surely many wise lessons may be gleaned and solemn admonition for future conduct. The year 1892 was the most prosperous our country had ever known up to that time. The decade ending with 1890 showed the greatest absolute increase and the greatest percentage of increase in capital engaged in manufactures, the greatest absolute increase in average number of wage earners, and the greatest absolute increase in amount of wages paid of all the decades from 1850 to 1900. What a change came in 1896! What a contrast with 1892! And what a change again from 1896 to 1902! All this was due to something more than accident.

On the authority of Mr. Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, in his annual address to the annual convention of that body in 1897, there were then more than 3,000,000 of idle toilers in the land, eager and willing to work, yet unable to find the work to do. No estimate was given of the many millions more for whom there was employment only part time. All agree that those were among the darkest days of our experience during the past thirty years. What a contrast with the present time!

We have a right to ask, Why such a tremendous contrast between conditions in 1896 and in 1902? Why stagnation, business bankruptcy, and financial ruin then, and universal prosperity now? Simply because under widely different policies of governmental management, to which I will later more fully allude, the three or four million workers then idle, because unable to find work to do, are now employed. The twelve to fourteen million others, working then on quarter, or half, or, in specially fortunate instances, three-quarters time, are now working every day in the week and every week in the year.

PRODUCTION AND CONSUMPTION.

Forming, as it does, and with those it represents, 90 per cent of the population, labor becomes at one and the same time the greatest producing and consuming element of the world's products. Whatever affects the power of labor to produce affects the general accumulation of supplies for the world's markets. Whatever affects the power of labor to consume affects the general demand for the products of industry. Thus supply and demand are materially influenced by the condition of labor.

The power of labor to produce depends, primarily, upon its steady employment. The power of labor to consume depends upon the wages received for its toil. The larger the income, the wider the range of demand and the greater the means of gratification. The higher the skill, the better the pay and the more advanced the civilization. Eighteen million workers, receiving but a dollar each per day, and working full time of three hundred days in the year, have the enormous consuming power of over five thousand millions of dollars in a year.

But, according to Col. Carroll D. Wright, the average wages per toiler are a trifle over $400 per year, reckoning together men, women, and children employed. The gross earnings of all yearly are over $7,000,000,000. When we see in the daily press that employers in an industry have made a reduction in wages of 10 per cent we are apt to think, carelessly, that it does not amount to much. When labor makes a strenuous resistance to the reduction, or an equally strenuous attempt to secure an advance of like amount, we sometimes wonder why the battle wages so fiercely and the toilers make such a fight.

WHAT A CHANGE OF 10 PER CENT MEANS.

Reflect for a moment upon this question: What does a change of 10 per cent in wages, or income, mean to the grand army of toilers? It means the vast sum of more than $700,000,000 yearly in power of consumption. It means this much added to or taken from the power of the toilers to get, first, the necessities which they must have; second, the comforts which they ought to have, and third, all the luxuries, some of which, at least, they would like to have. And the sum total of human happiness is in the quantity and quality of these three things—necessities, comforts, and luxuries—within the attainment of the individual.

What does the sum of $700,000,000 mean to the commerce of the country? Take the figures of the Bureau of Statistics of the Treasury Department for the year 1900 on the progress of the United States in its material industries for comparison. It would be $9 per head of the total population. It would pay one-third of the national debt and equal one-third of the money in circulation. It would equal 28 per cent of the deposits in national banks or of those of the savings banks of the country. It would very nearly equal our imports from foreign lands and be more than one-half of our vast exports. It would almost equal five times the value of gold and silver produced. It would pay $3 a ton for all the coal mined. It would pay the expenses of the Post-Office Department seven times over, and more than five times all the salaries in our public schools.

It would have paid the entire net ordinary expenditures of the Government for the year quoted and left a surplus of over $113,000,000. It would exceed by a hundred millions of dollars the capital employed in manufactures and mechanical industries in the 32,398 establishments of my own State of Ohio, as reported in the census of 1900, and be 85 per cent of their gross product, while if the net or true value be taken, it would exceed that amount by nearly $200,000,000. By these comparisons may be realized the stupendous effect upon the economic and social conditions of our country of a change of "only 10 per cent" in the wages paid yearly to labor. It is by such comparisons that we can realize how closely interwoven with the prosperity of our country is the welfare of our laboring people, and how carefully we should legislate in order that this great home market shall not be impaired.

THE INDIVIDUAL CONSUMER.

Let us now briefly apply our reasoning to the individual. I have said that every man must have the necessities of life. These embrace food, shelter, and clothing. However poor in quality, these three things must come to man as the reward of his toil, or he must receive them from public or private charity or as the result of crime. He must earn, beg, or steal them. I need not argue the proposition that the honest, self-respecting American mechanic infinitely prefers to earn rather than to beg or steal. Manly independence is the characteristic of American labor. Granting this premise, how important it is that labor should be employed and its standard of wages at least maintained.

With an average annual income of only about $400 it is evident that only by the closest economy can expenses be within income. Too often it is the case that luxuries are unknown, and even comforts seldom enjoyed in the home of the toiler. To such the suggestion of a reduction in wages means a curtailment, not of luxuries, not of comforts—for these they have not enjoyed—but of actual necessities. To the country at large it means a serious loss in the consuming power of the people, and thereby an equal shrinkage in the home market.

TRADE ORGANIZATIONS.

I am not unmindful of the sharp competition in many, if not most, lines of industry, leading the managers and employers to reduce to a minimum the cost of production in order to keep the enterprise running and thus pay any wage at all to labor. Because of the tendency in times past to make the wages paid to labor the basis of such economy of production, there has arisen a resistance thereto on the part of labor which now finds form in the trade unions and labor organizations of the day.

These organizations naturally met with the fierce and often relentless opposition of the employers from the very beginning. And the struggle between master and man through all these many years, and during the development of modern industry, is responsible for much of the misunderstanding as to the relations existing and which should exist between employer and employed. The master has said: "I have the right to hire whom I please and pay what I please." The man has replied: "I have the right to be consulted in the matter and to be a party to the bargain."

This "freedom of contract" idea on the part of the employer may be theoretically right, but it is practically wrong. Vast changes have taken place in the manner of production and the status of labor. The individual employer has been supplanted by the corporation, the comparatively small corporation by the gigantic combination. The present situation is the natural outcome of evolution in processes of production. Once it was that a man unwilling to accept conditions of employment offered by one employer could find within easy access another with whom he could bargain. All this has changed in many of the great industries. The terms offered must be accepted or opportunity for employment closes.

Resistance by the individual is futile. What is one man against a great corporation with fifty million, a hundred million, or fifteen hundred million dollars capital? By very force of circumstances the toiler has been forced to put the power of numbers against the power of money and to assert something akin to the doctrine of "vested rights" in the employment at which his lifetime of toil has been devoted and for which alone he is fitted. Hence the "demand for recognition" of the labor organization, often insisted upon more strenuously than the demand for increase in wages or change in trade conditions. This demand is often inexplicable to those unfamiliar with present conditions of labor employment and the changes therein during even the last decade.

LABOR AND CAPITAL GETTING TOGETHER.

Education in economics is progressing rapidly. Strange as it may seem to many, employers and employed are getting together more closely and understand and acknowledge the rights of each other more freely than ever before in the history of trade. Elements are crystallizing which, when potent, will establish a common ground upon which employer and employed will meet and settle trade disputes. In such settlement due regard will be had not only of all which immediately concerns the employer and employed, but also of the indirect but ofttimes equally vital interests of the public at large. The public is frequently the innocent victim and sufferer from the stagnation attendant upon a labor war. Society, therefore, is beginning to demand that some means of prompt settlement shall be found, so that its rights shall not be ignored and it be unduly oppressed by mulish obstinacy of either masters or men.

A FEW FACTS ABOUT OHIO.

I am justified in speaking as I do upon this great labor problem, inasmuch as I represent, in part, upon this floor a State which from 1840 to 1880 ranked fourth, and since 1880 has ranked fifth, among all the States of the Union in the value of her manufactures. During the half century closing with 1900 her capital increased from $29,019,538 to $605,792,266; her establishments from 10,622 to 32,398; her average number of wage-earners from 51,491 to 345,869, the greatest number employed at one time for the census year of 1900 being 451,686; her total wages from $13,467,156 to $153,955,330; her cost of materials used from $34,678,019 to $447,849,677, and the value (gross) of her products from $62,692,279 to $832,438,113.

These figures omit the statistics for governmental, eleemosynary, and penal institutions and establishments with a product of less than $500. They are from the census of 1900, and therefore understate the present conditions in Ohio; but they are the latest available and serve the purposes of my argument in illustrating the wonderful strides of industry in the last half century and the importance of labor and its compensation in the development of the wealth and resources of our country. This brief compendium also shows how well Ohio has utilized her great natural commercial advantages. Her means of communication by river, lake, canal, and rail have always been powerful agencies contributing to the development of her manufactures.

The early settlers from New England, New York, and Pennsylvania brought with them the mechanical knowledge and skill gained in their former homes and the machinery and tools they formerly used. The rapidly developing country west and south of Ohio furnished a market easy of access for their products, and their location was most favorable for obtaining cheaply a bountiful supply of iron, coal, and lumber, the raw materials for their finished products. "As early as 1803," says one writer, "manufactured products were shipped to points along the Mississippi River as far south as New Orleans."

PROGRESS IN FIFTY YEARS.

Living as we do in a period of marvelous industrial activity, we sometimes forget the wonderful progress made in the last half of the nineteenth century in manufactures and mechanical industries. A bare statement of the facts almost staggers belief, while it compels admiration. Capital has increased nineteenfold; average number of wage-earners, about five and one-half fold; amount of wages paid, about tenfold, and the value of products, thirteenfold. During this time the population increased two and one-quarter fold. The apparent value of products per wage-earner has increased from $1,065 in 1850 to $2,451 in 1900. No better indication can be offered of the increasing productivity of labor, due, of course, largely to increased effectiveness of machinery and abundant capital employed.

MANUFACTURES IN 1900.

The census of 1900 showed the gross value of products of all manufacturing and mechanical industries for the census year to be $13,040,013,638. The "gross value" referred to does not represent the final value of the manufactured products of the country, since much duplication of figures results from the fact that the finished products of many establishments become the raw materials of a subsequent stage of development. But the "gross value" represents volume of transactions involved, in the same way that the total of transactions of a clearing house represents the actual banking business of the banks connected therewith.

The "net value" of products may be reckoned safely as about two-thirds of the "gross value." From this "net value" in turn may be deducted the cost of crude materials as they are originally received from farm, forest, mine, and sea, and the sums paid for fuel, freight, etc.; and in the last analysis we have $5,671,902,790 as the value added to materials by the various processes of manufacture. But the gross value fairly represents the volume of internal trade in manufactured articles and the amount involved in preparing these products for retail distribution and consumption. The census experts estimate that this retailing of products and the passing them along to the ultimate consumer represent transactions of a volume equally as great; so that "the total money volume of the wholesale and retail transactions in the manufactured products of the United States is unquestionably greater than the volume of the international trade of the principal countries of the world, which equals the sum of $20,005,884,354 (exports and imports added together)," as shown by the bulletins of the Bureau of Statistics of the Treasury Department.

PROGRESS IN AGRICULTURE ALSO.

While in my argument I have used illustrations based upon the progress and development of manufactures and mechanical industries, I am not unmindful of the great agricultural interests of our country and their controlling influence upon our social and economic problems. I could not very well be indifferent to them, since Ohio ranks third among the States in agriculture as well as fifth in manufactures. But agriculture shares with manufactures the general prosperity. The toiler in the factory, in the mill, in the mine consumes the products of the farm. The nearer the farm to the factory the more valuable the farm, the more varied the crops, the more profitable the results.

We are proud of the fact that the yearly exports to foreign lands of agricultural products have reached the amount of $1,000,000,000, but we are vastly more proud of the other fact that the farmer has a market twenty times as great right here in our own land. We rejoice exceedingly that such a great change for the better has come to the farmer since 1896. His mortgages have been paid to the amount of hundreds of millions. From being a borrower in the money centers of the country he has become a lender, and the accumulations of his years of prosperity have, at times, made him a potent factor in financial affairs during the past four years. He owns 65,000,000 swine, 3,500,000 mules, 62,000,000 sheep, nearly 20,000,000 horses, nearly 70,000,000 cattle, these farm animals alone being worth the enormous total of over three thousand millions of dollars. The value of his farm animals has nearly doubled since 1896, and he is enjoying a condition of prosperity, wealth, and comfort unequaled in the previous history of our country. No, I am not unmindful of the farmer, and I rely upon his sturdy common sense, his sound judgment, his proverbial shrewdness to sustain the public policy which rescued him from financial disaster and brought him again to the Beulah land of corn and wine. [Applause.]

FISCAL POLICY OF VITAL IMPORTANCE.

If I have succeeded in establishing my proposition that the great consuming element of the country's product is the wages paid to labor, it follows in logical sequence that labor must have opportunity to toil in order to receive wages with which to consume. Hence we are forced to carefully consider what policy of governmental management is best calculated to keep labor employed.

Since 1861, with the exception of two Presidential terms, the policy of the present dominant party has controlled the Government. For the most part while that policy has ruled—for thirty-two years out of the forty—the country has progressed with marvelous rapidity, and the condition of labor has grown constantly better.

The periods of greatest idleness and attendant suffering have been when attempts were made to overthrow that policy and to supplant it with another that promised much, but realized little. Yet, not satisfied with the disasters of the experiments already made, and with the crowning evils of the latest experience only six years passed by, there are those who cry loudly for another attempt in the same direction and, by specious arguments and sophistry, seek to entice the labor of the land to desert the policy which has blessed labor so bountifully since it again controlled the administration of affairs.

It can not be possible that the memory of the toilers is so poor as to forget so soon the bitter days from 1893 to 1897—the idleness of labor, the ruin of industry, the bankruptcy of capital. I have too much faith in the shrewd common sense of American labor to believe that it will destroy the magnificent structure its own thrift and energy have created and be led away by the siren songs which would entice the toilers to their destruction. To think otherwise is to insult the intelligence of American labor. [Applause.]

AN HONEST DOLLAR FOR HONEST WORK.

Not only has the protective policy of the Republican party retained and developed for our own benefit our great home market to an extent far beyond any previous experience, but its financial policy has been none the less vital in its benefit to labor and to the country. The party declared for American goods for American markets, and thus gave labor a chance to earn "an honest day's pay for an honest day's toil." In spite of alluring enticements of policy and expediency, it also firmly planted itself upon the bedrock of commercial integrity, and declared that labor should be paid with an honest dollar for honest toil. Thus it became the defender of the defenseless, for the cheapest coin is always used to pay labor, whereas it should be paid the best, and no one so much as the toiler is interested in sound and honest money. [Applause.]

OUR HOME MARKET.

The greatest and grandest market in the whole world is all our own in our vast internal trade. The present controlling policy, if continued, will retain it for ourselves. In addition to that we are conquering the markets of other lands. The sceptre of marine control is about to pass into the hands of American capital and management of American men, because the sceptre of financial supremacy is held no longer in London, but in the United States.

The gigantic development of our home industries and our home markets during the past six years, coupled with the preeminent skill and productive capacity of our toilers, has given us our industrial supremacy, while the accumulation of capital, made possible concurrently therewith, has given to our "captains of industry" and "Napoleons of finance" the means with which to girdle the globe with continuous lines of transportation virtually under one control, and that control American and inspired with American instincts and American aspirations. The prophecy has been fulfilled. Westward the star of empire has taken its way and time's noblest offspring is the latest.

The limit of possible development has not been reached. Great as has been the achievement of the last half century, it will be dwarfed into insignificance by the commercial conquests of the first quarter of the twentieth century. Industrial development and trade expansion are progressing upon such a stupendous scale that the field of vision is no longer confined to one country, but takes in the whole world. Fully realizing the possibilities and fully equipped to grapple with and secure them, the American Republic advances confidently to its destined commercial sovereignty of the world. [Applause.]

HOLD FAST THAT WHICH IS GOOD.

I plead for such wisdom of action in legislation as shall continue the present wise fiscal policy. I deprecate any act which, for temporary partisan gain or for the spoils of party politics, would paralyze industry, block the wheels of progress, and again turn the busy toiler out of the mill and the mine and the factory to become a tramp upon the highways. I appeal to the toiler himself to let the lamp of experience guide his footsteps, to the end that he shall continue to maintain by his support that wise policy which gives first, the prime requisite to contentment, comfort, and industrial peace, the opportunity to toil; and, second, which pays for the work done in a dollar not ashamed of its creator, good at its face value throughout the realms of civilization.

Let him "hold fast that which is good," and thus continue the conditions under which his share of benefit is so great and destined so largely to increase. Continued prosperity will give ample opportunity to correct all real evils complained of. Improved sanitary conditions of employment will make more healthy the environment of the toiler. A shortened workday will lighten the exhaustiveness of toil. Education for his children will elevate the general standard of civilization. Proper restriction of immigration and the enforcement of proper domestic legislation will prevent undue and unfair competition and maintain the standard of wages. Amicable understanding with employers will minimize the number and severity of trade disputes. And, in the new era about to dawn upon the industrial horizon, the farmer and the mechanic, the employer and the employed, will unite in a common laudable and patriotic effort to secure for our beloved country that exalted station which an All-wise Providence has ordained she shall occupy in the history of the world. [Prolonged applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. GROSVENOR having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. CROOK, one of his secretaries, who informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed bill of the following title:

On May 1, 1902:

H. R. 8553. An act granting a pension to Joseph Tusinski.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. BENTON. Mr. Chairman, I now yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCDERMOTT].

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Mr. Chairman, I suppose that it is rather difficult to induce many members of this House to become really interested in the question of the taxation of the District of Columbia. Bills are reported every year involving an expenditure of seven to eight million dollars. That is a very large amount of money, and under our system of government the property and welfare of the people of this District are absolutely committed to Congress. It is therefore incumbent upon members of this House to learn what they may of the condition of this District, and to give to those conditions the same attention that they would give to municipal government at home if intrusted to their care.

The system of taxation in the District of Columbia is without precedent and without parallel. I am speaking, Mr. Chairman, for a population of one-quarter of a million people, representing those who are here because of their love of the beautiful; those who are here because of the repose that may be found in the pursuit of the intellectual within the city of Washington; those who have invested here because of the beauty of the city, and those who are here because of the Government employment, and the minority within the city of Washington who are here to seek their living in the ordinary pursuits of life.

We find that there is imposed a burden of nearly $8,000,000 upon the District—that is, the cost of government within the District is nearly $8,000,000—one-half of which is paid by the people of the United States outside of the District upon the theory that within this District of Columbia one-half of the ratables is owned by the Federal Government. Let us see what principle of taxation is applied to the remainder. These people are our wards. In legislation we deal directly with them, and they own the only taxed property within this Union that is absolutely under the control of Congress. What is the way in which a tax levy is made within the city of Washington? It is directly opposite to that in which a tax levy is made in each and every other municipality in the Union.

Mr. Chairman, in your municipality when you desire to find out what the cost of municipal government shall be for the next fiscal year, how do you do it? Your legislative municipal body ascertains the probable cost of every department of that municipal government, and then your assessors find out what the value of the ratables, real and personal, within that municipality is, and then, by applying to the valuation that is found by your assessors the amount that is fixed by your municipal government as the probable necessary expenditure for the ensuing year, you fix the tax rate. That is, without exception, the method of fixing the tax rate in every municipality in the United States except the city of Washington.

What is the method here? No matter what the appropriation is, whether you run back to 1887, when it was $3,000,000, or to 1902, when it is $8,000,000, you find that, whether the amount to be expended is $3,000,000, $8,000,000, or $20,000,000, you direct the assessors to assess $1.50 upon every hundred dollars of ratables that are included in the District. I venture to say that the parallel of that proposition can not be found in this world. No member of this House, recalling the methods of taxation pursued in the county or in the State that he comes from, can find a parallel for this.

Under this system of taxation what becomes the duty of the assessor? What becomes his necessary duty? To assess enough dollars and a half to meet one-half of the appropriation made by Congress. It will be immediately seen that there is not incumbent upon him any duty to ascertain the true value of property. He is not to assess property; he is not to find the value of the ratables within the city of Washington that should contribute to the public Treasury; but he is to assess enough dollars and a half to meet the appropriations made by Congress, and made, I believe, without the slightest consideration on the part of 90 per cent of the members of this House. He is to assess enough to raise that one-half. Now, he started in 1887 with the necessity of imposing enough dollars and a half to raise about $1,300,000. In 1888 the total amount necessary to be raised from individual owners and the Government had grown to $4,000,000, in 1898 to $8,000,000, and in 1903 to what? To $10,441,000, in round numbers.

I say to you, Mr. Chairman, that one-half of the appropriation for this year imposed upon the property of this District at a full valuation and levied at the rate of 1½ per cent is not only practical confiscation of property within the city of Washington, but it is saying to the entire world, "Keep your money outside of this city."

You want to assess all personal property? Theoretically it should be assessed. But what are you going to do with the ward whose guardian has invested his money where it is easily ascertainable and produces the current average rate of interest? Are you going to take the 3 or 3½ per cent, the product of that money, and assess it $1.50 per hundred? Are you going to assess 1½ per cent upon the true value of all the personal property in the shops on Pennsylvania avenue? If you do, then the District of Columbia and the city of Washington will receive a greater income in hundreds of cases than the man who puts his mind to the merchandising of those ratables.

The proper way to raise taxes within the city of Washington is to raise them as they are raised in every other municipality. Let Congress fix the budget. Let it be fixed liberally. Let it include, if you choose, as this includes, a quarter of a million dollars for a street-cleaning department, which in my opinion can be conducted for one-half that money. Let it include liberal appropriations for the public schools. On this question I desire to speak to the Committee on Appropriations, to the gentlemen in charge of this bill, who have included and do include each year in the taxation of the District of Columbia items that should have no place in an annual tax levy. I call the attention of the members of this committee to some of the items in this bill. I know that this is a subject in which it is rather difficult to interest anybody. It is not half so enticing as a debate on the Philippine Islands, but it should be interesting from the fact that we are peculiarly charged with its consideration.

I speak specially to those members of the Committee on Appropriations. You have included for improvement of roadways, under the heading "Work on streets and avenues," the Georgetown schedule, the Northwest schedule, the Southwest schedule, the Southeast schedule, and the Northeast schedule, and on these the aggregate is $280,000. That is, you open up streets to the city of Washington, and you charge the cost of opening those streets in the budget of the year when they are opened. Is there any man in this House who ever heard of that being done in any municipality in this Union? Why, sir, the people would turn out any government that attempted it. These streets are not opened for this year, but for all time.

Take another item—for the construction of county roads; that is, for the absolute opening of them—for the construction. You have for this purpose items amounting to $55,000. Those expenditures are for all time, not for this year especially.

Then there is the item, "For the repair of the county roads," a separate item of $80,000. That item is rightly included in the tax levy; but when you come to the construction of a county road, then you are assessing for a new permanent improvement, and the entire cost of that improvement, under the practice of any municipal government in this country, is not included in the tax levy for a single year. Those items are illustrative.

I come to the item of sewers. This will perhaps illustrate something of what is done in this city. Take the item of sewers in this bill. I do not suppose that there are 20 members of the House of Representatives who, being asked on the streets of Washington to-morrow, "How much did you appropriate for sewers in this city?" could tell whether we appropriated $150 or $150,000.

Now, let us see what is imposed on the taxpayers here for sewers.

For continuing the construction of the extension of the boundary sewer to the vicinity of Twenty-second and A streets NE., now under contract, $40,000.
For continuing the construction of the east side intercepting sewer, between Twenty-second and A streets NE. and Twelfth street SE., now under contract, $50,000.
For continuing construction of the sewage-disposal system pumping station, and for machinery therefor, $250,000.
For continuing construction of the low-area trunk sewer, $60,000.

Here we have an aggregate of $400,000 spent on the improvement of the sewer system of Washington. Can you find any parallel in this Union for putting that assessment in the tax levy for a single year?

Mr. BURKETT. You can not find any parallel in the United States, either, for the way in which Washington is governed, can you?

Mr. McDERMOTT. No; and I am thankful for that fact, having looked at some of the ways in which it is governed.

Mr. BURKETT. Now, that expended here to make these improvements does not complete the sewerage system. In any city where you bond, you bond to complete a sewerage system or to complete something. It is the policy here and has been to do just as much of this each year as they have funds to do with. This does not complete these systems. We have been doing something in years past, we do something this year, we continue it along and do not burden the city at once with a large indebtedness, but do this work as we can, as we have money to do it and not put the taxes up to exorbitant rates.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Can the gentleman point to any city in the United States or any city in the world in which there is a tax levied to-day in which there is $200,000 appropriated for absolutely permanent improvements? I mean that class of improvements that are generally made through the system of assessment and not taxation.

Mr. BURKETT. No; nor can I find any other city in the United States or in the world where the government appropriates as much as is raised by taxation, either.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Now, I am coming to that proposition later on. I have now got up to nearly $1,000,000; $400,000 for a permanent sewer system, imposed as taxation, not assessment.

Mr. BURKETT. Well, the Government gives more than that to the city government.

Mr. McDERMOTT. I say that question is entirely irrelevant. I will come to it later on. I am willing, before I finish my argument, to divide the figure by 2. Then I will come to the proposition of the difference between the Federal Government and the individual taxpayer. Nearly a half million of dollars put in a tax levy for building sewers that are supposed to last, if they are properly constructed, for hundreds of years. No such proposition of municipal government can be found anywhere. I come to the next item, the Washington Aqueduct. This is an illustration of why the people of this city complain and why they rightfully complain. For the purpose of building and improving waterworks and adding a filtration plant there is assessed upon the city of Washington and the District of Columbia this year $800,000.

Why, take it in the city of Cincinnati or in the city of St. Louis or in the city of New York, with the millions and millions and hundreds of millions of dollars of ratables, if you attempted to build waterworks in that kind of way, there would be an uprising of the people and the taxpayers; but there are two separate assessments here, one to be selected out of the revenues, as I understand it, of the water department and the other to be paid by another kind of taxation. There you have a million and a quarter of dollars put in an annual tax budget, which should be distributed, in my opinion, over a period of at least twenty years. That is not all. Two hundred thousand dollars is to be appropriated from the revenues of the water department.

Altogether there are items of this class amounting to over a million and a half dollars in this budget. Those moneys are to be expended for permanent improvements in this District. The Government of the United States is to pay one half of the amount. Well, the Government of the United States can afford to pay it out of a filled Treasury and because the issuing of bonds is unpopular, but when you take the other half of the amount, when you take an assessment of over $750,000 upon the District of Columbia for permanent improvements—for waterworks that are to do for this generation and for all time, for sewers that if properly constructed will last practically forever—then I ask, why should those figures be put in an annual tax levy on the property in the city of Washington?

No reasonable answer can be given supporting the proposition. They are permanent improvements, and, in my opinion, the proper way to consider them is that way which puts the hand of government as lightly as possible upon the property owners, and that way has been discovered and is carried out in every other municipality. This waterworks improvement will cost, we will say, some $3,000,000. The idea of distributing that as a matter of bulk taxation is unparalleled in government. What should be done with it is this: The District of Columbia, absolutely independent of the Federal Government so far as recourse for payment is concerned, could to-morrow finish the waterworks by issuing $3,000,000 of bonds bearing 3 per cent interest, and putting 2½ or 3 per cent of the entire issue in every tax levy for the purpose of creating a fund to redeem those bonds.

Why is not that, which is the method pursued in every other municipality of this country, pursued in the city of Washington? I say, Mr. Chairman, that any proposition which imposes permanent improvements in bulk upon the people as a part of a fiscal budget reasonably supposed to be confined to the cost of operating the government during the ensuing year is an outrage upon property, whether that property is personal or real.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Will the gentleman permit an inquiry?

Mr. McDERMOTT. Certainly.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I am interested in the argument of the gentleman from New Jersey, but I think he is attempting to run a parallel between the government of the city of Washington and the municipalities in States, and I do not think you can do that very well. The gentleman's plan, it seems to me, is defective in this, that he would provide for an issue of bonds and would only require a tax levy, as I understand it, each year sufficient to meet the interest upon the bonds, and to provide a sufficient sinking fund. Is that the idea of the gentleman?

Mr. McDERMOTT. That is the plan.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Now, if you can with an ordinary levy, such as we have in the District of Columbia, raise a sufficient sum to do this work of which he speaks with the current taxes, where is the hardship? I do not want to take the gentleman's time, but I want to submit this proposition to him. If the tax rate of $1.50 on the property, as valued in the city of Washington, will raise enough money each year to meet these obligations and pay off this amount in bulk, as he says, why would you issue bonds to raise the money; why not use the money this way, unless there is complaint of excessive taxation. I submit to my friend from New Jersey that he will find, unless I am mistaken, that the rate of taxes of $1.50 in the city of Washington, being all that is levied, is less than that of any other town in the United States of the size of the city of Washington.

That is to say, if you take the State taxation, the county taxation, and the municipal taxation in any city the size of Washington in the United States, you will find that those three rates and sometimes a separate and independent tax for schools will, all combined, exceed the dollar-and-a-half rate paid in the city of Washington. I ask my friend if he knows of any city of two hundred and seventy-five or three hundred thousand population in the United States where the State tax, county tax, and municipal tax, and other special taxes that are levied, in the aggregate, fail to exceed a dollar and a half on a hundred dollars' worth of property?

Mr. McDERMOTT. That depends entirely upon the vagaries of the local assessors in finding out the value of property. There are many municipalities in the United States, and I doubt very much whether you can find any municipality in the United States where the rate for the purpose of meeting one-half of the expenses of the Government is anything approximating 1½ per cent.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I do not profess to know, but I should like the gentleman, who is a business man, to state what the rate is in Jersey City for the three taxes—State, county, and municipal.

Mr. McDERMOTT. The entire rate in Jersey City amounts to about $2.70.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I am told that in New York City it amounts to $3.50 or $4.

Mr. CREAMER. Two dollars and twenty-seven cents.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. For all the taxes?

Mr. CREAMER. I should like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee what other city in the United States there is where the Government pays half the taxes?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Why, none; but there is a reason for that, and that is, it is alleged that the Government of the United States owns half the property in the District of Columbia. If you will take the estimate of the valuation of the property owned by the Government of the United States in the city of Washington, as it appears in the printed reports which are accessible, it will show that the Government of the United States owns one-half of the entire property in the District.

Mr. CREAMER. But the same principle applies in every city in the Union. The local government does not tax its own property.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. But the city of New York does not own one one-hundredth part of the property in New York.

Mr. CREAMER. It owns several hundred million dollars' worth of the property there.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I do not want to take up the time of the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. CREAMER. Will the gentleman from New Jersey permit the interruption?

Mr. McDERMOTT. Certainly; I yield for the interruption.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I am not justifying the principle. I am not called upon to do it, but that is the principle upon which the Government contributes one-half. While I am interrupting the gentleman, as I was saying, I only say I do not see how you can make a comparison between the method of taxation here and the method of taxation in the various States. You very well understand that a city in a State has limitations upon its rate of taxation fixed by the legislature of that State. That is true in nearly all the States. But here the idea is that Congress fixed it, that Congress fixed it at $1.50; the people of the District of Columbia have had no voice in the matter. Congress fixes the amount that it will pay, and Congress is all-powerful—that is, when it comes to dealing with the property of the people in the District of Columbia.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Answering the gentleman from Tennessee, I admit that Congress is powerful, and Congress is the local government, and in the matter of taxation Congress must adjust its action to this rule—that it is not right to impose taxes unless they are absolutely necessary, and the true theory of the construction of permanent municipal works is that they shall be paid for gradually. Then it is entirely immaterial whether the Federal Government pays one-half of the work or not.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Would my friend insist that if the rate of taxation is $1.50 on the hundred—and that is 30 to 50 per cent less than in any other municipality in the United States where the population is as great as in the city of Washington—that you ought not to take the current taxes, but that you shall issue bonds to meet these expenses?

Mr. McDERMOTT. So far as I know, when you start your village, and it grows to be a town, and from a town it grows to be a city, you would adjust the burden according to the total property of the place under the rule I have mentioned. It does not matter whether Congress pays half or whether the tax rate is $1.50, or any other figure, the question is whether the items for permanent improvements are proper burdens here; and my contention is that they are not. The gentleman from Tennessee is reasoning it out on this ground, the tax levy is light, and therefore we will put in a million and a half dollars for the waterworks for all time, and a sewer system for all time.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Would my friend, instead of doing that, issue a million and a half of bonds and levy a rate to meet 3 per cent on those bonds with a reasonable sinking fund? Is that the principle by which the gentleman would proceed?

Mr. McDERMOTT. That is the only just rule upon which you should construct permanent municipal works. That is the only rule that has ever been adopted in any city, or that has been enacted in any State that I have read the statutes of, for building works in a municipality—that taxation shall be made on the property, and for a sinking fund, so that it shall be a continuing contribution by those who receive the benefit of the work, and that it shall be paid for in a series of years. That is the principle underlying the method of assessment for permanent improvements, and when you put a million and a half dollars for the cost of permanent improvements in a single bill you are doing an injustice to those people.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BENTON. I yield five minutes further time to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for five minutes more.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Let me briefly in the remaining five minutes call the attention of the House and of the gentleman from Tennessee to this: The gentleman's idea seems to be that you are only paying $1.50 upon property in Washington. It is light or heavy, according to the discrimination on the part of the assessor.

I know a piece of property in this city, as I stated yesterday, the superstructure of which cost—and they separately assess the ground and the superstructure, an entirely proper method of assessment—years ago $103,000, and they are carrying that on the District books, and it is assessed to-day at $100,000. The prevailing idea that property is paying on a 60 per cent assessment in the city of Washington is not true. If you are going—as will be be found on page 56—if you are going to assess $1.50 on each $100 against each piece of property and against all personal property, then in 1887 you assessed it until you got up to one-half of $3,000,000, and in 1902 you are going to assess it at $1.50 until you get up to one-half of about $10,000,000.

You see where that principle and method finally leads to. It means that you will go on and on until, having abandoned every principle of taxation, after having abandoned every known principle of imposing the burdens of permanent improvements, until in the city of Washington you will have found the road to practical confiscation of property.

Coming now to a remark made yesterday in regard to taxing personal property, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] yesterday explained the amendment to this bill under which personal property is to be assessed. It was said that it was a reenactment of the law of 1877.

Nobody can tell, in my judgment, what that law means with reference to taxation, and yet we propose to reenact it by amendment to this bill. As to the taxation of corporations, it means one of two things, and I call the attention of the members of this committee to the propositions that may be evolved from that amendment. It means under one construction that every corporation that does a dollar's worth of business in the District of Columbia, whether it is organized under the laws of the United States or under a State law, shall be assessed $1.50 on its capital stock. If it means that, then if the General Electric Company, with its capital of thirty or forty million dollars, should come into the city of Washington and open an agency, it would be assessed $1.50 on the entire capital stock authorized.

Now, it means that, or else it means that there shall be $1.50 assessed on the capital stock of every corporation organized under the laws of the United States. In 1877 there was not a general corporation law of the United States and there was not any general corporation law of the District of Columbia. If it deals with the corporations that come in here and organize under the law passed by Congress last year, for business here and elsewhere—organized as they organize in every State in the Union—it means that every one of those corporations would immediately dissolve and go to some State.

Take either horn of the dilemma you please—and I do not believe in passing an act and saying that the Senate will cure the defect—if you mean that the corporations that do business here, whether their life comes from Congress or not, shall be taxed 1½ per cent on the total value of their stock, then you would absolutely prevent any corporation organized under State laws from opening an office in the city of Washington.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will be allowed to conclude his remarks without charging up the time to either side. I ask unanimous consent that, without charging it to either side, the gentleman be allowed to conclude his remarks. He is speaking upon a very interesting subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks that the gentleman from New Jersey may be permitted to continue his remarks without charging the same to either of the gentlemen in charge of the time, the result of which will be to carry general debate past 4 o'clock to the extent of the time that the gentleman from New Jersey uses. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Mr. Chairman, this is a very important matter. This body is an intelligent one. Many of its members have had questions of taxation to consider, and to send this bill over to the Senate with a rider that no man can tell the meaning of is not very intelligent legislation. It is vicious legislation. It is a vicious attempt on the part of the House to do that which it does not understand, and I now challenge anyone to say what, under the law of 1877, is the rule of taxation of corporate property in the city of Washington.

I do not mean to say that there exists any single rule. There are various kinds of assessment; one is for the street railroads, one is for the electric companies, and one for the banking corporations; and these various rules ought at some time to be revised and codified. But here you have a proposition, and I ask any member of the committee on the floor of this House to explain it to us. Is there any member of the committee who can tell what this amendment does for foreign corporations? I ask the chairman of the committee, the introducer of the bill, to furnish me with that information. What does that clause do with reference—taking it for an illustration—to the General Electric Company, incorporated with a capital of thirty or forty million dollars, perhaps more, if that company should open an office in the city of Washington to transact business here?

Mr. BELL. Mr. Chairman, I do not rise to answer the gentleman's question, but I wish to suggest that the court that passed upon this bill said that the bill was a good law; that it was the usual statute in pretty nearly every State in the Union, but because the Commissioners of the District had destroyed the equalization board so that the man whose property was taxed could not go before any equalization board and object to the taxation, that therefore the collection could not be made. But the court pronounced that law a good law—the usual law in pretty nearly every State in the Union.

Now, the provision in assessing corporations is that it shall be assessed in bulk. That is the usual way.

Mr. McDERMOTT. On the capital stock.

Mr. BELL. That is, if the corporation is domiciled in the District of Columbia that the corporation itself shall be assessed for the value of the stock just the same as other people, and not the shares of the stock itself. Now, I understand that is the usual law and in the gentleman's own State.

Mr. McDERMOTT. New Jersey has grown rich by assessing corporations, but not in that way. They tax the franchise, tax it one-tenth of 1 per cent on all capital stock that is issued up to the amount of $5,000,000, and thereafter it becomes a nominal tax.

In the State of New Jersey all corporations that have invested a certain percentage of their capital stock in manufacturing are exempted from franchise taxation. Under a constitutional provision that all taxes shall be levied by a uniform rule and according to the value of the property, our court of last resort sustained that tax, saying distinctly that it would not be sustained but for the fact that it was a license or franchise tax and not a property tax.

The tax you proposed here is upon the value of the capital stock of a corporation which, as you say, is a citizen of the District. If this bill passes, then very soon you will not have any corporation that will be a citizen of the District, unless it be a corporation that has received from Congress some privilege and can not get away. Therefore you will not add to the revenues of the District.

Mr. PALMER. What would happen to a foreign corporation?

Mr. McDERMOTT. In answer to that question, let me take New Jersey as an illustration. She is a good illustration in this—that she has been successful in wiping out her State debt; there has not been a dollar of State tax levied there for over sixteen years upon property outside that owned by corporations. In the case the gentleman proposes, let a tax be imposed according to gross receipts within the District. That would be a fair franchise tax upon any foreign corporation transacting business here. But if you propose to tax the entire capital stock, leaving the assessment of the market value (which never can be proved or disproved in nine cases out of ten) to the vagary of the local assessor, who may put it upon the tax bills at any figure he guesses at, you drive away domestic corporations, and you practically prohibit every corporation having its residence outside of the District from transacting business here.

The proper tax upon corporations within this District would be a tax upon gross receipts on business done within the District. That is the proper form of taxation, and the only kind by which you will ever collect any revenue from that source.

Mr. PALMER. The rule in our State is to tax a foreign corporation on the proportional part of its capital stock employed in the State.

Mr. McDERMOTT. In that case it would be almost impossible for the assessor to ascertain anything about the value of the stock.

Mr. PALMER. The taxation was imposed by the terms of the law upon corporations doing business in the State; but that provision has been construed by our supreme court as meaning only that portion of the capital stock employed in business within the State.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. When the gentleman says "capital stock," he means "capital," I presume.

Mr. PALMER. We use capital and capital stock as synonymous. We undertook to tax the Standard Oil Company on its entire capital stock of—I do not know many millions, possibly thirty or forty. The act of assembly, literally construed, provided for that. But the supreme court held that we could not tax the Standard oil company except on that portion of its capital stock employed in the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. McDERMOTT. In other words, the Standard Oil Company, doing business in the State of Pennsylvania, which has a constitutional provision similar to that of New York and New Jersey and practically all the States of the Union, that property shall be assessed according to its value, the court ruled that inasmuch as the Standard Oil Company was not a creature of the Pennsylvania law it must be assessed only according to the property which it had within the State; and if you choose, in ascertaining the value of that property, to take the stock as representing it, you assess the portion of stock employed in the State.

But you could not take $100,000 worth of property represented by the Standard Oil Company's ownership of lands within the State of Pennsylvania and then say that it had invested $100,000 of its stock in Pennsylvania; but as the market value of the stock was over $700 a share you would make an assessment accordingly. What the court in Pennsylvania held, and must necessarily have held, under the Federal Constitution, was that you should assess the property in the State according to its value.

If you attempted anything more you would simply confiscate the property. It must be recollected that property within the State of Pennsylvania is guarded, first, by the constitution of the State, and, second, by the Constitution of the United States. But the application of the rules of legislation in a matter of taxation to property in the State of Pennsylvania is entirely different to the rule which would be applied by a court in this District, where the power of Congress is practically unlimited.

Mr. PALMER. I am not antagonizing the gentleman's proposition. I think it is a sensible proposition that a foreign corporation should not be taxed in the District of Columbia on its entire capital stock, but should be taxed on its gross earnings within the District, or on that portion of its capital stock actually invested in the District.

Mr. McDERMOTT. The method of assessing in Pennsylvania is practically under the same idea and ruling, and Pennsylvania was one of the earliest States to assess all property according to value. A franchise tax can not be imposed upon a foreign corporation upon the basis of an assessment of all its issued or authorized stock.

Mr. PALMER. Yes; and I would like to ask one question. How is the property assessed in the District of Columbia? Is it supposed to be assessed at its true market value?

Mr. McDERMOTT. There is one of the great troubles about the assessment of property in the District of Columbia. In Philadelphia you have a common council or some other body that makes up the annual budget. Then your assessors go out and ascertain the value of the property. You apply one to the other and fix the rate. Here you say to the assessor: "We are going to spend $10,000,000 this year in the District of Columbia. The Federal Government will pay one half. You assess a dollar and a half against enough property to make up the balance."

Mr. PALMER. I do not understand what you mean by assessing a dollar and a half.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Every man is to be assessed $1.50 on every hundred dollars.

Mr. PALMER. Then the amount of tax rate depends upon the amount of the assessment.

Mr. McDERMOTT. The bulk raised depends on the total of the ratables assessed.

Mr. PALMER. It depends on the amount of the assessment, does it not?

Mr. McDERMOTT. It depends on the amount of the assessment.

Mr. PALMER. Yes.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Let me illustrate. Treating the ratables—that is, all the property, personal and real—within the District of Columbia as a unit—and I am illustrating it in this way—taking all the property not owned by the Government of the United States within the District of Columbia as a unit, belonging to one man or to one corporation, when the assessor came to assess that he would not assess it as he would in the State of Pennsylvania, by finding out what the value of it was, but he would say how much, at a dollar and a half a hundred, shall I assess the entire property of the District of Columbia in order to raise $5,000,000; and therefore his assessment would put his mental inquiry, not to the ascertainment of the value of property which it is the duty of an assessor to ascertain, but to the inquiry of how much in the aggregate must I assess all the property not owned by the Government in order to raise, at $1.50 a hundred, $5,000,000. It is vicious in its principle; unheard of in any municipality in these United States, I venture to say; bad in its application, and I trust the day will come when Washington will be relieved from it.

Mr. McCLEARY. Mr. Chairman, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MORRELL].

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Chairman, with all due respect to the Committee on Rules, I beg to take exception to the manner of attaching this amendment to this bill. It simply means to go back to a system of legislation which has received the evil comment of every legislative body. It is going back to the old system of logrolling, as it was commonly called. I also beg to take exception to the fact of this committee usurping the powers of the legislative subcommittees of the District of Columbia Committee. I fail to see why those committees, if they have been properly requested so to do, should not have reported a bill covering this personal tax. I should also like to call attention of the members of this House to those who are to be affected by this tax. The corporations are to be affected by this personal tax.

Certain people who come from a distance are to be affected by this tax, but those coming from a distance affected by this tax—this personal tax—in its present form number scarcely 100. Now, we have also affected by this tax those who have spent their lives in the service of the United States, both in the Army and the Navy. The retired Army officer and the retired Navy officer expect to and do make their homes in Washington. They have lost to a great extent their associations with the States of their birth, and they come to Washington to make it their home. Surely it is not the desire of Congress to tax those people. There is another class of people, namely, the Government employees, likewise living in Washington, who have scraped together perhaps during a long period of service sufficient money to purchase their own little home. Surely the Government does not desire to put a personal inquisitorial tax on that class of people. Then we have also the storekeepers and the merchants, both those who are attracted here to supply the wants of these few tax jumpers, as we might term them, and also those who are attracted here to supply the wants of the other two classes. Surely we do not want to drive them out of business by a personal tax.

Mr. PAYNE. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. MORRELL. Certainly.

Mr. PAYNE. Do you not think these people have been almighty lucky that they have not had to pay any personal tax during the last twenty-five years, different from the citizens of the United States generally in that respect?

Mr. MORRELL. Well, because they have not been obliged to pay a tax for the last twenty-five years is no reason why they should pay it now.

Mr. PAYNE. Is there any reason why they should not be obliged to pay taxes as every other citizen of the United States and every State in the Union—a tax on personalty as well as on realty?

Mr. MORRELL. There is no more reason why they should pay it this year any more than any other year.

Mr. PAYNE. Do you not think they ought to be exempted from all taxes, real and personal?

Mr. MORRELL. Yes; if it was possible to carry on the District government without taxing them I would be in favor of not taxing them.

Mr. PAYNE. Of course the General Government could pay it all.

Mr. MORRELL. Yes.

Mr. PAYNE. And these poor corporations and these gentlemen who have located here could get along without paying anything.

Mr. MORRELL. I am in favor of a limited taxation, but not of the character proposed in the present law.

Mr. SIBLEY. I should like to ask my colleague if he does not think that Washington would soon become the largest city in America if those who lived here were exempted from all taxation, both real and personal?

Mr. MORRELL. I do. But I should also like to ask the gentleman, does he not think that Washington would cease to increase in the ratio that it has been doing if this personal tax was enforced?

Mr. SIBLEY. I should hope not. I should hope that Washington is not dependent upon immunity from taxation for its growth. I think it has too many other advantages.

Mr. MORRELL. I think to a very great extent it is.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we have heard a good deal about this theory of pay as you go. There is no large municipality in this country that pays as it goes. No big business enterprise, no railroad ever was built that paid as it went. Neither does the Government of this country pay as it goes. I have here a statement showing the surplus and deficit at the beginning of each fiscal year up to December, 1901, from July 1, 1889, and the extraordinary expenditures for the same period paid wholly or in part from the District revenues.

This shows that to-day, if the extraordinary expenditures were not included in the District of Columbia budget for this year, we would have a difference between $782,436, which has been expended for these extraordinary improvements, and $716,155, which is the deficit to-day, and which we are trying to make up. Therefore it is not fair, in my judgment, that the Commissioners should be blamed for extravagance. It is not fair that the Committee on the District of Columbia should be placed in the light of spending more money than it has revenue, when these extraordinary expenditures are forced upon the District by the Government. I know of no other municipality in this country where such extraordinary expenditures as the increasing of the water supply and the extension of streets are met directly each year by taxation.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we are also told that this new adjustment of taxation which is in progress will yield a sufficient revenue to supply the deficiency that is at present worrying the members of the Committee on Appropriations. I sincerely trust that this law in its crude condition—because it is crude—will not be attached to this appropriation bill without being amended so as not to be inquisitorial in its conditions or exacting as it is at present.

Mr. McCLEARY. Mr. Chairman, I yield to my colleague on the committee [Mr. BURKETT] such time as he desires.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that at this time I care to go into any discussion of the merits or demerits of the proposition to tax personal property. I take it from what has been said that the majority of this House believe that whether a man's money is invested in personal property or in real estate, if he is going to ask protection at the hands of the Government for that property he ought to pay some of the cost of that protection.

One or two things were said by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. McDERMOTT] of which I wish to speak. The first is why we should do what he called an unseemly thing in making permanent improvements by these appropriations from year to year. He argues that the money should be borrowed and bonds issued and paid in later years or during a series of years. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman, if he is here, and the attention of the House to this proposition: Take the illustration that he used of the sewer system. For a good many years we have had here in Washington a very good sewerage system. It has answered the demands very well.

Some eight or ten years ago a commission was appointed, who laid out a great plan of sewage disposal, what they called a great sewage-disposal system, and they said that ultimately we ought to have that system. Now, there were two ways to accomplish that. There was no immediate necessity for it, as is true of some of these other improvements; that is, while it was desirable and a good thing and ultimately we want to reach that ideal sewage-disposal system here in Washington, yet its immediate completion was not particularly necessary.

It was estimated that it would cost about $5,000,000 to complete that sewage-disposal system. Congress could have permitted the borrowing of the money and the issuing of bonds, and could have undertaken that gigantic proposition all at one time just as is done in the majority of instances in other cities, as the gentleman from New Jersey has suggested. But Congress did not do that.

Congress said they would begin it, and that they would keep it up until that sewage-disposal system was completed, building part of it from year to year as we had the money to do it. Now, whether or not that was the better way, that is the policy that Congress has adopted and is the plan we are working on now, and the present bill only continues that established policy. In my judgment, after thinking of it considerably, under our peculiar circumstances it is the better policy, as I am going to try to explain. This year, for instance, in carrying out that sewage-disposal system about $400,000 are appropriated, and from year to year we have appropriated something like that amount. For example, here is a sewer that is called the boundary-line sewer, which runs clear out east of the city and finally into the river. It is probably 4 or 5 miles long, as I understand it. That was begun at the river and we are gradually extending that sewer, building it back further every year as we have money to do it with. In a few years we will have it completed.

There is another sewer in connection with this system on the west side of the city, and from year to year we are appropriating more money to do some portion of the work upon that. When we get it finished we will have it all paid for. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. McDERMOTT] says that these are permanent improvements, and that we ought to borrow money and pay interest on it and do all the work at once.

The facts are, if the gentleman will investigate, that we have been able, without raising the taxes on the people of this District to an unseemly figure, to go on with these improvements from year to year and pay for them out of the current revenues, and have been able in this way to appropriate about all the money that the city officials could use advantageously in developing this system of improvements. We might have borrowed the money, but would it have been cheaper? We would have been paying interest on it. Is it not better to put as much money as we can put into this sewage-disposal system from year to year? At the end of twelve or fifteen years we will have this sewage-disposal system completed for all time to come and every foot of it paid for.

Mr. PALMER. Why not let posterity pay for some of it?

Mr. BURKETT. I will come to that. I am willing to do a little something for posterity.

Mr. PALMER. What has posterity ever done for us in the way of paying for improvements?

Mr. BURKETT. I am coming to the posterity part of this matter in a moment. This is our present policy, and of course you may ask the question, Is it the best policy? In answering this question we should always bear in mind the peculiar and unusual circumstances and conditions that pertain here. There is no city in the world in the position of the city of Washington. The United States Government pays one-half of the expenses. There is no city governed like Washington, for the Congress of the United States is the common council.

One administration comes in and another administration goes out; one party comes into control and another party goes out as the politics of the country change. One Congress might plan one thing and another something else; but, sirs, if Congress shall ever start upon that policy of permitting this District to bond itself for the things that the people of this District believe they ought to have or are persuaded they ought to have, then, sir, we will soon have reached such a gigantic system of bonding that posterity will never be able to pay out.

We, as the representatives of this country, coming from all the States of the Union, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, are the guardians of this city. I, for one, think we ought not to begin a bonding system or establish a precedent of this kind for future Congresses to follow or hide behind in what might at some time be reckless and extravagant. Congress legislates for the people of the District of Columbia, but is not responsible to them on election day, and every precaution should be taken to prevent any opportunity for undue expenditure and consequent heavy burdens of taxation. So long as we go on a cash basis there can be no danger. But if we shall once start on the bonding system we will reach in this District a bonded indebtedness that the people will never be able to pay out.

Now, let me reply to the gentleman about leaving something for posterity to do. There will always be plenty for posterity to do. This is the capital of the nation, and there will never come a time when there will not be expenditures of an extraordinary nature. Let me suggest to him this. In this matter of public roads, for instance, that we are building. These are not necessities. Congress knows it is not a necessity to extend Connecticut avenue or Massachusetts avenue away out into the country, but we are doing it. We know it is not a necessity to extend the county roads out to the District line, but we are doing it. We are anticipating the future in this.

But every one of us is doing something for the future. We ought to. We want to leave conditions for the future better than we received them. There will be abundance for posterity to do, as I have said, as this capital grows and as its population is increased. There will be improvements from year to year, and as much as the people will be able to pay for as they are made. The gentleman from New Jersey would complete them all at once and pay for them as years go on; on the other hand, we are making them as the years go on and paying cash as we go.

Mr. PALMER. Are these paid for half and half, for the grading of these roads, by the District and by the Government? Does the District pay one half and the Government of the United States the other half, or do the landowners through whose land the roads are laid pay something on account of the improvement?

Mr. BURKETT. The District pays half, and half is paid by the Government.

Mr. PALMER. If you lay out Connecticut avenue, or any other street, and improve the value by 400 or 500 per cent, the landowner gets the unearned increment, does he not? Why should not the landowner whose land is thus improved be laid under the same contribution that is laid in every civilized country upon the people whose land is thus to be improved?

Mr. BURKETT. Well, the gentleman's question, as I understand it, is: Why not make the landowner pay? You might just as well ask me why we do not make the property owner pave the streets and build the sidewalks, as they do in my city, and I presume in yours.

Mr. PALMER. Why should they not do so?

Mr. BURKETT. Why, because we have adopted here a different policy. When you go to build a sidewalk here the Government and the District pays half, and when you go to pave any of the streets in the city they pay it all. Out where I live the property owner pays for it all. That is the policy here as differing from the policy prevailing in most cities I know anything about.

Mr. LACEY. If the gentlemen will permit me, Mr. Chairman, the effect of this is to induce men who have vacant lands to urge a system of improvements, knowing that no charge is assessed on their property, and thus we are stimulating building streets out into the country beyond where the houses are. Is not that the fact?

Mr. BURKETT. That is the fact in some particulars. But I may say to the gentleman that there are a great many streets in the District paved entirely by private enterprise. Of course, the House will understand this. Here is the capital city. By the Constitution Congress has full power to legislate exclusively for the District of Columbia. We are interested in making this capital city a beautiful city; we are interested in governing it as we want it governed; we are interested in paving it as we want it paved; we are interested in having the streets as wide as we want them—in short, the Congress of the United States comes here to legislate for this city, for all the people of the United States, because it is their capital. For myself, as it has been thought in the past, no doubt, when this policy was established, if we are to construct these improvements, if we are to say how much they shall be from year to year, how good they shall be, what they shall be, it is proper that we should help pay for them. Congress in the past has established this policy, and also that we shall pay for these improvements as they go on.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Let me direct your mind to this, not representing the individual taxpayer in the matter of these improvements: The Federal Government pays one-half of them. Now, if you get this into your mind and make the calculation, I am honestly of the conviction that you will find the result will be this: If you impose the cost of these permanent improvements wholly upon the individual taxpayer and let him pay them according to the rule by which permanent improvements are paid for in every other city, and if the Federal Government contributes nothing, the citizen paying into a sinking fund the amount of interest that has to be met every year, extending over a period of years, the cost would be less to this generation and also to the next generation.

Mr. BURKETT. Well, now, it appears that the gentleman is misapprehending the fact. The gentleman does not undertake to say that we can do just as much improvement and just as good improvement as we are doing in the District of Columbia now if the Government should not contribute anything to the improvements, and at the same time the taxpayer would pay less taxes than now?

Mr. McDERMOTT. I say that taking as an illustration the improvement of the waterworks. Under the law now it is to cost $4,000,000, and the Government pays $2,000,000. Then divide it into five assessments, and assess 4 per cent upon the District of Columbia, upon the private property owner; I say it would be better for the private property owner, for their prosperity, if the Government should subtract or rather withdraw its contribution of $2,000,000 and allow the people to create a sinking fund which would be redeemable, say, in fifty years, and allow the people owning the property in the District of Columbia to sustain the expense of the entire waterworks. It would be a great deal better and would impose less burden upon them than the present method of assessment.

Mr. BURKETT. I must admit that I am unable to see how you can ever make $4,000,000 payable easier in fifty years than you can by paying it at present, if you are able to pay it, and when you get some one else to pay one-half of it. I am unable to see how the District of Columbia, without any contribution from the General Government, could pay any cheaper for the water system in fifty years, and have to pay twice as much then as they will have to pay now, than they can pay under the present system when the Government contributes to it.

Mr. McDERMOTT. I will tell the gentleman how. You would rather have a sinking fund imposed upon your property, even if it runs eighty years, than to be forced to pay for it in four installments. Gentlemen must recollect, further, that there is imposed on the people of the District of Columbia a general expense account fixed by Congress that the people have nothing to do with. If they had anything to do with it, they would cut it in two, as does any other municipal government in the country.

Mr. BURKETT. If there was nothing for the District of Columbia to do but to build a water plant, if there was nothing for the District of Columbia to do but to build a sewage system, if the question was whether they should pay for it in four years or in a longer time, it might be easier or more convenient for them to have the longer time; but that does not get down to the bottom of the question for this reason: A man is not taxed any more in this city than a man that lives out in another city in the United States, and I doubt if he is taxed as much.

Now, so far as we are able to go on and anticipate these improvements, such as building the sewerage system and completing the water plant; so long as we can follow the present plan to complete these things as needed and pay for them as we go and at the same time not impose on the taxpayers of this District a burden larger than the taxpayer pays in the average city of the United States, I do not understand where the taxpayer of this District has anything to complain of.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Do you know of any city where they allow you to fix the tax rate because somebody pays a higher rate in another city?

Mr. BURKETT. No; nobody claims that.

Mr. McDERMOTT. The rule is to make the tax rate as low as possible.

Mr. BURKETT. The rule here is to develop and beautify the city as much as possible, and not be burdensome beyond reason to the people. I say that as long as under the present policy we can go on building up and developing this city, making the permanent improvements that are necessary and pay for them as we go, and at the same time are not unduly—and by unduly I mean taxing any higher than they are taxed in other cities—so long as by that plan and under that system we are not unduly taxing the taxpayer, they have nothing to complain of.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Does the gentleman know of any other city in the United States where they are taxed $1.50 on a hundred dollars, as in the District of Columbia?

Mr. BURKETT. They do not pay that in the District of Columbia.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Because the law is tentative, but does the gentleman know of any city where they collect a tax of $1.50 cents on the hundred dollars?

Mr. BURKETT. I know of a number of cities in the United States where the tax on the actual valuation is higher than it is in the District of Columbia.

Mr. McDERMOTT. I would like to have the gentleman state if he knows of any city where the tax is $1.50 on the full value.

Mr. BURKETT. They do not pay that here on the full value.

Mr. McDERMOTT. But that is the proposition in this bill.

Mr. BURKETT. That is what the law has been since 1877, and you have been paying on a 65 per cent valuation. Now, let me read what it says here:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That for the support of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, there shall be levied upon all lands outside of the cities of Washington and Georgetown held and used solely for agricultural purposes a tax of $1.25 on each $100 of the assessed value thereof, and upon all other real and personal property in said District, excepting only the real and personal property of the United States and that hereinafter stated, a tax of $1.50—

On what?—

on each $100 of the assessed value thereof.

And that "assessed value thereof" is about 60 or 65 per cent.

Mr. McDERMOTT. What is the sworn duty of the assessor in assessing the value?

Mr. BURKETT. There is nothing said about that here.

Mr. PALMER. Suppose a man has got a hundred-dollar Government bond?

Mr. BURKETT. Oh, the gentleman does not want to use that as an illustration.

Mr. PALMER. Well, suppose he has a mortgage bearing 4 or 5 per cent interest, what will he have to pay on that?

Mr. BURKETT. If it is assessed at its full value, he would have to pay the tax on it.

Mr. PALMER. How could you get the assessor to assess it for any less than that? I am talking about a good mortgage. Take Pennsylvania Railroad stock or the Chicago and Northwestern stock.

Mr. BURKETT. As a matter of fact, the citizens of this District have not been taxed for the full value under the law.

Mr. PALMER. But you are proposing to tax him $1.50 on every $100.

Mr. BURKETT. Yes; and he ought to be taxed to that extent.

Mr. PALMER. I will simply repeat the question of the gentleman from New Jersey. Do you know any place in the world where there is imposed a personal tax of $1.50 on every $100?

Mr. BURKETT. I do not know any place in the world where property is not taxed to the same extent that it is taxed here, on an equal assessed valuation.

Mr. PALMER. But you are proposing to assess the property at its full value.

Mr. WARNOCK. Let me say that there is not a city in Ohio where people do not pay a tax of from 1 to 3 per cent on the full face value of every good mortgage that they own.

Mr. PALMER. How many are honest enough to make the return and pay the tax?

Mr. WARNOCK. A good many.

Mr. BURKETT. Now, I want to go just a step further and suggest one other thing which so far as I have heard has not been brought out in this debate.

In 1877, as has been shown, this general taxing law, as printed in the RECORD this morning, was passed. It has been on the statute book since 1877, and Judge Clabaugh, in the decision rendered the other day, says that it is a good law, an equitable law. Now, gentlemen attack this law and argue as if we were trying to legislate somewhere along that line. We are only undertaking to do what the judge in making that decision said should be done; we are undertaking to create offices to put that law into effect.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Though I dislike to interrupt the gentleman again, will he allow me a single remark? With regard to the judicial opinion to which he has just referred, I do not know what right a judge has to say whether a law is a good and equitable law or not. It is his business to apply the law to particular cases and to decide whether the law is constitutional. But a judicial declaration that a particular law is a good law and is proper legislation is of very little force.

Mr. BURKETT. Very well, I will waive that proposition.

Mr. McDERMOTT. One further question: Does the amendment to be proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] impose this year's taxation alone on personal property, or does it impose every year's taxation that would have been imposed under the law of 1877 if that law had been valid and had been enforced? In my opinion and according to my reading of its provisions it imposes all the taxes that could have been imposed if the law had been valid and the necessary machinery in operation.

In other words, you propose, under the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, to impose taxation for all past years. That is my view of the reading of the act. Therefore you will impose, in some cases, a taxation of 10 or 20 per cent. I only state this for the purpose of getting the view of the gentleman, and to illustrate that this is not a proper method of legislation.

Mr. BURKETT. I will come to that matter directly. Let me continue the point which I was discussing.

This law of 1877 was passed, covering both personal property and real property. We have been operating under that law. Some personal taxes have been collected under that law during all these years since its enactment. We have assessed and levied taxes, real and personal, during all these years. Several acts have been passed amending the assessment laws pertaining to real estate. For instance, in 1892 a little clause was inserted in a sundry civil appropriation bill providing that the President should appoint three assistant assessors to equalize the taxation on real estate. Two years later, in 1894, an act of considerable proportions was passed providing for the appointment of three assessors to take the place of those provided for by the law of 1892. So that during all this time, or at least since 1892, we have had the machinery to carry on the real-estate side of this law of 1877.

Now, in 1878, as has been stated here, Congress passed the organic law of the District of Columbia, which contained a provision authorizing the Commissioners to abolish any office or to consolidate any two or more offices. The exact words of the part of section 9 pertaining thereto are as follows:

And said Commissioners are hereby authorized to abolish any office, to consolidate two or more offices, reduce the number of employees, remove from office, and make appointments to any office under them authorized by law.

On December 21, 1878, after the passage of that act, the Commissioners of the District did abolish two of the assessors that had previously been provided for and consolidated the other office of assessor with the office of treasurer and the office of the superintendent of assessments and taxes under the name of "treasurer and assessor's office." Observe that these officers went on and assessed personal and real property.

In 1892 and in 1894, as I have stated, the law was changed and the machinery was created for equalizing taxes upon real estate. But nothing was ever done in that respect in reference to personal estate. Some persons, however, paid their taxes on personal property; and we have made appropriations from year to year with reference to that object. For instance, I find that we provided an appropriation of $1,500 to pay somebody to go around and coax the people into paying personal taxes in this District; and some persons have paid those taxes.

Some, however, said a year ago "We will not pay this personal tax; you can not collect it; it is not legal." The matter was taken before the courts. The attorneys of the District undertook to uphold the law. I have here a very able and exhaustive brief by the district attorney, Mr. Andrew B. Duvall. He went into the matter very thoroughly. Judge Clabaugh held in his decision that the personal-tax law, as it stood on the statute books, could not be enforced. Why? Because, as he said, there was nobody to enforce it. Let me read briefly from his opinion:

There is nothing in any act of Congress to suggest the thought that Congress intended to do away with the scheme of taxation which it had set up. I believe that scheme is the law to-day—and if there was any one to carry it out it would still be in force. In my judgment, the law is absolutely and entirely constitutional. I believe it is a good law and a fair law, and if there was machinery to carry it out, I would unquestionably hold these proceedings could not be maintained. * * * The District Commissioners have abolished the very persons that Congress directed should carry the law into effect, and until they are restored the law can not be enforced.

Referring to the law of 1877—

Judge Clabaugh held that when the Commissioners, back there in 1878, within six months after the passage of that organic law, had by consolidating one assessor in with the treasurer made them the board of assessors, they performed an act of legislation which they did not have any right to do and had destroyed the machinery which Congress had provided for collecting taxes. But in 1892 and 1894, as I have said, Congress provided the machinery to collect the taxes on real estate, and therefore we have had taxes on real estate collected. If there was any lack of machinery as to real estate during some of these years the people did not find it out and it was corrected later. Now, we found out this last winter that we were not able to collect taxes on personal property. A great many people had had a suspicion of it for some time. But then it was definitely announced that we could not enforce collection of taxes levied under that law that has stood since 1877.

Why gentlemen attack it: Some of them say it is drastic. To a man who feels, as some of them have said here, that you ought not to pay any taxes on personal property, of course it is a drastic measure, for it was made to collect them. I do not know that it will be possible to reach all the personal property. I surmise there will be a good many notes, a good many things that will be held out and concealed—as they are in every State, as is the common experience—which will never be reached by this board of assessors.

But, sir, what I desire to impress upon the House is this: That this is not legislating any new tax law onto the District. It is not a new revenue system. It is a law that we have had since 1877, and that nobody ever dreamed was not a tax law—I will not say dreamed, because there were a good many who did, but that nobody ever knew certainly was not a valid and enforceable law until last December, when Judge Clabaugh rendered that decision. Then what is intended by this little addition, this little paragraph, these few lines added to this appropriation bill, is only to correct the error that Judge Clabaugh found in the law last winter. It merely provides a way for the collection of these taxes on property which this law, more than twenty years old, has provided for during all these years should be assessed and should be collected.

Mr. BELLAMY. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BURKETT. Certainly.

Mr. BELLAMY. What is the estimated value of the personal property that may be reached under this rider?

Mr. BURKETT. Well, I will say to the gentleman that I have tried pretty hard to get an estimate. I can not make any better estimate than the gentleman can, personally. I have asked a good many who ought to know, and for some reason we never have been able to get an estimate. It has been roughly estimated that this will, if enforced, pay in a million of dollars in taxes in round numbers, and some say a million and a half.

Mr. BELLAMY. If that is so, if it brings in a million dollars' worth of taxes, then do you not think the rate of one and a half is too high in the District? You would have a million dollars more than you would need.

Mr. BURKETT. I will say to the gentleman this, that it will not bring any more money than the people of the District are ambitious to spend, if the estimates of the Commissioners are a criterion.

Let me say this in connection with that: The Appropriation Committee in this House—it is a matter now in the House—are met with this proposition: Here is a District with 300,000 people, and their wants are unlimited. They want to build a memorial bridge; they want to establish a great park system; they want to keep these beautiful little parks that we have in the city already going and have flowers, and they want the streets swept and cleaned, and they want pure water, and they want a sewage-disposal system. They are here demanding for the building and improvement of these roads. They came in and asked through their Commissioners for Congress to appropriate $10,000,000 in round numbers.

Your committee said to those Commissioners: "We do not believe that we should; in fact, we believe we are bound not to spend a dollar more than we have in hand. In short, in the past you have run in debt; you have got $14,000,000 of bonded indebtedness, and you owe something like $1,300,000 up at the Treasury, you owe some interest and that sort of thing, and we believe we ought not to appropriate a dollar more than you have in sight." We asked them to cut down their estimates. The committee finally took a hand in the paring and finally we got this bill down practically, as we believe, within the available revenues.

Now, if this would raise a million dollars of personal tax, and if Congress would then give another million of dollars on top of that, as they would be obliged to do under the compact by which the organic act was passed, then we would have $2,000,000 more than we have now, and that would still lack $1,000,000 of doing what the people of this District, through their Commissioners, have asked us to do this year. In short, if a cent and a half on the dollar, or on 65 per cent of that dollar, is not too high taxation, I want to say there is no doubt but what we can go on and spend it legitimately, and spend it for the good and for the beautifying and development of this District, and yet not get beyond the specifications of wants of the District. As one member of Congress, as I have said repeatedly, I am in favor of beautifying this District within reasonable bounds.

I am proud of the city. It is my capital, just the same as it is the capital of all of us, and whenever this city is willing to raise a dollar in taxes I am willing to take another dollar out of the Treasury and do $2 worth of improvement. I am also reminded to suggest that we passed a bill carrying a million and a half of dollars day before yesterday, for which we will have to provide in some way.

Mr. PALMER. Your amendment provides that this act is "hereby declared in full force and effect, and to have been continuously so enforced since its enactment." That was in 1877, which is twenty-five years. Now, under the terms of that act what would hinder you from levying $37.50 on every hundred dollars of personal property in the District, if this act has been continuously enforced since 1877?

Mr. BURKETT. I am glad the gentleman suggested that, for I promised the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCDERMOTT] that I would give my idea on it.

Now, if you have taxed personal property in years gone by, if that property has been taxed, the tax stands on the books against the man who owned the property; and whether we pass this law or not, he owes that tax. If in times past a man's property has not been taxed, there is no authority, under this law or any other law that ever I heard of, except as specifically passed for that purpose, to send the assessor out next year and tax a man's personal property ten years ago or five years ago or six months ago. So, in my judgment, this law is not retroactive in that respect. You can not collect any more taxes than have been assessed in times past; and if they have been assessed they are a debt, and they are due, and the owner has got to pay them, and he ought to pay them.

Mr. SIMS. Is it not a common thing that many States have laws by which they back assess property that has not been assessed; and what is to hinder from back assessing the property here, within the limitation?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How much does the present census show there is of personal property in the city of Washington that is taxable? How much was shown by the last census? The gentleman can answer the two questions.

Mr. BURKETT. Well, I do not know that the information is published. At least I have not seen it, and in all our examinations we have not found it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I think that information has been made public, and it would certainly disclose a great deal if we had it here. I think the gentleman could get it by telephone from the Bureau.

Mr. BURKETT. We have asked for that several times, and we received the response that it had not been published. That was the reply that was made only the other day.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I am satisfied that if you go there and tell them you want to base legislation on it, Mr. Merriam will set somebody at work to give you the information at once.

Mr. BURKETT. I will say to the gentleman that it is very questionable in my mind, if that is true, whether we ought to go into the rating question under this legislation.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Go into what?

Mr. BURKETT. Into the rating question of what should be assessed. We ought not to change the rate, on this bill, even if we knew just how much taxes would be raised. In short, we are only seeking, in this legislation that we hope to pass in connection with this bill, to enforce the old law. If it is not a good law there will be plenty of people to come here next year and advise us of the fact that they have been assessed too much. There will be plenty of people who will be in favor of reducing taxes, whereas there are very few, so far as we can find out, who are willing to help us and encourage us in really trying to impose proper taxes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Is not personal property taxed at all in the District?

Mr. BURKETT. Some of it; yes. As some one has said here to-day, street-car companies are taxed 4 per cent on their gross income. Insurance companies are taxed 1½ per cent on premiums, and loan and trust companies, I believe.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I mean what we ordinarily term personal property.

Mr. BURKETT. In the main, no; it is not.

Mr. SIMS. Is there any law here providing for the back assessment of property that has escaped taxation?

Mr. BURKETT. I will say that I have not looked this up thoroughly, and this is entirely offhand; but I do not believe that under this law you can go back and assess any property that has not been assessed in times past.

Mr. SIMS. Does not that offer a premium, then, to escape? And if you have a law that will not allow you to back assess, where property has escaped, will not that offer a premium to hold out and dodge?

Mr. BURKETT. You mean in the future?

Mr. SIMS. If this law passes.

Mr. BURKETT. There is plenty of inducement to escape taxation. They have escaped in the past, not for the sake of getting out of it in the future, but for the sake of getting out of it at that time; and if they have escaped in the past, I do not see how under this law you can go back by virtue of this reenacting clause and make good any failure to assess property in the past. I do not see how this clause which puts the old law into force has any effect in that line whatever. Whatever you might have done under that law of 1877 if the machinery had never been abolished you can do now with that machinery rehabilitated, and no more, in my judgment.

Mr. SIMS. Why not let it provide, if it does not provide, for back assessment, where the property has escaped taxation?

Mr. BURKETT. That might be well enough; but on the back-tax question, I think if this tax law itself is not good that it ought to be brought up at some time and amended on its own merits when it comes from the proper committee. It has been on the statute books since 1877. We have taxed real and personal property under it, and there has never been anybody to come in here and attack that law.

Mr. SIMS. Does the gentleman say a great deal has been collected under this law?

Mr. BURKETT. Yes; I understand there has been collected a great deal of personal tax under the law.

Mr. SIMS. Why not have it as perfect as you can get it, and have a back-tax provision that will secure the matter hereafter?

Mr. BURKETT. Well, that is for the House to say.

Mr. SIMS. What does the gentleman say?

Mr. BURKETT. I think if this Government has not got the tax assessed for years and years it ought not to go back. In short, if the Government has not provided the proper machinery for proper assessments in years gone by it is of doubtful propriety, in my mind, to go back, at least very many years back.

Mr. SIMS. Then why not fix it so that it can be attended to in the future, by compelling the assessor to have them assessed?

Mr. BURKETT. Well, I do not know as to that being a good provision. I do not know of any State that has any such provision.

Mr. SIMS. I do not know of any State that has not.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The State of Tennessee in one case got over $300,000 in back taxes.

Mr. WARNOCK. The State of Ohio allows them to go back for five years.

Mr. BURKETT. Since I think of it and understand the question, that statement was incorrect. Some States have that sort of a law.

Mr. McDERMOTT. If the gentleman will permit me, I am not fighting the tax upon personal property. Now, the proposed amendment the gentleman understands is not to assess back taxes. Let me say it is not for that, but it is "for all purposes."

That for all purposes of assessment and collection of taxes upon personal property in the District of Columbia the act of Congress approved March 3, 1877, entitled "An act for the support of the government of the District of Columbia for the year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes," as amended by specific acts of Congress, is hereby declared to be in full force and effect, and to have been continuously so in force since its enactment (in 1877). And that the board of assistant assessors created under the act of Congress approved August 14, 1894, be, and they are hereby, clothed with the duties and power of the assessors mentioned in the first-named act.

Now, if the act is to be present declaratory legislation, said to be in force and to have been continuously in force, and the duties under it are imposed upon the board, necessarily under the act these men perform the duties not only then present incumbent upon the board, but those that have been neglected in the past, otherwise our declaration that it should have been continuously in force for the use of the present assessment can not be the purpose. Therefore, as it is drawn, no matter what the intention was, it does not confer power upon the board of assistant assessors to assess property away back from here if it had not been assessed.

That is the plain reading of this amendment as it is now proposed. On the question of whether this kind of legislation should be adopted, I am not quarreling with the taxation of personal property, but what I state is that it is not getting at it in a reasonable way. We ought to have a law that was a good one.

Mr. BURKETT. I will say to the gentleman from New Jersey that in my opinion if that law is not effective and does not reach property then we ought to go at it and amend it. It is subject to amendment.

Mr. McDERMOTT. But the committee reported it, and I do not see any objection to the assessment. The gentleman argued that taxes have been unpaid for a long time; but is that what you want? It is not a question as to the propriety of the legislation, but what does the legislation mean in the minds of those who recommend it to the House?

Mr. BURKETT. I will say to the gentleman that during these years there have been some taxes assessed and collected and paid into the Treasury. Now we have recognized that law. I will say, also, that we have appropriated money to enforce that law, and we have created the office to do the work from time to time. We have recognized it by appropriations, and a specific fund was raised from that taxation from time to time. In short, Congress has always said, by every syllable and word and sentence of legislation in connection with this thing put upon the statute book—and more than a dozen times it has said—that the law is in full force and effect.

And when the committee wrote out that amendment it did not want to unsay what it had said a dozen times before; it did not want to put these people, who had paid taxes into the Treasury, in a position where they would come in and ask to have those taxes refunded. We did not want claims coming into Congress for the refunding of taxes illegally assessed. That law has been on the statute book, Congress says, in full force and effect during all these years, and we have operated under it.

I do not believe that now we can go back, especially by virtue of this act that we propose to-day, and impose a dollar of tax on anybody that has not been assessed and is not upon the books. If you could do it by the terms of that law before, you can do it when this bill is passed. But by virtue of this clause which we propose to add, showing it has been in full force, there is no question in my mind that it does not give a single additional power that you have not had in the law during all these years.

Mr. COWHERD. Will the gentleman allow me an interruption?

Mr. BURKETT. Certainly.

Mr. COWHERD. One reason why the personal tax has not been collected was on account of a decision of the court in the District that the change in the law that occurred shortly after 1877, possibly in the enabling act of 1878, put it in such a shape that it was not enforceable without some mandatory legislation.

Mr. BURKETT. That may have been one of the reasons why the tax has not been collected; there have been a good many decisions, but no decision holding what the gentleman says until the decision of the 20th of last December. There have been a good many people who contended that you could not collect the personal tax, and a good many escaped it for that reason; a good many dodged it, but all the time a good many have paid a personal-property tax. I want to say that they criticise us for doing this thing, and yet you have not heard any particular complaint from the District of Columbia Committee.

I think a number of members of that committee will say to the House, as they have said to the Committee on Appropriations, that for five years they have been trying to straighten this matter out. The fact is that when you undertake to make a tax law, if you have ever undertaken it in your legislature at home, if you have undertaken to put into force a complete revenue system at one time, you will realize the difficulty you have been up against. In this way you can force this matter through, legitimately, properly, and give full time to consider it and discuss it; not to amend that law my judgment dictates. But if the judgment of the House may think it should be changed, it is certainly open to amendment. But if we pass this little clause we make that law effective which we have said all these years has been operative and, in fact, supposed was in operation.

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman from Nebraska allow me a question?

Mr. BURKETT. Certainly.

Mr. SIMS. From the gentleman's statement it appears that some people who have been assessed have paid voluntarily; that is a fact?

Mr. BURKETT. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. Others who have been legally assessed have refused to pay?

Mr. BURKETT. That is true.

Mr. SIMS. Now, if you do not provide for collecting the revenue from those who have been legally assessed and who have refused to pay, will you not raise an equity in favor of those who have paid voluntarily, so that they will claim that the tax shall be refunded?

Mr. BURKETT. No; you will raise the legal question whether we have a right to enforce the collection.

Mr. SIMS. I understood the gentleman to say that he was not in favor of going back and collecting those taxes.

Mr. BURKETT. No; the gentleman misunderstood me. I said that, if there was any property the assessors had not gotten, I did not believe that we ought at this time to go back and hunt up property that had not been found at that time—at least for any considerable number of years back—and which tax was not collected upon by reason of not having the proper machinery. I did not say that that which had been found and assessed, and was on the books of the treasurer against those individuals—I did not say that that ought not to be paid. I believe in collecting every dollar of the tax that is on the books.

Mr. SIMS. Will not this law authorize such a collection?

Mr. BURKETT. Yes; and it will only raise the question whether this tax has been legally assessed. If it has not been legally assessed, of course it can not be collected. The court has said that it was not a legal assessment.

Mr. BINGHAM. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BURKETT. Certainly.

Mr. BINGHAM. I asked the same question in committee, and I want to ask it now here in the presence of the whole committee. In the enforcement of the requirements of the act of 1877 wherein there has been laches and neglect, does the reenactment in this bill providing that personal taxes shall be paid go back of this year?

Mr. BURKETT. Do you mean the collecting of taxes heretofore assessed, or the assessment of new taxes?

Mr. BINGHAM. Anything and everything. Do you start de novo this year, or do you run back to 1877?

Mr. BURKETT. I have been trying to give my opinion——

Mr. BINGHAM. I want the matter stated specifically.

Mr. BURKETT. I will state to the gentleman what I think this law will do. This clause which we propose to add to the existing law does not confer one additional right on the District, nor does it take away any right of any individual under the law of 1877. We simply, by this little clause, which we propose to add, create officers for the enforcement of the law of 1877.

Mr. BINGHAM. How far back do you run?

Mr. BURKETT. How far back does what run?

Mr. BINGHAM. Your enforcement of the law of 1877.

Mr. BURKETT. Certainly; it runs back just as far as any assessing officers during all these years would have had the right to go.

Mr. BINGHAM. Then, if the gentleman's position is correct, you can enforce upon the residents of this city the payment of taxes from 1877.

Mr. BURKETT. If the tax has been levied and stands against them, if it was levied legally, I answer yes. Of course, there may arise a question of the legality of the assessment. Suppose, for instance, a tax was levied in 1899——

Mr. BINGHAM. I do not care when it was levied; 1877 was the date of the act.

Mr. BURKETT. And suppose that tax stands on the books as an assessment against an individual, John Smith. Now, if under the law you can go back to the time before it was declared there was no machinery for the enforcement of the law and can put the law in force, you can, in my judgment, collect the tax if this clause is enacted.

Mr. BINGHAM. Then this personal tax may run back to 1877. Is that so?

Mr. BURKETT. If it was legally assessed. But the courts have held that in certain cases this tax was not legally assessed.

Mr. BELLAMY. May I ask the gentleman a question?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BENTON. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] thirty minutes or so much thereof as he may desire.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, the question which is now before the committee and which will later come before the House would seem to the uninitiated to be a very simple one. It is whether personal property in the District of Columbia shall be subject to taxation as is personal property in the States. If one had not heard here in the discussion of this question or had not read in the newspapers that personal property ought to be exempt from taxation in this District in order to attract here as permanent residents the wealthy men of the country, he could not realize, I think, that such a claim could be entertained or would be advanced by anybody.

The people who are to be attracted here by exemption from taxation, it must be supposed, are to come mainly from the different States of the Union—States having in this body their Representatives and at the other end of the Capitol their Senators. Every rich man who is to be attracted to Washington by exemption from taxation is a man whose personal property is to be taken out of the taxable wealth of the neighborhood in which he now lives. In other words, each vote and every act here to entice these men from the States in which they now dwell to the city of Washington is an effort, and, if accomplished, will be a deed, to take from the taxable wealth of the several communities represented here and to add it to the nontaxable wealth of the great national capital.

Now, at first blush it would seem to me, as merely an ordinary Representative of a country constituency, that there is nothing of fairness or justice, but everything of the opposite of fairness and justice, in this claim and effort at tax exemption for the rich. Attracting wealthy people to the capital by the bait of freedom from taxation and thereby throwing heavier taxes upon the people and the property of the various districts which we represent, enticing those best able to pay taxes, those having the most upon which to pay them, to leave those several communities and come here—legislation in this direction is directly against the interests of our several constituencies, and is, in my judgment, a direct and positive wrong to them.

Passing from that question, why should there be here an exemption from taxation which does not exist elsewhere? It is not because taxation here is heavier than it is elsewhere, for precisely the reverse is true. The limit of taxation in this city, and in the District of Columbia generally, is $1.50 per year on $100; upon agricultural lands, $1.25 upon the $100.

It has been stated in this debate, stated time and again in this House, and is well known, that generally—in every district represented on this floor, I believe I may say—a large share of the people pay a higher rate of taxation than is exacted from the citizens of Washington or the District of Columbia; and it may be said with truthfulness that in a large majority of the Congressional districts the people are taxed very much more than those of Washington City—sometimes two or three or four times as much. Then the claim can not be made that taxation ought to be lowered here because taxation here is excessively high, for, in fact, it is low here and not high.

Another view of the matter. Why should this city of Washington be made an abiding place, through partial and unjust legislation, for the wealthy people of the land, to say nothing of the matter of taxation? What good can come to the country? What good can come to the average American citizen or the average American taxpayer from having congregated in the city of Washington as large a proportion as possible of the wealthy men of the land? I am not going to indulge in any harangue against wealth or any criticism of wealthy people.

I merely say in passing that it can not be best for the masses of the people, who are poor, to gather here in the capital city, and use extraordinary and unjust means to bring here to the capital city an ever-increasing proportion of the wealthy men of the country. They will not be content merely with exemption from taxation, if you give it to them, but they will desire and urge that new avenues be opened to them by legislation for adding to their large holdings. They will desire and urge that this legislation be passed for their benefit and that legislation be defeated because it will not, according to their view, inure to their benefit.

Then you have, if the proposition here submitted and which I hope will be adopted should fail, first, a continuance of a policy or practice of directly by legislation against the interests of the masses of the American people, advertising that the wealthy can by coming here be exempt from taxation; secondly, you would continue to draw them here at the expense directly of the several communities from which they come, and the expense indirectly of the entire Union, the District of Columbia excepted.

Having gathered the rich here in large numbers—I think they are gathering here now faster than fast enough for the good of the country—having gathered them here in large and ever-increasing numbers, who has a doubt that legislation will be influenced more and more and more and more as the years go by by special interests, represented by millionaires drawn here to promote those interests at the expense of the general public?

I think there is every reason why some such legislation as that proposed for collecting taxes from personal property should be adopted, and I think there is no fair or substantial reason against it.

As to whether expenses for permanent improvements should be paid as the improvements are made, or whether those expenses should be extended along through the years and paid gradually, that is a side question which has no bearing upon the main proposition. If that question were to be discussed I think there would be found two sides to it. There are two sides, I would say, to this question of whether permanent improvements should be paid for at the time they are made or payment should be extended through a number of years.

Theoretically, I think the extending of them through a number of years may be correct; there is a good deal of argument or of plausibility for that view. Against that proposition, however, there is this: The people of the present are making the improvements; the people of the present are determining that they shall be made, and if the policy be adopted of calling upon the people of the future, who now are voiceless, to pay for them, the result is likely to be—there is at least danger it will be—that useless liabilities will be incurred, that works not wise or necessary will be projected and carried forward, and that there will be extravagance and waste in their conduct.

As has been well said by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BURKETT] and others, so long as the levy of taxes here is not excessive, so long as permanent improvements made from year to year may be met and paid for year by year as they are made, without any hardship on the citizen taxpayer, there does not seem to be good reason, any substantial reason, for departing from that practice of pay as you go, in order to secure or adopt one theoretically more correct, but practically more burdensome, probably, to the people of the District, and practically more injurious in its general effects.

The ease with which this rule was adopted, the ease with which the House has come to the proposition of providing for putting into operation the law already existing for the levying and collecting of personal taxes, is a suggestion to the House, I think, of how easily the House, when it chooses to do it, when the majority of the members choose to exert themselves, may pass any law, may consider any matter in which the House is interested, any matter which the majority of the House thinks ought to have consideration. The present opportunity to do what ought to be done has been brought about by reporting and adopting a rule, and while not generally in favor of "rules" I am heartily in favor of this one, because I think it is right. But the same thing could be done, if the majority of the House desired to do it, without a rule.

It would only be necessary for an amendment to be offered, as it will be offered later along in accordance with the provisions of this rule—to offer it anyhow, rule or no rule—and if it be ruled out of order, as it might be, for the majority of the House, or the majority of the committee examining and passing upon the question for the time being, to say: "We will consider this; this is a matter of too much importance to be swept aside by rule or ruling; this is a matter of great public importance, and now is the opportunity to consider it, probably the only opportunity to consider it and deal with it, and therefore we will take it up now and now will dispose of it."

Everybody in this country, I think, Mr. Chairman, has a kindly feeling toward this great capital city and a pride in it. Yet, sometimes it suits the purposes of some persons—I have no doubt some of them are sincere in it—to talk about hostility to Washington City and about indifference to the future and the welfare generally of this beautiful capital city. There may be somewhere a feeling of hostility to it and of indifference concerning it; but, generally speaking, I am satisfied that the disposition in legislative halls and among the people who send legislators here is to deal fairly and justly with Washington. And the city has been dealt with fairly and justly and most generously. Half of all the debts, half of all the outlay from year to year for many years in this city, has been met out of the public Treasury.

The argument is made in the way of justification for this system and for its continuance that the Government owns half or more than half of the property in the District, and therefore ought to pay half or more than half of the taxes. This is merely an incidental matter now, because the question of adjusting that is not up. But that argument, in my judgment, is wholly fallacious and utterly without foundation. I do not say that the Government of the United States does not own any property in the city of Washington which ought to be the subject of taxation, and which, properly treated, would be the subject of taxation; but I do say that the great bulk of all its property, the enormous preponderance of everything owned by the Government in this District of Columbia would, by any just canon of taxation, be free from taxation, and would not be taken into account at all in determining the amount of taxable property.

Here is the Capitol, in which we are supposed to be legislating to-day, a very fine structure, occupying a fine site, surrounded by fine, valuable grounds. If you estimate it all simply as private property it is very valuable; but is it private property? Is it such property as anywhere, by any nation, by any lawgivers, would be regarded as property that ought to be listed with the taxable property of the locality in which it is situated? In the States they do not so estimate the statehouse; in the cities they do not so estimate the town hall.

In the counties they do not take into account, in making up the total valuation of taxable property, the court-house, the jail, or any of the other structures or property belonging to the public. Who owns this Capitol and these grounds? And what applies to this applies to all the other public reservations in the city—to the various parks, the streets, the various public buildings. Who owns them? Why, the people of the United States, including the people of the District of Columbia. The people of the whole country own them. The ownership, if you were to divide it up, would be among all of them as citizens, all of them as taxpayers, all of them as property owners, on whatever basis you choose.

Now, the other property in the District is upon an entirely distinct basis. Take a house and lot down here upon a beautiful avenue, worth, say, a hundred thousand dollars. Who owns that house and lot? Is it owned by all the people of the United States, or all the people of the District of Columbia, or the general public? Is it owned for public purposes? Is it used for public purposes? Not at all. It is private property, owned by Mr. A, as the adjoining private property is owned by Mr. B, and the next by Mr. C. It is subversive of all principles upon which just taxation is based, it is contradictory of all sound reason, as it seems to me, to talk about the Government of the United States owning half the property in the District of Columbia and therefore being bound, as a matter of right, to pay half the taxes, or to put up a dollar for every dollar that the taxpayers in the District of Columbia put up in the way of tax money.

Then there is another view of it. If it were not for these public buildings and these parks and these streets, the ownership of the fee to which, I suppose, resides in the General Government, if it were not for these things where would all your other private property be? What the Government has done, what the Government owns, what the Government is, has made this capital city of Washington what it is. These public buildings, these public parks, maintained at public expense, these magnificent streets and avenues, these, the creations of the Government, have made the city of Washington what is, have been, and are, the principal factors in the creation of its taxable property. If the Capitol had been located 20, 30, 40, or 50 miles away, the forest trees would grow upon these hills to-day and the lowlands would be covered with swamps, as they were before the Government filled them up and made them suitable sites for public and private buildings, parks, and streets.

As a matter of fact, the Government taxes itself for the benefit of Washington because it has made other property than its own valuable. It has made a little strip of land 25 feet front by 100 feet deep worth $10,000 or $100,000; and because it has done that, gentlemen say that, as a matter of right, every time there is a dollar of tax collected from that property the Government should put up another dollar. They must assume against the fact that the Government is the owner of its property in the same sense as the private citizen is the owner of his property. There is no city in the land, there is no city in any land, I think, that has ever been dealt with so munificiently as the General Government has dealt with the city of Washington, and is dealing with it to-day.

In addition to all this, according to the philosophy of some gentlemen, Washington is not only to be the asylum of the wealthy, but it is to be the Mecca to which the wealthy are to be invited from all over the land; to this city of the Government's lavish expenditure of the public money; to this Capital, where there is everything that money can bring, where there are advantages enjoyed by hardly any other city in the Union; to this city some say the rich must be bribed to come. Already this city is exempt from taxation over $1.50 on a hundred dollars' worth of property; and yet talk about hardship upon the citizen, talk about corporations being unwilling or unable to live here, when taxation almost everywhere in the world, everywhere in the American world, is higher, imposed higher in order to support the local government.

Here taxes are all aggregated and bulked and limited, as I have stated, but in many places in the Congressional districts, even in the country neighborhoods and small towns, the taxes are very much higher. Speaking of my own State, about which I know more than any other, the taxes are 40 cents on the hundred dollars for school purposes, and the people voluntarily, year after year and year after year, by vote at a formal election, by ballots regularly cast, tax themselves another 60 cents, making the taxation a dollar for school purposes.

Schools are maintained here out of the $1.50. Magnificent buildings are erected in the District for the schools—erected for the people in the District, local and personal for the District—erected out of this fund. The police force is paid out of this fund, though a heavy charge upon other municipalities. Here, too, is the water system and the fire department. All these things—everything corresponding to the city tax, county tax, State tax, township tax, local and special taxes—all these are met and covered by a $1.50 tax on the hundred dollars in the District of Columbia.

As to the question of whether this personal tax should reach back, it seems to me that the man who has not paid the tax which the law has imposed upon him ought not to be exempt simply from the fact that he has not paid. If Mr. A and Mr. B owned personal property of the same quality and value and assessed at the same rate and Mr. A paid his tax for years and years and Mr. B did not pay, it seems to me that as between A and B, as a measure of justice between citizen and citizen, as between the citizen and the Government, the delinquent taxpayer ought to be required to pay.

Mr. McDERMOTT. My views of the question of taxation within this District were in the direction of the gentleman's remarks when I first looked into the matter, but I changed my mind, and I suggest this question: There are 275,000 people at present within the city of Washington, and of those not more than 10 per cent, I believe, are what are called the luxurious; 90 per cent in the District of Columbia work for a living. It is not the resort of those who have all their time. Now, the extraordinary part of it is this, that with a city of 275,000 people, they are taxed $8,000,000 and over for the local government of the District.

Does that come from the fact that the Federal Government is located here? If not, then I suggest to the gentleman to find any municipality in the world where the cost of municipal government for 275,000 people is 30 per cent of $8,000,000, including interest upon their debt. I give the gentleman an illustration of what we have in the heaviest taxed place in this country, and taxed heavy because the railroad terminals property worth $50,000,000 or $60,000,000 is exempt, where in Jersey City the tax levy is but slightly over two millions and a half, including the interest on the funded debt.

Mr. BENTON. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from New Jersey to the fact that of this eight million, $1,500,000 is for interest on the sinking fund, and no part of that for running the government of the District.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Then if you put it at $15,000,000 that makes it practically three to four times more for municipal expenses than can be found in any city of equal population in this country.

Mr. DE ARMOND. That raises another question that I have not the time nor the accurate information to discuss. The people of the District of Columbia are governed by Congress instead of governing themselves. My colleague [Mr. CLARK] introduced a bill that gives to the people of the District of Columbia local self-government, which may be denominated, perhaps, A bill to change from the Empire to the Republic, in the capital city of the Republic. There is opposition to that in this House and in the Senate. There is opposition to that in the city of Washington, and while I believe my colleague is right in theory, and that the effect would be good in practice, I am not very hopeful that the change will be made.

Now, what have been some of the reasons against that change? I intend to dwell on this only a moment, and would not have adverted to it, but it arises out of the suggestion made by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. McDERMOTT]. Usually—at least that is our theory of government, and I believe in it—usually people are best governed when they govern themselves, and usually taxation and consideration for taxpayers are better balanced when the people levy the taxes and expend the taxes and see what is done with the tax money than when somebody abroad, somebody not directly interested, has the handling of it all.

If the people of the city of Washington were to determine more things for themselves perhaps there would be an improvement in this respect. If the government is extravagant and wasteful, it is the extravagance and wastefulness of an alien power, an extravagance and wastefulness imposed by men from the four quarters of the Union, on the people of the District of Columbia and upon the people of the whole Union of States. If the people of the District of Columbia are victims of bad legislation and bad government, they deserve our sympathy; they deserve more than our sympathy, because we have the power to extend them relief, and what they deserve of relief we should bring to them.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Will the gentleman allow me another interruption?

Mr. DE ARMOND. Yes.

Mr. McDERMOTT. In that line, if the alien power imposes any burden on these people which is unjust; if the seven millions could be reduced by self-government two and a half or three millions, should not the alien power that imposes the burden bear one-half of it?

Mr. DE ARMOND. No.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Or else restore to the city self-government?

Mr. DE ARMOND. Yours might be the correct conclusion providing the lawmakers responsible for that condition of things were those to bear one-half of the expense; but instead of correcting the injustice, if one exists, it makes another and greater injustice for them to throw that burden onto their constituents.

Now, I think a remedy might be found in allowing the people of Washington to govern themselves. I do not mean that the United States or Congress, inasmuch as the seat of Government is here, ought not to have control in a good many matters, but in a good many other matters, I think, the citizens of the city of Washington might be very well trusted to govern themselves.

Two or three objections are made to this, but they all may be concentrated into one, and if that is a correct one it would suggest that instead of relief coming in the way and to the extent the gentleman from New Jersey would like to have it come the abuse would become greater. The objection to the people of the city of Washington assuming their own government is that the poor of the city, or, as a good many people express it, "the poor whites and the negroes would rule;" that then taxation would be excessive, and the citizen's property would be virtually confiscated.

I do not concede that is true. I do not know but it may be true to a certain extent. I do not know whether it is true or not; but I do not know why, upon the one hand, the citizens of Washington should be denied the right to govern themselves and why, upon the other hand, they should be protected by arbitrary government against the inability to govern themselves, if they are unable, while other communities are left to grapple with a trouble far greater and of the same general character.

Take the poor white man, if you please. Is wealth to be a test? Is a man unfit for self-government if he is poor? Is it true that the poor people in the country desire to rob the rich people of the country; that they would not be just, would not be fairly wise in making and administering the law? No man can afford to subject that argument to such analysis, or to any analysis, and then avow himself a believer in it. We can not rest upon the theory that only the rich people of the land are qualified to govern it.

The great bulk of the people are poor or in moderate circumstances only. It is the history of our country, as the history of all others, that in this class of people, people of moderate circumstances—the working people—lies the hope and reposes the pride of every nation that has accomplished anything in the world, every nation that will accomplish anything good. [Applause.]

Now, then, take the colored people—the negroes. Is there any particular reason why here, in the capital city, whatever danger or menace or harm can come from the participation of the colored brother in the exercise of suffrage should be removed, while the people of whole communities, State after State, are left to grapple as best they can with that problem through the years, and, maybe, through the ages? I think not. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BENTON. I hope now the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. McCLEARY] will use some of his time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. McCLEARY] is exhausted.

Mr. BENTON. I consulted with the gentleman and supposed that we were going to run the debate until 5 o'clock. I have still requests covering about thirty-five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The debate can be extended by unanimous consent.

Mr. McCLEARY. I ask unanimous consent that the time for closing debate be extended until 5 o'clock to-day.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the time for closing general debate be extended until 5 o'clock to-day, the time to be divided, as the Chair supposes, upon the same terms as heretofore. Is there objection?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Before that permission is granted, I wish to ask whether the gentleman proposes that we go on with the bill after 5 o'clock to-day?

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. It is understood distinctly that at 5 o'clock we shall adjourn?

Mr. BENTON. That is my idea. I do not know what the gentleman from Minnesota thinks.

Mr. McCLEARY. It is the purpose, as I understand, that at 5 o'clock the committee rise, and that after the disposition of ordinary matters on the Speaker's table the House adjourn.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota? The Chair hears none; and it is so ordered.

Mr. McCLEARY. I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PERKINS].

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] who just sat down said that the measure now presented shows how easy it is to legislate. I wish to suggest not the ease of legislation, but the possible value of the legislation which we are asked to pass resulting in anything.

I do not care to make any opposition to the measure in itself; but I do wish to state for the consideration of the committee very grave doubts as to what will come from it. If the members of the Committee on Appropriations indulge the hope that by the reenactment of the law of 1877 any large deficit in the amount of taxes collected from the District of Columbia is to be filled, I fear they will find themselves sadly disappointed. It is useless to pass a bill without considering the results of similar legislation elsewhere.

The gentleman from Nebraska said, "Why should we not pass this bill? It is the mere reenactment of an old law." Sir, I gravely fear that those who have spoken so earnestly in favor of this proposition as merely the reenactment of an old law will find that they are sadly disappointed in the results. The old law is simply the law that is found in pretty nearly every State—the law that is found in the State of New York, where I live, which says, "All property, real and personal, shall be taxed equally." That sounds well. It may be said "that all men are equal," and that sounds well. But, Mr. Chairman, the experience of all public bodies shows that a tax upon personal property held by individuals has never been to any considerable extent enforced. It never will be enforced, and it never can be enforced. The District of Columbia is not going to be an exception to the operation of the law as it has worked in every other State in this land.

If the gentlemen of the Appropriations Committee, instead of asking us to reenact the old law, had brought in a bill to reach the objects of taxation which experience shows can be reached, certainly everyone would gladly vote for it. What can be reached? The tax on corporations can be enforced, is enforced, because the objects of such taxation can be reached with the same certainty as real estate or franchises.

There is to come before this House next Monday, as I understand, a bill proposing to authorize an increase in the capital stock of the gas company of this city by $10,000,000, upon a statement that this amount represents what the gas company, holding a franchise—a public franchise—has made in addition to the dividends it paid to stockholders. Here is a thing that could be reached with certainty and with propriety.

Take also the tax on successions. There we come to the one time in a man's whole history when his personal property can be got at—when it goes through the courts—when the exact amount of his personal estate can be ascertained and be made to pay a tax. But we have here a proposition merely to reenact the old law in reference to the taxation of personal property. I have seen myself how such a law operates. I know gentlemen get up here and say, "In my State, or in my city, or somewhere else, there is a tax on personal property." But I will ask any member of this House what is the amount of personal property that is brought within the reach of the assessor and collector by means of the imposition of a tax on the personal property in the hands of individuals?

Gentlemen say, Will men evade it? Why, it is too easy to evade it. It is not a tax that depends on honesty; it requires no lack of honesty to escape it; it requires no more than the ordinary means that any man takes to avoid taxation on personal property. I will illustrate by the city of Rochester, where I live, and the members of this committee will find that the same thing will occur in the city of Washington when they seek to enforce this tax law, reading as it does. There is, for instance, to-day in New York State a tax on the statute book such as we are going to enact here, taxing all property, real and personal, equally.

What is the practical result after fifty years of endeavor? The real estate in Rochester is of value about one hundred and ten or one hundred and twenty million. The assessments on franchises, the franchise tax on the street railways, are imposed and collected. But what is the amount that stands on the books to-day of personal assessment under just such a law as we are going to enact here? Between five and six millions. How much is owned by people in Rochester? I can name a dozen people myself who between them own $50,000,000 of personal property, and we have 175,000 people besides. But it can not be reached, Mr. Chairman. Let them attempt to enforce this tax here. First comes the business man, we will say.

Now, in Rochester there is a great shoe manufacturer. He has a half million dollars in his plant, and the assessors say, "Why does the poor owner of real estate pay all the taxes; why is there no assessment on personal property?" The result is they send notice to the shoe manufacturer, or the clothing manufacturer, saying, "Your stock is worth half a million dollars, and we are going to assess you."

Now, what happens? I have seen it in my own experience. The man comes in and he says, "I employ 600 hands in the city of Rochester. The tax I would be forced to pay on that assessment would be $10,000. All I have to do is to move to the village of Batavia or to the village of Rockport, or to other villages that are crying out with open hands that they will receive me and give me a site for nothing, and I will take my 600 men with me," and the next day the office of the assessor is crowded with people saying, "In God's name, are you going to ruin the city of Rochester; are you going to drive away every great industry?"

Then let us take a man who is not in business. Here is an instance that I know of. There is a man there who is worth $3,000,000. The law provides there, as it must here, that deduction can be made for debt. He went to the assessor's office and said: "It is not fair that I should be taxed on $3,000,000, and I will not pay it. If you want to assess me for $50,000, I will pay it and say nothing. If you want to assess me for $3,000,000, I will telegraph down to New York and I will buy $3,000,000 of stock of New York Central road or some other road which pays its general tax to the State, and I will run in debt for $3,000,000, and you can not assess me for one cent."

Now, there is not a man in the District of Columbia who, if he wants to evade his tax on mortgages or stock or any other property that under the provisions of this bill is assessable, can not get rid of it just as easily as turning over his hand. So I say, gentlemen, that if this bill is to be passed in this form, with the hope of the Appropriations Committee that they will get any large sum from it, they will be sorely disappointed; and I want to say a word, too, about this thing, because, gentlemen, when you pass bills—and heaven knows we pass a good many of them in Congress as well as elsewhere—that are contrary to the general laws of trade, that seek to run counter to the laws of trade, we all know how easy it is to escape them. The distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations said yesterday that he believed in a bill that would relieve the man who buys a small house and impose a tax upon the rich man who has his property in securities.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McCLEARY. I yield the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. PERKINS. Now, gentlemen, that argument, although it has been made by many distinguished gentlemen as well as the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, I submit is wholly fallacious. Why does a man who has $10,000 buy a 4-per-cent bond and pay $10,000 for it? If he was to be taxed 1½ per cent there is not in Washington or in the United States a man fool enough to pay $10,000 for a bond on which he would get 4 per cent interest, out of which would go 1½ per cent to the taxgatherer. He pays $10,000 for property of that sort because he knows it will not be taxed and he can avoid taxation. But does the real estate man suffer any loss? Not one dollar.

Suppose you go to buy a piece of property in the city of Washington that pays a rental of $400, do you pay $10,000? Not one whit. You say there is a tax on that of 1½ per cent, and instead of paying $10,000 for the property that pays $400 income you buy it for $6,000, and that is so in every city in the land. There is not a man who when he buys real estate does not buy it with the knowledge of the tax falling upon it and does not receive the corresponding diminution in price. Now I say, Mr. Chairman, that if I buy a house paying $400 for $6,000, I have no right to turn around to the man who pays $10,000 for property on which no tax is collected and say that I am wronged.

I buy it with that knowledge and subject to that understanding; and, Mr. Chairman, in closing I do not speak in opposition to this bill. I am perfectly willing to vote for the measure of the Appropriations Committee; but I say that unless they bring in legislation which shall, by imposition upon corporations, upon franchises, upon inheritances, reach personal property as it can be reached, this bill will not modify the condition of affairs in the District of Columbia by 5 per cent; and the gentlemen on the Appropriations Committee, if they are rushing in with the hope, as they say, that they are going to get a million dollars from this bill, will do well if they get $100,000.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BENTON. I yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES].

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, this bill has been discussed pretty thoroughly, and if there is anyone who desires to speak I will yield back the time; if not, I will go ahead.

Mr. BENTON. I have promised some time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CREAMER], but I do not see him present at this moment.

[Mr. GAINES of Tennessee addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. BENTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CREAMER].

[Mr. CREAMER addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. BENTON. I have ten minutes more time, and I yield it to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. THAYER].

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Chairman, complaint is going up all over this country against the petty annoyance to which citizens of the United States are subjected on their return from visits abroad, not only on account of the law in force, which prohibits every man and woman from bringing home even a respectable wardrobe, but also places a duty upon little trinkets and souvenirs which may be brought as remembrances of the places they have visited.

In the five minutes allotted to me I have not the time to go into a discussion of the matter, but in order that we may uphold the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury, who, I believe, is honestly endeavoring to ferret out those who are violating the proprieties of the positions which they hold in executing what I believe to be an unnecessary and annoying statute—in order, I say, that we may sustain the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury and that he may know the annoyances that people are subjected to on returning from foreign countries without any purpose to transgress the letter or spirit of the law, who are annoyed by the improper execution of the law in the hands of those at the custom-houses—I wish to read in this presence a letter I received the other day from one of the most prominent men in my city. This letter shows how the law is executed by some of those who are holding positions of trust at the custom-houses throughout the country. This letter is as follows:

WORCESTER, MASS., April 12, 1902.

Hon. JOHN R. THAYER.

MY DEAR SIR: I wish to subscribe myself to the following facts for your consideration: I sailed from New York (Ward Line steamer Yucatan) February 6, 1902, with my wife, for El Paso, via Habana and Vera Cruz, Mexico. We arrived in El Paso Friday night, February 21, with this experience at the custom-house: Hand baggage was passed all right. Upon opening the trunk in baggage room was asked if I had anything dutiable. I replied, "No."

One Thomas L. Dwyer opened my trunk. In top tray was my wife's sealskin sack, which had been worn for eight or nine years. He also took out some little leather souvenirs, which cost me $3; a souvenir spoon, which cost me 67 cents, and a plate of china, that was painted by my wife here in Worcester last fall. Value of all articles, $4.12, plus the duty, $1.62. And then I was told that I should have to pay four times that amount, or $22.96, and they keep the articles in question, or pay 5 times, or ——, and they would be released, which I did.

The point may arise that my statement was not true when I said that I had nothing dutiable. Will say that I made inquiries at three different stores where I bought the little leather trinkets. They told me there was no duty. When I bought some cigars, they told me that I would have to pay duty on all over 50. Therefore I brought only 45 over the line. I was told that Mexican drawn work and opals were dutiable. Therefore I made no purchases.

Now, what I have to complain of is as follows: First. I do not understand why my wife's sealskin sacque was seized, because I have the addresses of other parties who had sealskin garments that were on the same train and were passed at the same time without any trouble, mine being the only one detained. To prove that my wife had the sacque when she left New York were a number of persons who sailed from New York the same time that we did, and which I had steamer Yucatan's sailing list to prove; and these persons were willing to make affidavits that my wife had the sacque on leaving New York February 6.

Yet the only satisfaction I could get was that I would have to wait until the next day to see "somebody" to make a sworn statement when they said the sacque might be released (and right here I wish to remark that I have found in my experience through custom-houses that the proper officials to whom matters are referred is never where he can be got at, and that being the case, think it would be a very good plan to have some one in authority present); this of course could not be done, as we could not wait over, having accommodations secured on the "Sunset Limited" leaving that night for California.

Secondly. I want to know what redress I have for paying a fine on a plate of china painted by my wife here in Worcester during 1901?

Thirdly. I want to know if a custom official is supposed to use care in examining a trunk, or whether he is supposed to throw things out on the floor and cause me at least a three-dollar bill for unnecessary laundry work?

Fourthly. I want to know what redress I have for the breaking of the end of a feather boa which cost me $15, and is practically ruined?

Fifthly. I would like to know if customs officials are supposed to speak courteously? I would say in justice that the other officials were very courteous, but this man (Dwyer) was very much inferior to any human beings I saw on my trip even in Yucatan.

I readily understand "that ignorance of the law is no excuse."

However, two years ago my wife came in with this sacque through the port of New York from Bermuda without a particle of trouble, and never having heard that the sacque should have been declared before I left New York was the reason why it was not done.

The sacque we finally received at Pasadena, Cal., after a good deal of time, trouble, and expense, and when received by us it was done up in a very close, hard package without the least bit of care, and in paper torn in five places, so that the sacque was exposed and the garment was very much injured.

This is a letter which I received from a very influential man belonging to the Worcester Woolen Mills Company in Worcester, Mass.

Mr. KLEBERG. Why did not this gentleman, who says he was abused there, apply to the proper authorities, the Secretary of the Treasury or some officer in that Department, instead of bringing that letter here into the House?

Mr. THAYER. This was a letter he wrote to me personally. He says the reason he made no complaint at El Paso, where he received this treatment, was because he had secured transportation that night which he must use, and it would be greater inconvenience for him to remain there than to pay the $22.90 which he did.

Mr. KLEBERG. It seems to me this is a sensational way of calling attention to this, and that the proper way would have been, if his rights were transgressed, to have presented the matter through the proper channels, to the Secretary of the Treasury or the Department of Justice, or someone who could remedy the wrong. I do not want to protect the officials of Texas. I know nothing about them, but I have not heard such charges against them, and if the officials down there did this it seems to me this party should represent that to the proper authorities and not inject this letter into the RECORD.

Mr. THAYER. I understand that there is a provision in the law now that anyone taking furs out of this country must declare that fact before they leave, even though they are half worn out. This party neglected to do it, or not having it in mind——

Mr. KLEBERG. It seems like the officials have simply done their duty, and that this is an imagined wrong, from what I gather from the letter.

Mr. THAYER. I wish to say to my friend from Texas that this is not applicable especially to El Paso, but all along the coast, and from Maine to New Orleans we get complaints almost every day of these little petty annoyances that come to our people returning to this country. It is not alone applicable to El Paso, but it is the same in the city of Boston, where the people are annoyed in the same way.

Mr. KLEBERG. I do not want to interpose any objection to that or to undertake to defend the actions of the officials at El Paso. All I want to do is to assure the gentleman that he ought to get at the matter properly, and if they have acted wrong, if they have done as indicated by this letter, which reflects upon the performance of their official duty, it should have been referred to the Secretary of the Treasury or the Attorney-General, or some official who has charge of action in such cases.

Mr. THAYER. That may be true. I am not objecting to that. But this simply leads me further to say that the attention of the Treasury Department has now been called to this matter, so that in six months, at least, from now Mr. Thomas L. Dwyer, of El Paso, can be reached, if these facts can be substantiated, and this gentleman says he will go to El Paso, if necessary, and testify to these facts at any time he is required. When I have put the data here before Congress the Secretary of the Treasury will be able to get at the facts, and if this case can be followed up at least one official may be made an example of.

Mr. KLEBERG. Of course, the gentleman knows that the collector of customs must execute the law as he finds it.

Mr. THAYER. Certainly.

Mr. KLEBERG. It seems to me that if there is any fault it is the law, and not the official.

Mr. THAYER. It is the fault of both. I think we are rich enough, grand enough, and strong enough not to put these petty annoyances on every man and woman who returns to this country with a few trinkets or an extra suit of clothes. We can get along very well without the few thousand dollars we collect in duties by inconveniencing and annoying so many of our well-disposed people. In the first place, we treat them as thieves attempting to smuggle goods into the country, and, secondly, after making them make a declaration, their word is not taken, but their baggage is overhauled and they are treated as ordinary prevaricators, to be watched, searched, and detained, and their trinkets and souvenirs confiscated. It is all a penny wise and pound foolish performance.

Mr. KLEBERG. That is the fault of the law and not the fault of the officer.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PAYNE. I would suggest to my friend from Massachusetts, if he is really in earnest and wants the facts investigated, that he should go to the Secretary of the Treasury with it and should make his complaint to the Secretary of the Treasury. As the gentleman has now submitted the matter it will be buried in the RECORD. If he really wants this official investigated, make a complaint against him to the proper authorities, who have the power to remove the official. If after investigation the facts are found to be correct——

Mr. THAYER. I will say to the gentleman from New York that quite a number of things I have attempted to make public have been buried in the RECORD here, and can not get beyond it.

Mr. PAYNE. That is right. Now, in regard to this law limiting personal baggage to $100, it arose from this state of facts. Investigation showed that a great many worthy people had taken advantage of a former provision of the law that allowed them to bring in personal belongings.

One citizen of my own State had brought in two or three hundred pieces of dress goods, dress patterns in different pieces, and matters of that kind, and the duty thereon amounted to over $5,000.

One of these officials under that law thought that that was not a reasonable amount of clothing to bring in for a family, and exacted the full duty, something over $5,000. That citizen of my State brought action against the collector and recovered the full amount of the duty which he had paid. The court held that the amount was reasonable, considering his station in life. In considering this personal clause, it was thought best and proper to limit the amount.

The limit was fixed in the law at $100 of personal effects that anybody might bring in. Gentlemen will remember that it is but a very small number of people comparatively that this affects. Perhaps not a hundred thousand of our people visit Europe a year and bring back these various items of personal apparel and goods, and the rest of the 70,000,000 people, who are obliged to stay at home and never have the luxury of buying garments abroad, when they do buy goods of the same kind have to pay the full duty and tax exacted upon them.

So in that view of the case it does not seem to be a very great hardship to require people going abroad to pay duty on the articles they bring back. In enforcing the law you must take human nature as you find it; you can not expect every official, and especially ordinary officials, to be up in all the amenities of life. They can not always use the best jugment and the best common sense in dealing with people.

Perhaps they get suspicious of some people, and perhaps they get it by association with people that come from abroad in bringing back articles that they smuggle in. They may, in carrying out the law on some occasions with some individuals, make mistakes and may not be inclined to believe always the declarations made by the party coming in. If there is any flagrant case of violation of the law, I repeat to my friend from Massachusetts, the proper way is to go to the Secretary of the Treasury and not bury his complaint here in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. THAYER. I would like to ask the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee if he believes in the law which exempts only $100 of personal apparel coming in from another country, and also whether it is necessary for a person to make declaration of a half-worn-out fur garment before he goes away in order to exempt him from paying duty on it when he returns? I want to ask the gentleman if he will not bring in some measure to rectify that?

Mr. PAYNE. So far as the regulation of the Treasury Department is concerned, I will say no; I will not bring in such a measure, or recommend any measure of that kind to be reported. As far as the $100 limit is concerned, I maintain that the party who goes abroad is put on an equality with the 70,000,000 people who stay at home, and he has no just cause of complaint, whether the limit is $100 or $250.

I have been to Europe myself, and when I came back I never brought $100 worth of the ill-fitting garments that some people on shipboard had with them. [Laughter.] I never had occasion to do that. Uncle Sam's garments were good enough to wear over and wear back again. Still, I was not looked upon as being entirely the most shabbily dressed man on shipboard when I came back. [Laughter.] I think the average American citizen can get along well enough, and if he wants more, if he wants to buy his wife or his family an entire outfit, let him do as the rest of us do—if we buy them abroad, pay the duty on them. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Chairman, I agree entirely with what the gentleman from New York has stated. There may have been some abuse. But as to this official—if he is the gentleman I think he is, he is a Republican, and I am not here to make any defense of the officials who are in office and have done anything wrong—but if he is the gentleman I have in mind, I do not think he has violated his oath or his duty, but on the contrary has done his duty under the law.

Mr. PAYNE. The right and manly thing to do is to bring the matter before the Secretary of the Treasury and let him call on the official and investigate it; and then the official will have a right to show his side of the case, and it will not be an ex parte investigation. If the official is to blame, let him go; if he is not to blame, let him be exonerated.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired, and the time for general debate has expired.

Mr. McCLEARY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 14019, the District of Columbia appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR SERVICE IN CUBA.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, I report an appropriation bill from that committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois, chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reports a bill to the House, which the Clerk will read by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13996) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service in the Republic of Cuba.

The bill was ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee reserves all points of order.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, the committee have unanimously agreed to the report, and are desirous that it shall be passed at the earliest moment, in view of the fact that the 20th of May is near, when we want to be on hand at the installation of the republic.

ORDER OF BUSINESS FOR TO-MORROW.

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Speaker, in order that the consideration of the bill which we have been considering to-day in Committee of the Whole may be continued to-morrow, I ask unanimous consent that Saturday next be substituted for to-morrow for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

PROTECTION OF GAME IN ALASKA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11535) for the protection of game in Alaska, and for other purposes:

Page 6, line 2, after "act" insert: ": Provided further, That nothing contained in the foregoing sections of this act shall be construed or held to prohibit or limit the right of the Smithsonian Institution to collect in or ship from the district of Alaska animals or birds for the use of the Zoological Park in Washington, D. C."

Mr. CUSHMAN. I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment with the amendments which I send to the desk.

The amendments were read, as follows:

Amend in line 16, page 4, by inserting after the word "publish" the following:

"Provided further, That hides, heads, and parts of game animals and birds taken prior to the passage of this act may be shipped out of Alaska at any time prior to July 15, 1902."

Also in line 12, page 4, after the word "collection," insert "and shipment."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I wish to inquire whether these amendments have been agreed to by the committee that reported the bill?

Mr. CUSHMAN. This bill was reported by the Committee on the Territories, of which I am a member, and these amendments are satisfactory to that committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman from Washington to the fact that his proposed amendments apply to a section of the bill upon which both Houses have agreed, and not to the amendment of the Senate. The gentleman's amendments, therefore, are out of order.

Mr. LACEY. I ask unanimous consent that the amendments be considered. There is a fact that has come to the attention of the committee——

The SPEAKER. The Chair believes that even the proceeding by unanimous consent can not be used to change the text of a bill upon which the two Houses have agreed.

Mr. LACEY. Then the bill had better go to conference.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. As I understand, conferees have no power to change the text of a bill as agreed to by both Houses.

Mr. LACEY. I know; but they always do, when it is necessary.

Mr. PAYNE. Is that the gentleman's experience—that "they always do?"

Mr. LACEY. They often do.

Mr. PAYNE. I think the House had better look carefully at the conference reports brought in by my friend from Iowa.

Mr. LACEY. Oh, no; because I never take advantage of the House. But we have heard instances——

Mr. PAYNE. If there are any "instances," I hope my friend will do his duty and see that nothing of that kind gets into a bill coming from conference.

Mr. LACEY. I was about to explain——

The SPEAKER. What is the motion of the gentleman?

Mr. LACEY. I simply asked unanimous consent that the House nonconcur and send the bill to conference.

Mr. CUSHMAN. That is perfectly satisfactory.

The SPEAKER. What is the proposition of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. CUSHMAN]?

Mr. CUSHMAN. I move that the House nonconcur in the amendment of the Senate and ask a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER subsequently announced the appointment of Mr. KNOX, Mr. CUSHMAN, and Mr. BRICK as conferees on the part of the House.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

LEASING OF PUBLIC LANDS FOR GRAZING PURPOSES.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President, no subject at this time deserves more careful attention from the Congress and from the people of the whole country than the disposition of the public domain. Shall the lands owned by the nation, embracing millions of acres, be preserved for homeseekers or shall they be turned over in a body to individuals and nonresident corporations, whose herds and flocks now graze upon them? As several bills are at this time before Congress that provide for leasing to live-stock owners all Government lands, under certain restrictions, between the one hundredth degree of longitude and the Pacific Ocean and extending from our northern boundary to Mexico, I ask that the following able review of Senate bill No. 3311, from the Department of the Interior, be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Montana asks that a communication from the Interior Department, relating to a bill pending in the Senate, be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There being no objection the communication was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

APRIL 14, 1902.

The SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt, by reference from your Department for report, of Senate bill No. 3311 (Fifty-seventh Congress, first session), entitled "A bill to provide for the leasing for grazing purposes of vacant public domain and reserving all rights of homestead and mineral entry, the rentals to be a special fund for irrigation." I have the honor to report as follows:

The bill, if enacted into law, will make subject to lease all vacant public lands in Arizona, California, Colorado, Idaho, Kansas, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, New Mexico, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Oregon, South Dakota, Utah, Washington, and Wyoming, an area embracing about 525,000,000 acres. The leases are to run for a term of ten years, with the privilege of renewal for a term of ten years more. The annual rental is to be 2 cents per acre. The net revenue derived from the lease is to constitute a reclamation fund for the construction of irrigating works on the arid and semiarid lands. Preference in securing leases is given to three classes of persons:

First. Owners of cultivated agricultural lands for leasable lands abutting on their freeholds, to the extent of 10 acres of leasehold to 1 acre of freehold.

Second. Stock growers who are also freeholders, to the extent of 10 acres of leasehold to 1 acre of freehold. The bona fide holders of State leaseholds also have the privilege, provided such State leaseholds are not held by any one person in tracts exceeding 640 acres in one body. This privilege extends only to lands in counties where the stock of the lessee habitually ranges.

Third. Stock growers, whether freeholders or not, who are in actual use and occupancy of public lands during the year ending January 1, 1901, such lands to be leased to them in proportion to their respective interests and use thereof.

These three preferred classes are to have six months in which to secure leases, after which the remaining lands are to be leased to the first applicant. Freehold rights are not to apply to town-site property, and lands deriving title from Spanish or Mexican land grants are to have freehold privileges only to the extent of 20,000 acres in any one ownership. Only citizens of the United States, corporations created under the laws of any of the States, are to be entitled to secure leases. A lease my be canceled by the Secretary of the Interior when the holder becomes ineligible or for nonpayment of rent.

Any leases may also be canceled at any time as to any land that may be required by the United States or any State for irrigation works as to any lands that may be condemned by any private citizen for such uses and as to any arid lands that shall have been reclaimed and made subject to irrigation. The bill also contains a provision making live stock which are herded or grazed upon any lands so leased without the permission of the lessee liable for all damages done while being herded or grazed thereon. Action for such damages is to be brought in a United States court, and the live stock may be seized under attachment process issued from said court.

The bill is objectionable as well as indefensible from many points of view. While it provides leases for stock-growing purposes alone, it subjects all classes of lands to such lease, and confers upon the Secretary of the Interior no power whatever to refuse a lease to any vacant public land that may be applied for, except it may be such as has been homesteaded or is mineral in character. It may be land proper for disposition under the desert-land law, or it may be valuable for agricultural purposes, or for its timber, yet all such classes are made available for the leasehold privilege. Nearly all of the public domain lying west of the Mississippi River (exclusive of Alaska) is included within the provisions of this bill, and when once leased any disposal which the Government may desire to make of such lands (except under the homestead or mineral laws, or for reclamation purposes) must be subject to the leasehold.

It is not understood why valuable timber and desert lands are not excluded from its operation. Under the desert-land law the Government, during the last fiscal year, disposed of 152,160 acres, while under the timber and stone act there were sold 396,445 acres, for which it received the sum of $1,144,964 in that one year. Nor can it be said that a very large portion of the land opened to leasehold for stock purposes is unfitted for agriculture. The contrary is shown. Should such lands be thus withdrawn from the usual disposition a gross injustice will be done.

In the domain made subject to this bill there never were so many entries made by actual settlers of agricultural lands as in the past year, and the present year will even surpass the rest in the acreage acquired of homestead lands alone. In this same portion of the United States now proposed for lease there were taken during the last fiscal year 53,654 original homesteads, covering 7,874,255 acres, and during the same period there were made 27,904 final homestead entries, embracing 4,135,819 acres. Here were 81,558 persons—and most of them representing families seeking homes in the West. These entries covered more than 12,000,000 acres for actual homesteads in twelve months' time.

Evidence tends to show that great portions of the public domain, thought some years ago utterly irreclaimable and impossible for cultivation, are now successfully farmed and produce abundant crops of the cereals and esculents, and all without the aid of artificial reclamation. Other extensive areas entered under the homestead law are irrigated by private effort from streams near by, and are the making of happy homes. The desert-land law in this respect has also invited energy and capital to its aid and surprising results are accomplished. The demand of last year for such entries on the vacant lands is shown by the figures previously given.

Another objection is noticeable in the low price at which lands are to be leased. It has no parallel either in the leasing of lands belonging to railroad and wagon-road corporations, nor in the leasing of Indian lands by the Government. The minimum price fixed by the Government in its sale of the public lands is $1.25 per acre. Even 3 cents an acre for lease would only represent a fraction over 2 per cent annual interest on the lowest Government price per acre. It is presumable that even at this low figure only such lands will be leased as will produce a good revenue to the lessee. When it is understood that an applicant has his own choice of the millions of acres made subject to leasehold it can be seen how grossly inadequate is the compensation provided, and how unjust is such an imposition upon the public interests. Two cents an acre for much of the inferior vacant lands would be an inadequate price, but when the choice of the public grazing lands is likewise offered at this insignificant price the bill becomes subject to the imputation of being a vast scheme in the interests of a few by which valuable property of the public is taken for private use without just compensation. It practically amounts to a donation. Some might designate it as a huge "graft."

Another most serious objection is that as to the provision making preferences in favor of certain classes. First, the owners of cultivable agricultural lands are entitled to all lands abutting their freeholds to the extent of 10 acres of leasehold to one of freehold. This will be of little value to the owners of small freeholds, since it is known that comparatively few of such people own farms or cultivable lands which are adjacent to the vacant public lands. The real beneficiaries will be those extensive stock growers who already own large tracts of land on the confines of the public domain, of which only small tracts can be cultivated for vegetables or for hay, the great body being primarily used for stock grazing. Second, freeholders who are also stock growers are entitled to the additional privilege of lease of lands which do not abut their freeholds, while the freehold farmer or settler not a stock owner is denied this privilege.

Then again, this last privilege, the bill reads, "shall apply only to lands within the counties upon which their stock habitually ranges." Not only may any portion of the vacant lands of a county be leased if the lessee's stock grazes in that county, but if the land be insufficient, or for any reasons the herd may be divided and placed in other counties where they can "habitually graze," and thus entitle the same owner to the preference in a number of counties at the rate of 10 acres of leasehold to 1 acre of freehold, wherever such freehold may be. As if this wholesale opportunity were not enough, the same bill allows the further preference to lands not leased under the above provisions to be given, not to settlers, but to the "stockgrowers who were in actual use and occupancy of said lands during the year ending January 1, 1901, to be leased to them in proportion to their respective interests in and use thereof." Why this nunc pro tunc preference should so specifically relate back to that identical year ending January 1, 1901—one year and almost four months ago—is not apparent. It leaves the impression that it is intended for some specific individuals or for some concealed associations. What becomes of the unfortunate stockmen whose occupancy only commenced in the year ending January 1, 1902? Why this unseemly discrimination between stockmen themselves? The bill should be condemned if for only this attempt at what seems to be personal favoritism at the expense of others.

Nor is there any specific limitation fixed for this last act as to area. The language is "to be leased to them in proportion to their respective interests in and use thereof." Does this mean that what is left or not leased and so occupied shall be divided pro rata? What definition shall be given the words "actual use and occupancy?" The cattle of some herds extend over many miles of range, embracing numerous townships. Shall this ranging be interpreted as "use and occupancy?" If so, it may exceed a basis of one thousand of leasehold to one of freehold. It is too indefinite to be understood. This may be of service to those who desire the advantage of such doubtful phrase, but the Government should insist upon certainty and clearness in its legislation, as well as justice in its policy. When, during the negotiations for the acquisition of the Louisiana purchase, Marbois, Napoleon's minister of the treasury, complained to Napoleon that the boundaries of the purchase were very indefinite, Napoleon replied, "that if an obscurity did not already exist, it would perhaps be good policy to put one there." In our country the departments and the courts in the end must interpret provisions of law, and Congress should insist that before final enactment a bill should be positive and unambiguous in its terms.

As another evidence of the extent to which preference rights are given under this bill to certain privileged classes attention is called to the clause providing that even certain leaseholds may be held to be freeholds upon which to base a right to vacant lands.

Where, for instance, a person leases State lands not exceeding 640 acres, although he may not be the owner of a single acre, he may lease Government lands on the basis of 10 to 1 on such mere leasehold. One, therefore, holding 640 acres under a lease from a State can occupy 6,400 acres of Government land, under this bill. It can thus be seen how many convenient ways are provided for one stockman to secure enormous tracts of the public domain, and all for 2 cents an acre, with ten years' tenure, with the privilege of renewal for another ten years. It is practically a twenty years' lease at 40 cents an acre for that whole period.

There remains another portion of this bill more indefensible than all. The first section holds out the hope that settlers shall have the right of homestead—indeed, that the lands "shall be leased for stock-grazing purposes, subject to the right of homestead and mineral entry." This would seem to place the homesteader far ahead. Let what follows expose this fallacy, this vain promise. Section 7 provides "that live stock which are herded or grazed upon any lands so leased without the permission of the lessee shall be liable for all damages done while being herded or grazed thereon, together with costs and reasonable counsel fees, to be fixed by the United States court." The first victim to suffer the penalty of this cruel provision will be the very one the bill assumes first to recognize—the homesteader.

The settlers on the public domain are usually poor, and it is a long while before they are able to inclose much of their 160-acre tracts; as a result their few stock naturally move upon the adjacent uninclosed lands, and if they be leased the settler must suffer the severe penalty imposed for failure to prevent his stock passing over the line. The consumption of the grass by his few head of cattle or sheep the law will hold to be a damage, and then will follow the seizure of the property with a trial in the courts and a judgment for damages, costs, and counsel fees. The suits are not in the near-by State courts, but, as so often happens, are to be held in the far-away Federal courts, and where the court terms are but once or twice a year. It will be noticed, too, that the lessees (who will be mainly the large stock owners) are not made liable for any damages by their herds which may pass over and destroy the grasses upon the uninclosed and unperfected homestead of the settler, and yet he is made liable for damage done by his few stock which may encroach on the unfenced leasehold. With such aggravating conditions what must be the alternative for the settler? He must either construct 2 miles of fence to inclose his quarter section of homestead or he must herd his stock. As he is too poor to do this, he must see his grasses consumed, his stock pursued and seized, his means exhausted, and at last must abandon his little home which the law has given him, or perhaps sell out at a sacrifice to the very occupant of the leasehold who was the author of his misfortunes.

This rank injustice is not only inflicted upon the homesteader, but upon the small stock owner as well. The one upon a limited freehold or upon a desert-land claim on the broad expanse of the vacant domain will alike be subject to this unjust provision. The insincerity of the bill in its profession for the homesteader is made more manifest in its failure to allow him any lease until after he perfects title. During his five years' residence he must witness the leasing by the large freeholders and favored classes of all the lands surrounding him, knowing full well that when he makes his final proof he will be utterly cut off and deprived of any leasehold adjoining him. Why should his homestead before patent not entitle him to the basis of 10 acres of leasehold to 1 of homestead? Why postpone to him this relief until he shall become a freeholder? Such discrimination amounts to a declaration that the homesteader and small owner must either surrender at a loss or move on. The American settler as a general rule is a law-abiding man. He is not seeking trouble or litigation, and will prefer to forfeit his homestead rather than invite contention and sacrifice. There are others, however, more assertive of their rights who will maintain a defiant attitude, and it is with such that the conflict will be continued, as the contests in this office and the proceedings in courts, and sometimes in the field, sadly attest.

Attention is further invited to that clause in the bill making all leases subject to assignment. The effect of this will be to confer upon leaseholders the right to sublet to different persons for valuable consideration, thus giving the original lessee the power to collect large rentals upon the merely nominal price which he himself pays to the Government for the leasehold, and thus to oppress and take advantage of those whose necessities will compel compliance. This right of assignment or sublease will be of immediate value and of special service to the absent landlords, who, residing in the large cities of the East, may thus control the millions of acres of public domain, not alone for their own stock purposes, but for speculation and actual sale to the highest bidders for the preference right of leasehold. The settler and the small stock grower must seek terms from the large associations. Under the right to assign a leasehold an interesting question may arise as to whether a person having already leased direct from the Government large acres can also become an assignee of the leasehold of another. This would seem to be allowable, and if it be conceded then the possible dominion of any one magnate or trust over consolidations embracing enormous tracts of the public domain for twenty years may be viewed with alarm should the bill become a law.

If it be determined to allow any leasehold of vacant lands for stock purposes it would seem that there should be a classification of the lands only fit for grazing, and there should be fixed a reasonable maximum in area for any person or association; and in addition it should be required either that a rental value be designated for certain localities or else that the Department should decide what should be a reasonable rental per acre before approving a lease. If there should be a profit on such leases it should inure to the Government, the proprietor of the lands.

As a further precaution, all assignments should be prohibited. The right should only come direct from the Government. Settlers on the range or residing near the same, and whose stock are in the habit of grazing thereon, should be entitled to a lease thereof, as well as freeholders, and the settlers should have the preference. It might also be considered whether authority should not be given to provide against overstocking the range, in order that the grass supply be maintained; and to do this the capacity of various ranges could be ascertained and only such number of stock permitted as the range will justify. This practice has proven satisfactory in our forest reserves and might be advisable on the unreserved grazing lands.

Nor should we lose sight of another misleading provision in section 6 of this bill, which purports to make only citizens of the United States beneficiaries of the leasehold, whereas in the same section "corporations created under the laws of any of the States" can also become beneficiaries. It is well known that the shares of these corporations may be owned largely by foreigners, and hence the section is inconsistent with itself. If it be, furthermore, the purpose of the sweeping preference given by this bill to protect many large cattle companies and corporations who have inclosed extensive areas of the public domain, and who have maintained fences in violation and in defiance of the law, and who now propose to validate such unlawful structures which the Department has been for years, and is now, endeavoring to remove, this bill, if it becomes a law, will answer that purpose completely.

That suspicious clause which gives a leasehold preference to the favored stock owners who were in the "use and occupancy" of any vacant lands during the year ending January 1, 1901, may perhaps include many who were then behind unlawful fences. The opinion has been expressed by some that the authorities regard the law prohibiting any exclusive control of the vacant lands as inoperative, and, indeed, justify the same, and the suggestion is made in proof that no enforcement of the law is in evidence. This is a mistake. The courts and the departments have been active in numerous prosecutions and removals of inclosures. In the case of Canfield v. United States (167 U. S., 524) the Supreme Court, referring to inclosures of vacant lands, said:

* * * "The Government has, with respect to its own lands, the rights of an ordinary proprietor to maintain its possession and to prosecute trespassers. * * * It may open them to preemption or homestead settlement, but it would be recreant to its duties as trustee for the people of the United States to permit any individual or private corporation to monopolize them for private gain, and thereby practically drive intending settlers from the market. It needs no argument to show that the building of fences upon public lands with intent to inclose them for private use would be a mere trespass, and that such fences might be abated by the officers of the Government or by the ordinary processes of courts of justice."

As to departmental action, it can be said that about 436 cases of unlawful fencing were reported by special agents, and notices to remove served upon the offenders. About 83 removals were voluntarily made after such notice. About 324 suits were recommended and cases reported to the United States district attorneys based upon special agents' reports. In one case, known as the so-called Beales and Royella grant in New Mexico, about 1,079,000 acres of the public domain are alleged to be unlawfully occupied. The time for removal of fences has been extended by the President to July 1, 1902, with a strict injunction that the same must be so removed, and that no application for further extension will be entertained or considered, and the parties were accordingly notified that such direction will be rigidly enforced without further notice. In suits before the courts a number of judgments were reported.

One of the most notable is the case of Jesse D. Carr before the United States court for the district of Oregon for unlawful inclosure of 84,000 acres of the public domain in Oregon and California (mainly in Oregon), the fences being of stone, wood, and wire, which the court decreed should be removed, and which were recently removed under the direction of the United States marshal. Upon departmental reference for report and recommendation of a communication from the honorable Attorney-General in that case, I had the honor, on August 20, 1901, to report and to express an opinion in which it was stated that "the General Government surely has a control over its own land. The act of these parties is in defiance of that control, and these proceedings are merely a vindication of that right. To delay and continue from year to year the enforcement of the law will, in the course of time, make that law a dead letter. If the law means what its language imports, only the most conclusive showing of an existing right to make an inclosure can excuse the offenders. A mere hope that Congress will in the future amend the law, or the plea of probable loss in case existing law is enforced, is not sufficient to suspend immediate action. The defendants ask consideration of the fact that their damages will be large should these fences be removed. In the face of the unjustifiable and indefensible act of placing such fences where they are, such a plea is as illogical and unsatisfactory as it is preposterous. As the Supreme Court once said in a well-known case in reference to the duty of the General Government as to the public domain, 'it will be recreant to its duties as trustee for the people of the United States to permit any individual or private corporation to monopolize them for private gain and thereby practically drive intending settlers from the market.' Therefore, as the circumstances in this case are particularly aggravated, I can see no reason whatever for interfering with the order of the court or delaying the removal of the Jesse D. Carr Land and Live Stock Company's fence, holding that all such cases should be vigorously pushed in the interest of justice and settlers who are honestly endeavoring to acquire homes on the public lands."

The act of Congress approved February 25, 1885, declares that "the President is hereby authorized to take such measures as shall be necessary to remove and destroy any unlawful inclosures of any of said lands and to employ civil or military force as may be necessary for that purpose." Following this law, the President, on August 7, 1885, issued a proclamation ordering the removal of unlawful inclosures of public lands, and in that proclamation he declared that "the public policy demands that the public domain shall be reserved for the occupancy of actual settlers in good faith, and that our people who seek homes upon such domain shall in no wise be prevented by any wrongful interference with the safe and free entry thereof to which they may be entitled." I commend these words to the attention of Congress. If they were applicable at that time, they are doubly so now, when the public lands available for settlement are becoming so rapidly exhausted and when the demand for homes has so greatly increased. If the law against the fencing of vacant lands is unwise, it should be repealed; but so long as it remains a law it should be obeyed and strictly enforced. This leasing bill, however, is even more objectionable than the present unlawful fencing. We hold in trust, not only for the present generation, but for those who shall come after us, the great domain. It is the heritage of the people. We are enjoined to so guard and administer it that it shall subserve the greatest possible good for the greatest possible number.

To the public lands of the nation are we indebted for much of the development, the wealth, the population, and the stability of our Republic, and any act that will prevent or discourage that numerous class of heroic people who are seeking, with so much self-sacrifice and privation, new homes in the far West, and who are building up and reclaiming the waste places and preparing the way for organized counties and States, can not be too severely discouraged and condemned. The pioneers are entitled to the utmost aid, protection, and sympathy of the Government. This has long been the policy of our nation, and to restrict or forbid this class, by leasehold or other means, the free approach to the vacant lands and the common use of the same so long as they remain vacant, is a violation of that policy. The highest court of the nation has announced the principle that "the law deals tenderly with one who, in good faith, goes upon the public lands with a view of making a home thereon." A case in point with the bill now under consideration was decided by the Supreme Court of the United States, in Buford v. Houtz (133 U. S., 326), wherein it was said "we are of opinion that there is an implied license growing out of the system of nearly a hundred years that the public lands of the United States, especially those in which the native grasses are adapted to the growth and fattening of domestic animals, shall be free to the people who seek to use them where they are left open and uninclosed and no act of Government forbids this use."

In a recent case, equally applicable, the United States court for the State of Oregon decided that "it [the forest reserve] is in furtherance of the policy of the Government by which the public domain is held for settlement that it shall be free to such use by the people as serves the convenience of settlers on uninclosed portions of it without public detriment." (See United States v. Tygh Valley Land and Live Stock Company, 76 Fed. Rep. 693.)

I am confident that this bill, if enacted into law, will work incalculable injury to a majority of the people of the Western States, will retard the development of the public domain, will impose additional privation upon the hardy pioneer, will compel the small stock owner and settler to pay tribute and rental to the syndicate owner or drive them from the open field, will encourage great landed monopolies upon the vacant domain which should be free to all, and will engender a feeling of hostility and inequality among those who should be friends and equals. With this conviction I earnestly recommend that this bill be returned to the honorable body whence it came with your recommendation that it be reported adversely.

The bill, with accompanying papers, is returned herewith.

Very respectfully,

BINGER HERMANN, Commissioner.

LOUISIANA PURCHASE EXPOSITION.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will thank the President pro tempore to lay before the Senate the communication from the Secretary of State with reference to the Louisiana Purchase Exposition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of State, a letter from Hon. Thomas H. Carter, president of the Louisiana Exposition Commission, and also a letter from Hon. David R. Francis, president of the St. Louis Exposition. Does the Senator desire to have them read?

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that the letter of the Secretary of State may be read; that the other letters may be printed in the RECORD, and that they all may be printed as a document and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, May 2, 1902.

SIR: Referring to section 8 of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1901, entitled "An act to provide for celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of the purchase of the Louisiana territory by the United States by holding an international exhibition of arts, industries, manufactures, and the products of the soil, mine, forest, and sea in the city of St. Louis, in the State of Missouri," which provides that the exposition shall be open to visitors not later than the 1st day of May, 1903, and shall be closed not later than the 1st day of December thereafter, I have the honor to transmit herewith for the consideration of Congress a copy of a letter, of this day's date, which I have received from the Hon. Thomas H. Carter, president of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition Commission, inclosing a telegram addressed to him on the 1st instant by the Hon. David R. Francis, president of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition Company, showing the necessity for a postponement of the opening of the exposition for one year.

A letter similar to this has been addressed to the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

JOHN HAY.

Hon. WILLIAM P. FRYE,
President pro tempore of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the request of the Senator from Missouri will be complied with. The other communications will be printed in the RECORD, and the whole will be printed as a document and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The communications referred to are as follows:

LOUISIANA PURCHASE EXPOSITION COMMISSION,
ST. LOUIS, UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.
Washington, D. C., May 2, 1902.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit for your consideration the inclosed communication from Hon. David R. Francis, president of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition Company. By section 8 of the act of Congress entitled "An act to provide for celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of the purchase of the Louisiana territory by the United States by holding an international exhibition of arts, industries, manufactures, and the products of the soil, mine, forest, and sea in the city of St. Louis, in the State of Missouri," it is provided that the exposition shall be opened to visitors not later than the 1st of May, 1903, and shall be closed not later than the 1st day of December thereafter.

The communication of President Francis is in reply to a telegram which I addressed to him on the 1st instant, requesting an expression of the views and desires of the exposition company on the question of postponement of the exposition, in view of the almost universal belief that the exposition could not be properly installed within the next twelve months. Suggestions regarding a probable postponement of the exposition have been so current of late as to introduce a most unfortunate element of uncertainty as an obstacle to progress.

The answer of the exposition company sets forth existing conditions in terse but forceful form. The company has shown great zeal and industry in prosecuting the work of preparation. The site has been selected, the plan and scope devised and approved, rules and regulations have been promulgated, plans and specifications for the central exposition buildings have been prepared and contracts for their construction are well advanced. Many States have made liberal appropriations for buildings and exhibits, and a number of foreign governments are preparing to participate. On the other hand, the legislatures of many States will not convene until next January, and it is obvious that sufficient time will not then remain before May 1, 1903, to make reasonable use of appropriations for State buildings and the installation of exhibits. While foreign governments have considerately refrained from comment on the narrow time limit fixed by the law, there can be little doubt that an additional year for preparation will serve their convenience. According to ascertained facts and reasonable probabilities $20,000,000 will be expended within the exposition grounds for construction by the United States Government, foreign governments, the exposition company, the States, the Territories, and the concessionaires. With the labor and manufacturing forces of the country now in demand to their full capacity, it is clear that the successful marshaling of the necessary labor and material for the completion of this great task within not to exceed ten months of fair weather is questionable, and if accomplished will surely involve wasteful expense and leave little time for the proper installation of exhibits.

In view of the conditions, on behalf of the Exposition Commission, I have the honor to respectfully recommend that the application of the exposition company for one year's extension of time be submitted to Congress for its consideration.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

THOMAS H. CARTER,
President Louisiana Purchase Exposition Commission.

The SECRETARY OF STATE.

[Telegram.]

ST. LOUIS, MO., May 1, 1902.

Hon. THOMAS H. CARTER,
President Louisiana Purchase Exposition Commission,
Arlington, Washington, D. C.:

In view of the conditions to which you call attention and in the light of all the facts within the knowledge of this company, it is now very clear that, whilst the buildings can be completed, the respective States and Territories and both foreign and domestic exhibitors can not within the present time limit construct the necessary buildings and install exhibits upon the scale commensurate with their desires and the magnitude of the exposition enterprise. The scope of the exposition is enlarging from day to day. We are in continuous receipt of expressions from remote countries manifesting desires to participate in the exposition if more time can be had for preparation. We feel that no effort should be spared to fully meet the expectation of this and other countries as to the character of this exposition, and that it should in every respect be worthy of the great event which it is held to commemorate. We can use one additional year of preparation to great advantage. It is therefore, in the judgment of the company, desirable that the time for opening the exposition be extended one year, if such course meets the approval of the Government, and I am authorized by the executive committee and the directors to request that you present these conclusions to the President and to the Secretary of State for transmission to Congress.

DAVID R. FRANCIS, President.

Mr. COCKRELL. I offer an amendment to the sundry civil bill, and ask that it may be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be received, printed, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment is as follows:

Amend at end of line 12, page 59, by inserting:

"And provided further, That sections 8 and 12 of an act entitled 'An act to provide for celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of the purchase of the Louisiana Territory by the United States by holding an international exhibition of arts, industries, manufactures, and the products of the soil, mine, forest, and sea, in the city of St. Louis, in the State of Missouri, approved March 3, 1901,' be, and the same are hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"'SEC. 8. That said Commission shall provide for the dedication of the buildings of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition, in said city of St. Louis, not later than the 30th day of April, 1903, with appropriate ceremonies, and thereafter said exposition shall be opened to visitors at such time as may be designated by said company, subject to the approval of said Commission, not later than the 1st day of May, 1904, and shall be closed at such time as the National Commission may determine, subject to the approval of said company, but not later than the 1st day of December thereafter.

"'SEC. 12. That the National Commission, hereby authorized, shall cease to exist on the 1st day of January, 1906.'

"And provided further, That immediately upon the passage of this act the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause to be coined at the mints of the United States 250,000 gold dollars of legal weight and fineness, to be known as the Louisiana Exposition gold dollar, struck in commemoration of said exposition. The exact words, devices, and designs upon said gold dollars shall be determined and prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury with the approval of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition Company, and all provisions of law relative to the coinage and legal-tender quality of all other gold coin shall be applicable to the coin issued under and in accordance with the provisions of this act. And in payment of so much of the $5,000,000 appropriated by said act of March 3, 1901, to aid in carrying forward said Louisiana Purchase Exposition, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay said 250,000 gold dollars so coined as aforesaid to the said Louisiana Purchase Exposition Company, subject to all the provisions of said act, except that payment of said gold dollars may be made at any time upon the request of said exposition company, and upon said company filing with the Secretary of the Treasury a bond in a sum sufficient to protect the Government and to satisfy him as to the future performance of all the conditions under which said $5,000,000 so appropriated is to be paid to the said exposition company."

MAJ. CORNELIUS GARDENER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the resolution submitted by Mr. PATTERSON on the 30th ultimo.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the resolution may go over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Retaining its place?

Mr. LODGE. Retaining its place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It goes over, retaining its place.

AGREEMENT WITH INDIANS OF ROSEBUD RESERVATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate Senate bill 2992.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2992) to ratify an agreement with the Sioux tribe of Indians of the Rosebud Reservation, in South Dakota, and making appropriation to carry the same into effect.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending amendment is that offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT]. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. CULLOM. I hope the amendment will not be disposed of until the Senator from Connecticut comes in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is an amendment on the table offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER].

Mr. TELLER. That is an independent amendment, and it may be voted on.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut will be laid aside for the present, and the Chair will lay before the Senate the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the amendment of Mr. PLATT of Connecticut by striking out all of line 25——

Mr. TELLER. That is not correct. I do not propose to amend the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut. I offer it as an independent amendment. It strikes out two words that his amendment proposes to strike out, but that does not make it any the less an independment amendment. I have not the bill before me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As the Senator sent it to the desk it is to amend the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut by striking out all of line 25, page 6——

Mr. TELLER. No, Mr. President, I did not send it to the desk; I just made a verbal statement. The clerks misunderstood it; that is all. The Senator from Connecticut is here now, and we may as well vote on his amendment first.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado moves to strike out two words that the Senator from Connecticut moves to strike out.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. What is the present condition?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut is now here.

Mr. TELLER. I will withdraw my amendment for the time being, since it has gotten into that shape, and let the vote be taken first on the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] desires to be heard on my amendment; but as he is absent, I will, until he comes in, make some observations about the arguments which have been used against it and in favor of the passage of the bill as originally reported.

First, it is said that every case ought to stand on its own merits and the Government ought to have no policy about the matter whatever, by which I suppose it is intended that where a bargain has been made with the Indians in which they have been paid less than the actual value of the lands to the settlers, we might require the settlers to make payment for the lands, because in those cases they are going to derive an advantage, but that where we have not paid any more than the lands are worth we ought to give them away. Now, that seems to be a very peculiar argument.

I know other Senators have claimed that no matter what we pay for the lands, we ought to give them away; but the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP], the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. CLARK] insist that every case ought to stand upon its own bottom and upon its own merits, and that except in cases where the settlers are going to derive some unusual advantage we ought not to charge them anything.

It seems to me that the Government must have a settled policy about this matter. It is perfectly apparent to Senators that if we make an exception in any case—that is, if we conclude that on the whole a very moderate price has been paid to the Indians and therefore we will give the lands away to the settlers—that will be the policy of the Government and of Congress. If we pass this bill giving these lands to settlers, there will be no more bills passed in which we charge the settlers for the lands upon which they settle. It does not require very acute perception to see that that will be the result. Neither does it require very acute perception to see that it is a most ingenious argument in favor of the passage of the bill.

We have agreed to pay the Indians $2.50 an acre for these lands. Now, if we allow the settlers to take the lands for nothing, because that is a fair price, and that is the argument which has been made here, we shall not only follow that precedent in all bills hereafter for the opening to settlement of Indian reservations, but in the cases where we have already required that the settlers shall make a payment which will reimburse the Government we shall release them from their obligation.

So the Senate might just as well understand that this is not a case which can be excepted out of a general policy. I think it safe to say that if this bill passes, giving to the settlers lands for which the Government pays $2.50 an acre, every other bill for the opening of Indian reservations will give away the lands to the settlers, and in all those instances in which, by bills already passed, they have been required to make payment they will be released from their obligations.

With regard to these particular lands, if the Senate will indulge me for a moment, the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] says he thinks we paid a large price for them, and therefore he does not think we ought to give them away to settlers, having paid a large or perhaps an extravagant price for them, but if we have only paid what they were worth, then he thinks we ought to give them away to the settlers. I confess I can not see the force of that argument. But with reference to these particular lands, we have not overpaid for them upon the basis of what they are worth to the settlers. I think we have overpaid for them upon any basis upon which the Indian title ought to be estimated and appraised.

Of course, I do not know the value of these lands from personal observation, and few Senators do. I know that they are greatly desired by settlers. I can only form an estimate as to whether the lands are worth what the Government has agreed to pay for them by the report the inspector who negotiated the agreement makes. He says he thinks it is a fair price, but he says also:

> That he was greatly handicapped in the beginning by the fact that most of the Indians who favored a cession at all held the lands at an enormous price—from $7 to $15 per acre; that only a very few expressed their willingness to accept as low as $5 per acre, and this in cash and all in one payment.

In trying to make these negotiations, I think the Indians estimated their lands by what they knew of the value of the surrounding lands. The inspector says:

> That upon his arrival all the white men connected with the agency, as well as those of the surrounding country with whom he talked, held the lands in question as worth $5 per acre.

Now, Mr. President, why should a white man connected with the agency and those in the surrounding country hold the lands as high as $5 an acre if they are not worth that to settlers. We must all bear in mind the distinction between what we are to pay the Indians for an occupancy title and what the settlers think they are worth if they can get them.

> It appeared that adjacent lands in Gregory County and in Hoyt County, Nebr., were selling at from $5 to $10 per acre; that a syndicate of cattlemen in Sioux City, Iowa, expressed its willingness to pay $5 per acre for the entire tract.

Does not that do away with the claim which is made here that these lands are not worth to the settlers what the Government has agreed to pay the Indians for them? I apprehend that the settlers who are going on these lands, if they are required to pay the Government $2.50 an acre, will think they are lucky in getting lands that are worth $5 an acre and perhaps more than that.

It is said that a portion of these lands are grazing lands and not particularly valuable for agricultural cultivation. I presume that that is partially true. I presume it is also true that the Indians may have selected for their allotments the best lands. But I believe it still remains true that there are many agricultural lands which will be located upon by settlers. They are not going on the grazing lands to take 160 acres of grazing land. What they are after is the agricultural lands in this reservation. I think it will turn out to be true that if the Government charges them $2.50 an acre, they, so far as they settle up this tract, will think they have got lands worth $5 an acre; and that is what is at the bottom of all this pressure upon Congress.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator from Connecticut allow me to call the conference report on the Indian appropriation bill?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I will yield to the Senator.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEWART. I ask that the conference report on the Indian bill be now taken up. It was read last evening, and I had it laid over to be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11353) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes. Will the Senate agree to the report?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Before agreeing to the report, I should like to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs to amendment 94, on page 70, which was inserted by the Senate and rejected by the conference committee. Will the chairman explain briefly the reason why the conferees on the part of the Senate receded from the Senate's action?

Mr. STEWART. It was stated by the conferees on the other side, and I believe it is true, that the general appropriation for that purpose covers it; that it can be done and will be done under the general appropriation.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. There is no appropriation at all connected with the amendment to which I am calling attention.

Mr. STEWART. What is the amendment? Let me see it.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It is amendment 94, page 70. It provides that the Wyandotte Indians who are nonresidents and own land by allotment may be allowed to dispose of it the same as Indians of other tribes situated in the same way. It extends really the provision of law which now applies to the Pottawatomies and the Shawnees to the Wyandottes. That is exactly what it does, and all that it does. Some of the Wyandotte Indians have taken their allotments, and just as in the case of some of the Pottawatomies and Shawnees, they do not reside upon the reservation. The present law is that the two latter tribes may dispose of their lands, but that the Wyandottes can not. This amendment provides that the same privilege shall be extended to the Wyandottes that is given to the two other tribes.

Mr. STEWART. I understand the amendment now. The House conferees objected to it. They had some reasons which were satisfactory to them. They thought it should not be done at this session.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. What I want to get at is what reasons could have been satisfactory to them and satisfactory to the conferees on the part of the Senate to agree to strike out the amendment which was put on by the Senate. What I want to get at is the reason, if there was any.

Mr. STEWART. I do not know that there was any special reason given why the matter should be delayed.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I do not understand on what ground you can make fish of one and fowl of the other.

Mr. STEWART. That is what we contended, but the House conferees insisted that the situation was different, and they did not want to do it now. They said probably they would agree to it at the next session.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Would there be any alleviation of that difference by delay, and can the chairman tell me what the difference is? That is all I am asking for. Is there any probability that there will be any change between now and the next session?

Mr. STEWART. They said they were not ready to do it now and they wanted to look into it further. They did not quite understand it. I do not remember what it was, but there was some little difference, and they wanted to have time to look into it and thought it should go over to the next session.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I am very glad the chairman gives me the very definite information he does concerning the action of the conferees.

Mr. STEWART. I have not very definite information, but the House conferees objected to it. It was a small matter, but they said it ought not to be done at this session.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I am very glad to be informed that if the House conferees object in a conference to what the Senate has done the Senate should very gracefully submit to whatever suits the conferees on the part of the House.

Mr. STEWART. We receded from a great many items in disagreement, and so did they. One has to give and take on a conference committee. The Senator has tried it. It is a considerable labor, and one has to yield sometimes. They did not think this ought to be done at the present session. I contended for it, the same as the other Senate conferees. Then they stated some conditions that were different—I do not remember what they were—and they wanted to look into it. They would not agree to it, and so we had to yield.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate agree to the conference report?

The report was agreed to.

AGREEMENT WITH INDIANS OF ROSEBUD RESERVATION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2992) to ratify an agreement with the Sioux tribe of Indians of the Rosebud Reservation in South Dakota, and making appropriation to carry the same into effect.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do not care to make further observations at this time. Other Senators wish to speak.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I do not want to have this bill go to a vote without expressing in just a word or two my views in regard to the matters contained in the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut.

I am extremely sorry to differ from him in this matter, as I always am on any subject; but I believe that his amendment does not represent what has been the settled policy of this Government in dealing with the home seekers of the Government. My belief is that the policy of the Government for forty years has not been to sell its lands to anybody. My understanding of the land laws of the United States is that they have been conceived in that wisdom which gives every man who is willing to make a home upon the public domain and anchor himself to a permanent citizenship upon the public domain his home without money and without price. That is exactly what the bill proposes to do.

One of the reasons why I have given my allegiance to the Republican party, and I think one of the greatest acts ever placed upon the statute books by that or any other party, has been the homestead law, passed in 1862, under which the great Northwest has been settled up. I do not want to see any turning aside from that policy. I do not want to see any policy pursued that will result in eventually taking away the free homes upon the public domain and selling to whoever may have the money to purchase the remaining land.

It is urged that the public lands should be disposed of with reference to the man who will go and settle and make his home upon them and that they should not be used for the benefit of the speculator. That is exactly what the treaty as proposed and presented to us does. It is exactly what the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut will not do.

The amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], providing for an actual residence of five years upon the land, meets with my approval. The speculator is not going to live five years upon 160 acres of wild land for the purpose of getting a title to it. The speculator may perhaps have money enough to pay the $2.50 an acre for it. I believe it is true that not one in a hundred of the men who are seeking homes upon the public domain, either in this Rosebud Agency land or elsewhere, has enough money to pay $2.50 an acre for the land. Time and time again have the homeseekers in the West and in the Northwest been compelled to mortgage everything they had to raise the $14 or $15 or $16 necessary to pay even the land-office fees for their homesteads.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Can they mortgage it before they get a title to it?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. About all they have to mortgage is a canvas-covered wagon, a few chairs and bedding, and a milch cow, and $14 is about all they can get on it. Time and time again, to my knowledge, they have done that in order to pay the land-office fees. I say we ought not to put any impediment in the way of these settlers.

Now, there is another misapprehension, and that is that bills of this sort for free homes are passed for the benefit of the people who live in that country. That is not true. The men who live in that country in some way or other, by scrubbing and scraping and economy and luck, and in spite of hard luck, having been there for some time, have become fastened. These homes are for the men we want to come in there with their families to settle up and develop the country. We want the settlers from Connecticut; we want the men from Iowa; we want the men from South Carolina to come there and build homes under the homestead laws. We want the settlers. The cry in the West to-day is more men and fewer steers, notwithstanding the price of beef. It is more men that we want, and we want them to come from all over this nation to build homes with us.

The Government gets back its money tenfold. Every man who puts his foot to stay upon 160 acres of land pays back tenfold to the Government all that it has cost.

The argument is used that these lands will cost the Government $2.50 an acre in money. That is true. There is not an acre of land under cultivation in this nation to-day that did not cost this people. The land in Connecticut cost this nation something. The land in Illinois cost this nation something. The land to the west of the Missouri has cost this nation something. It has not always been in $2.50 pieces; it has not always been in dollar pieces; but it has been in something. It has been in blood. It has been in American privation. It has been in something, and the Government has got its return a hundred times over.

I am not at all alarmed at the idea that our public domain will soon be all occupied and we shall not have anything more with which to pay for our agricultural colleges. God speed the day, not God speed the day when we shall not have our agricultural colleges properly sustained, but God speed the day when every acre of land all through our West and Northwest shall be taken up and be the homes of honest, toiling settlers, not given up to the birds of the air and beasts of the field, but when every acre and every rood of ground shall maintain its family. That is what the people of the Northwest want. We do not believe that the Government should enter into the policy of selling lands to reimburse itself or for a profit. It is turning back the entire principle of our public-land system.

The land system of the United States is different from the land system of other nations. It is modeled on the idea that the lands are for the good of the people—that they are not to be made a source of revenue to the Government. When the time comes, if it ever shall come, and I hope it is in the near future, that we have no public lands to dispose of to the settlers or anybody else, then we will see coming from the very States that you are populating under a free-homes proposition a wealth that will take care of all our agricultural colleges. As was said by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] yesterday, the States are ready to take it up whenever the General Government has to let go.

Now, Mr. President, much of the discussion of this bill has appeared to me to be irrelevant. I do not think the question of title cuts any figure at all. The only difference is between a perpetual occupancy and a title in fee. That is just the difference between the Pottawatomies and Wyandottes, as illustrated here upon the conference report a minute ago. The Pottawatomies have their title in fee simple, and they can sell it. The Wyandottes, exactly in the same position, have their title by occupancy, and they can not sell it. That is all. The Rosebud Indians have not their title in fee, and they can not sell it to whom they choose. Nobody can buy it except by treaty stipulations between the Government of the United States and those Indians. But once purchase it under the treaty stipulation, it is just as good as any fee-simple title that ever existed on the face of the earth, and the purchaser is just as much protected in his title. It carries everything that a fee-simple title possibly could carry.

Mr. President, I hope that the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut will not carry. He says this bill will be a reversal of our land laws. My judgment is that if his amendment carries it will be a reversal, because it cuts under the free homes. It makes the sale of lands for a profit a settled policy of this nation; and I hope the time is far, far distant before we settle upon that policy.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Mr. President, this amendment brings up the entire question that the Committee on Indian Affairs has been considering, the question of opening up Indian reservations and whether the Indians will sell their titles for reasonable compensation or not. That is directly in point in this question. It affects directly the great policy of change in the matter of Indian reservations which is coming before Congress and must be acted upon in a very short time.

Mr. President, the very first thing that we must consider in a matter of this kind is the question of title that we have to deal with, the Indian title, the character of that title, and the rights of the Government to-day, after having made the many treaties that we have made in the past, having now been brought face to face with the rights of the Indians and the rights of the United States in reference to their land. There has been a great deal of refined reasoning on the part of some of those Senators who claim that we have a right to go into these reservations and open them up and pay the Indians what we think the lands are reasonably worth. We are considering that character of title, and I am justified, therefore, in making a few remarks concerning Indian titles in general in order to place ourselves in a position to meet the pending question.

What is the Indian title in the first instance? What is the title of ancient occupancy? What is its force? What is its character? What rights have we in lands occupied exclusively by the Indians where they have not been yet ceded by any act of Indian tribes? That is certainly a very inchoate right. It is a title that has not much value to it. I admit, as it has been stated here before, that we have a right, perhaps legally, though not morally, to compel the red men to pass beyond the limits of increasing civilization and cultivation of the soil; but when we have driven them to the last extremity, when we have made reservations for them, then we reach a different point in our argument.

Mr. President, in the matter of ancient occupancy the title is so light that we may have the right of possession and exclude the Indians from the possessory title of that land. When, however, we have made a binding obligation with those Indians, in consideration of which they have surrendered that occupancy, which the United States courts have decided time and time again has a sufficient value to make it a legal consideration for cession; when we have received that and in consideration have given them a possessory title of other tracts of country, then we have bound the Government; and when we are in such a position, why not deal with those Indians as we deal with any civilized race? We have got to respect our contracts. We have got to buy those lands back for such price as we can agree upon, and we have no legal authority to open up a single reservation until we have done so.

Now, Mr. President, we have given those people a possessory title. My friend from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] said that we still have some kind of a right there; that theirs being a possessory title there is some way in which we may exclude them and by which, under a law similar to an eminent-domain law, we can compel them, for their own benefit and for the benefit of the United States, to yield up their lands for a fair consideration. I do not think that the Senator from Nevada has considered that very well as a legal proposition. When we open up these lands for public settlement we open them up for private use and not for a public purpose, and as we open them up for a private use we can not enforce the law of eminent domain.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. McCUMBER. With pleasure.

Mr. RAWLINS. As I understand the proposition of the Senator, it is that we have no constitutional power to appropriate the lands in Indian reservations in the exercise of the power of eminent domain, because it is not proposed to devote the lands to a public use. Is that right?

Mr. McCUMBER. That is my proposition, if we do not devote the land to a public use after having made a contract and agreement with the Indians, granting them the exclusive use and occupation of the premises.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, we have pending now in the Senate a bill known as a bill to provide a temporary government for the Philippine Islands, in which that very proposition is involved—namely, the condemnation of lands now held by a corporation, or a religious order, known as the friars, to become a part of the public domain and to be disposed of for private use. I suppose on that matter I shall have the support of the Senator from North Dakota and the Senator from Wisconsin that that is not proper legislation.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I have listened with a great deal of pleasure to the expounded knowledge of the Senator from Utah relative to the Constitution of the United States being in effect in the Philippine Islands. There is a time and a place for that discussion. I suppose that the three days' discourse by the learned Senator from Utah has been sufficient to fix his own mind to a certainty as to the effect of our Constitution in the Philippine Islands, and hence I think it would be utterly useless for me to argue that question with him now upon the pending measure.

Mr. RAWLINS. Will the Senator permit me further?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly; with pleasure.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, I did not desire to invite the Senator's attention to the Philippine question upon this measure, but only to the legal proposition involved. As I now understand the Senator's answer to the question I propounded, it is that we have the Constitution applicable to South Dakota and have no Constitution applicable to the Philippine Islands, and therefore in the Philippine Islands we can take property, in the exercise of the power of eminent domain, and devote it to private use, which we can not do in the United States.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I have stated nothing of the kind. I have simply declined to argue that question, which has been discussed so fully for three years, and which requires an entirely separate discussion. We have a Constitution of the United States, and there is a State constitution in the State of South Dakota. We have not the United States Constitution effective in all of its parts in the Philippine Islands. When we received the Philippine Islands we received them in the condition in which they then existed, with the land subject to the laws that were in existence at the time we received them, and we have the power to make laws now relative to the disposition of those lands. Congress undoubtedly will act justly and fairly in that matter, and I am perfectly satisfied to leave that question with Congress in the final enactment of a bill that will be before us.

But, Mr. President, going back to the question involved in this measure, the right of South Dakota and the right of the United States to those Indian lands, the position that I wish to state and make clear is this, that to a certain extent, by acts of Congress enacted in the fifties and sixties, we have placed ourselves in a position so that the State is, to a certain extent, subject to the will of the Indians there in reference to whether or not they will sell their lands; that we are in their power to a certain extent, and to an extent that binds the Government. We can not go in and take those lands from them.

I believe, Mr. President, and I believe firmly, that the United States as a Government have no right to place a stumbling-block in the progress of any State in the Union, and if they have done so in the past through inadvertence, the first duty of the Government is to remove that stumbling-block from the progress of the State.

If we take one-third or one-fourth of the State of South Dakota and convert it into an Indian reservation and segregating the good lands there so that you can not get the requisite population in the State of South Dakota without making a contract which will be onerous to the Government, then I claim that it is the duty of the Government to relieve the State of that condition. If by our own act we have in the past placed that obstacle in the progress of the State, it is our duty, even though we are compelled to pay more than a fair and reasonable compensation, to remove it. Whether those lands are worth $2.50 an acre, or whether they are worth $10 an acre, they are a part of the public property of the State, and the State has a right to the use of those lands for the benefit of its inhabitants, and it has a right to ask Congress to make an agreement with those Indians, so that the lands may be utilized, and will themselves make a part of the wealth of the great State of South Dakota.

Have we done this, Mr. President, in this particular bill? It has been intimated that we have paid a high price for these lands. On the whole, I believe that we have purchased them for a reasonable price. Two dollars and a half an acre is not an unreasonable price for all of that land taken together, for we must remember that out of the 520,000 acres, about one-fifth of it, 105,000 acres, of the very best of this land, has been turned over to those Indians. That portion which the Indians have taken, that portion along the streams, that portion which has water facilities, that portion which is the richest for agricultural products, that which is the best for grazing, and which is probably worth two or three times as much as that which is 30 or 40 miles from the streams, the Government itself has taken and given it to those Indians.

If you will take that at five or six or seven dollars an acre and estimate the value of the balance of it, you will find on the whole that the other will only be worth about 60 or 70 cents an acre. So to charge the settlers, the new men who are to go into that country, for the land that the Government has bought from the Indians, after giving them the cream of all the lands in that reservation, is not honest, is not just. It is perfectly right in some instances, Mr. President, that the settlers should be required to pay a fair consideration for the land.

I will compare this with the condition in North Dakota of the Devils Lake Reservation. There we opened up a reservation; we paid $3.90 an acre for the land, and we are charging the settlers exactly the same price. I made no objection, nor did my colleague, to that bill upon the floor of the Senate. Why? Because we knew that for every quarter section of land there is there there will be 100 persons ready to take it. We know also that it is worth from six to eight or ten dollars an acre. So if the Government charges $3.90 an acre for it the settler can not complain if he gets land that is worth in the neighborhood of six or eight dollars an acre.

The conditions are not the same as those described by the Senator from Idaho. Fifty years ago settlement proceeded two, three, four, or even a thousand miles from where there were railroad facilities, but to-day our railroads go ahead of the settlements. We have no such conditions as existed fifty years ago. We have no such privations on the part of those forerunners of civilization in our own new country.

In our Devils Lake country the reservation is surrounded with nice towns, with good cultivated farms, with all of the luxuries near at hand, so that the man who goes there can get a home, and he will get a good one, by paying $3.90 an acre for the land.

That is not true down on this reservation in South Dakota. I believe that after you have taken out the 105,000 acres for the benefit of the Indians, which you have given to them, the balance of the land is not worth $2.50 an acre, although the reservation, taken as a whole, is probably worth more than that sum.

Mr. President, our desire is to open up these reservations. How are you going to open them up? How are you going to get the benefits that you are expecting to get in the civilizing of the Indians by placing white settlers among them, unless you place the land at such a price that settlers will take it up? Land that is not worth $2 or $1.25 an acre probably is not worth settling on. In order to get those settlers you have go to take the land which you have segregated, the poorest portion, which you have not presented to the Indians there and place it at such a price, at least, that white settlers can afford to go in and take it. If it is only pasture land, if it is only grazing land, every Senator knows that land is not worth $2.50 an acre for grazing purposes alone.

But that is not all, Mr. President, Senators seem to think we are throwing away all this money that we are paying to the Indians—$2.50 an acre or five or ten dollars an acre—when really it is going into the Indian fund for the support of the Indians. We are supporting them from day to day, and we are taxing ourselves to do so. Therefore what difference does it make whether we buy their land at $5 an acre, which, we will say, is worth $2.50 an acre, and give them the benefit of it by paying the same money out to them, or whether we take it out of the Treasury of the United States and pay it for the benefit of the Indians?

Mr. President, I say, to support my proposition, that we should open up this reservation, no matter what we may have to pay within the line of reason.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, the Senator is making some statements that do not seem to be in accordance with the provisions of the bill; at least I do not understand it so. The Senator speaks of this money that is to go into the Indian fund. If he will look at page 5, section 2, of the bill he will see this provision:

That in accordance with the provisions of articles 2 and 3 of said agreement the sums of $250,000, for the purchase of stock cattle, and $158,000, as the first of five annual installments to be paid said Indians in cash.

The money is to be paid to the Indians themselves, as I understand it, and you are not going to set it apart to be used for their benefit hereafter.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I was speaking of the provision relating to the opening of Indian reservations in general in my last remark, and not specifically upon this bill. However, it makes but very little difference whether you say you place it into a fund and then pay it out, or whether you pay it out in the first instance to the Indians. In either event the Indian gets the benefit of these funds; and if we pay him in this way, there is so much less that comes out of the Treasury for his support; and we are bound to support the Indians.

Mr. TILLMAN. Another question, Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me.

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. Do I understand that this block of 416,000 acres of land is scattered about; that the Indians are all mixed in, through, and around it, and that they have had the pick and choice of this whole Indian reservation, and the remainder of the land is only what they do not want?

Mr. McCUMBER. That is correct. The map, which was exhibited by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GAMBLE], showed the location of the Indian allotments. They followed along the streams and the branches of those streams, of course naturally taking the best land there was in the entire reservation.

Mr. TILLMAN. Then, Mr. President, I notice here on page 6, beginning in line 17, this provision:

That the price of said lands shall be $2.50 per acre; but settlers under the homestead law, who shall reside upon and cultivate the land entered in good faith for the period required by existing law, shall be entitled to a patent for the lands so entered upon the payment to the local land officers of the usual and customary fee and commissions.

This provides for two methods of disposing of these lands, as I understand it, one by homestead and the other by sale, and whatever you sell is to be sold at $2.50 an acre. Is that it?

Mr. McCUMBER. That is not it. The Senator must remember that we are now discussing the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. TILLMAN. No; I am discussing the bill. I want to know just how you propose to dispose of these lands. It is proposed that they shall be subject to homestead entry only. That is the amendment, I think, of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER].

Mr. TELLER. No.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator said something about striking out the right to commute. If he does not propose that the homesteaders shall get the land, then he proposes that it shall be obtained by purchase at $2.50 an acre and sold to any cattle company that chooses to come in and pay that sum, or else I do not understand what the Senator means.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator from North Dakota allow me a moment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. McCUMBER. With pleasure.

Mr. TELLER. Here is a provision on page 6 of the bill, beginning in line 16:

And provided further, That the price of said lands shall be $2.50 per acre—

Then there is the free-homestead provision, from line 18 down to line 25, inclusive, as follows:

but settlers under the homestead law, who shall reside upon and cultivate the land entered in good faith for the period required by existing law, shall be entitled to a patent for the lands so entered upon the payment to the local land officers of the usual and customary fee and commissions, and no other or further charge of any kind whatsoever shall be required from such settler to entitle him to a patent for the land covered by his entry.

Then follows a provision for commuting. The Senator from Connecticut proposes to strike out all about free homesteads. My amendment is to strike out all about commuting. If we defeat the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut it will be necessary, to make the language of the bill harmonious with the idea of free ownership, to strike out the words:

That the price of said lands shall be $2.50 per acre.

Mr. McCUMBER. I understand that means when it is commuted.

Mr. TELLER. Yes; that is what it means; but if we do not allow them to commute at all, then that language must go out.

Mr. McCUMBER. Then the settlers will get the land free.

Mr. TELLER. Then the settlers will have free homesteads, and there will be no opportunity at all for speculators to get in.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not understand that any of this land is going to be put on the market at $2.50 an acre.

Mr. TELLER. No; but the $2.50 an acre refers to the commutation.

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. Referring to the top of page 6, I find a provision that the lands—shall be opened to settlement and entry by proclamation of the President, which proclamation shall prescribe the manner in which these lands may be settled upon.

If it is found that the restrictions on the conditions of settlement will require the usual plan, whatever it is, to get a title, keep the people from going there, and the President then says, "Well, as I can not sell the land to homesteaders I will sell it to the cattle companies or to whoever else wants to use it for grazing purposes," what is going to prevent that being done? This law will not.

Mr. McCUMBER. Is the Senator through?

Mr. TILLMAN. I am considerably muddled, Mr. President, and I will wait until the Senator gets through to see if he throws any additional light upon these dark questions, and I may say something when he finishes.

Mr. McCUMBER. I presume that the land will be opened up by proclamation, the same as any other public domain is opened up for general settlement, and that it may be settled upon under the homestead laws. If a person desires to commute, as the bill now stands he must pay $2.50 an acre. If he lives upon the land for five years, he may receive it from the Government absolutely free. The amendment of the Senator from Connecticut is to compel, as I understand, the payment of $2.50 an acre in every instance.

Mr. President, I think what the Senator from South Carolina is driving at is as to the method of determining who may settle upon these lands or who may hold them. I simply judge that from the criticism he made yesterday, I believe, concerning the method in which settlers were allowed to take up lands in Oklahoma and in other places. His criticism, as I remember it, was against drawing lots. I know the Senator from South Carolina is one who jealously and zealously guards the interests of the poor man, and I want to place before him a condition such as we shall have in the Devils Lake Agency at the time it is opened for public settlement. I say there will be a hundred men for every quarter section. What is the present method? The present method is that a man has to be on the border of the reservation, and the moment he gets word that it is open he has his horses hitched to his wagon, he has a load of lumber on that wagon, and he starts on a five, twenty, or a hundred mile race to get to the particular quarter section, and to get there before anyone else does. The man who has the best horses and the most of them, who can put more of them onto a single wagon, is certain to get into the reservation in the quickest time, and to get onto that quarter section sooner than the other individual possibly can.

With all these hundreds of individuals, how are you going to determine which one shall have the preference right? I believe that the system of drawing of lots that was adopted in the settlement of some of the country a short while ago proved the most satisfactory of anything we have ever attemped; and if the Senator from South Carolina can suggest a better one, one that will be more economical, one that will be better and more just to the citizen who is so poor that he can not go into that race with a blooded horse and get onto a quarter section of land, I know the Interior Department will be very glad to hear from the Senator in reference to the matter, because it is a question that must be solved.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. McCUMBER. With great pleasure.

Mr. TILLMAN. The point that presses on me with most force is how to get around the man who is speculating in these lands, and who is trying to get a quarter section by gift.

Mr. McCUMBER. He can not get a quarter section by gift unless he lives on it for five years; and he would not be much of a speculator then.

Mr. TILLMAN. Let me ask the Senator, Is the requirement that a man must live on the land in person strictly enforced? If he goes there, sets up occupancy, digs a well, runs a fence, and once in a while goes to see it, is not that about the way it runs?

Mr. McCUMBER. If the Senator ever got into a contest for public land between two persons claiming it, and went through these departments he would find that the law of residence was very strictly enforced, that actual occupation was required, and that nothing else will take its place.

Mr. TILLMAN. Is that the rule?

Mr. McCUMBER. That is the rule.

Mr. TILLMAN. Is it not a rule that is often relaxed?

Mr. McCUMBER. I have never known of its being relaxed in case of a contest.

Mr. SPOONER. How is it if a man is unable to occupy his homestead by reason of sickness?

Mr. McCUMBER. If, in case of sickness, a person has to go away, that does not relax the law at all.

Mr. TILLMAN. So that under the homestead law actual occupancy and use of the land is necessary before a patent can be obtained?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly; and the settler has not only got to show that he has actually occupied the land, if a married man, with his family for five continuous years, but he has also to show the character of his improvements and the amount and value of them, so that the Department may see that he has acted in absolute good faith and that he was not acting for the purposes of speculation; and he must show that not only by his own testimony, but by the testimony of two other witnesses.

Mr. TILLMAN. Now, as I understand, the struggle of the hundred for one quarter section, who, the Senator says, will be on the border when the Devils Lake Reservation is opened, will resolve itself into the swiftness with which any given man can get to a given quarter section, set up his pegs, and do something which will give him a right to claim the land.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; unless some arrangement is made by the Interior Department similar to the arrangement that was made in opening up some of the reservations in Oklahoma Territory.

Mr. TILLMAN. And in that case we have another lottery. It is the lottery I am opposed to. How are you going to find out whether a claimant of any given quarter section is a bona fide settler or not; whether he is merely a speculator, and is only doing enough to get title to the land, and then sell it at a profit?

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator evidently does not thoroughly understand the method of settling upon Government land.

Mr. TILLMAN. I do not, and I am trying to get some light.

Mr. McCUMBER. As I have before stated, the determination of whether the settler is acting in good faith or for speculative purposes is that he must hold the land for the period of five years unless he commutes, and even in the case of commutation he must show to the absolute satisfaction of the Department by his own oath and that of witnesses and by corroborating circumstances that he did not take up this land for speculative purposes; that he had taken it up for a home and for nothing else, and that he had not attempted to sell and does not intend to sell it. I think that ought to make that part clear to the Senator.

Mr. TILLMAN. In this instance in Oklahoma with which I happened to come in contact last year by accident I discovered that there were men on the border there at the agency where the drawing was held, and that one out of six or seven got a prize, and the others did not. I knew of cases in which men were there with their applications for one of the homesteads who had no business applying for a homestead, because they never intended to go there and live; and now many of those men who drew the lots by lottery are not on the lands, but have commuted and sold out at a profit.

Mr. McCUMBER. That may be possible. I know nothing about it.

Before closing, I wish to say one word in reference to the position taken by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT]. I agree with him entirely in the proposition that it is unjust to the Government to get any bill through here under a false pretense. We have opened up a number of reservations. The measures got the requisite number of votes upon the assumption and the pledge that the money which the Government had to spend in purchasing the right of the Indians to the reservation should be paid back to the Government as soon as the lands were sold. Then immediately after that became a law and the lands were settled upon, then we would have petitions to make them free homes. I myself will not vote for any more legislation of that kind. It seems to me when we have purchased the reservations with that understanding, with that character of agreement, we should carry it out; but I will not sustain a proposition that we shall keep lands from being settled upon by the public simply because we have been compelled to pay for some of them a higher price than they are actually worth.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, from the remarks which have been made in regard to this bill one would suppose that there were a large number of men with their wives and children settled upon this Indian reservation waiting to make it their home, and that those of us who are opposing the measure are attempting to take from them—citizens of South Dakota—their right to free homes. This is an entire misconception. There is not one solitary homesteader upon the Rosebed Reservation. If he is there, he is there in violation of law, without a right on earth. It is to-day an Indian reservation, and the title is in the Indians. It is not the public domain of the United States. It never has been the public domain of the United States, because the Indians have the proprietary and possessory right to hold it indefinitely—forever. It is just as good as a fee-simple title.

The Senator spoke of Congress putting obstructions in the way of the advancement and development of South Dakota. These Indian reservations existed before Dakota existed. Those who inhabit South Dakota went there knowing of these reservations.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. COCKRELL. With pleasure.

Mr. McCUMBER. I merely want to correct the Senator in one respect. Many Indians from Minnesota and other places were taken into South Dakota and placed in a reservation there. So the reservation did not exist even for the Dakota Indians until we took the Sioux and the Chippewas of Minnesota and placed them in North and South Dakota.

Mr. COCKRELL. When was that done? It was done before it became a State in the Union.

Mr. McCUMBER. In 1851, 1852, and 1863.

Mr. COCKRELL. It was before it was a State. All these reservations were in possession of the Indians before the States existed as States in this Union. Congress is throwing no obstructions in their way, but we are trying to do justice to the citizens of the United States as well as to those who may want to make their homes there.

There are two sides to this question, and there are two parties interested in it. One is composed of the taxpayers of the United States, who have to bear the burden, and the other the favored few who by chance and by lot may secure a right to locate upon these lands.

There are no homesteaders there now. There is no man with his wife and babies and the old prairie schooner which has been referred to traveling there to make a home. There is not a particle of that. There is no right to homestead there. It is not public domain. The only question is, How shall Congress extinguish the Indian title to the lands and make the lands not public domain, but private-purchase property, to be disposed of by the United States as it thinks right and just and honorable?

There is no public domain about it. The question is, How shall we acquire title to the lands? The Indians have title to them. Shall we ratify this treaty? Shall we buy these lands, and then what shall we do with them? The treaty says we shall pay the Indians. What is that? Buying private lands, paying the owner; and then what are we asked to do with them? To donate them to some persons, we know not who, living we know not where, who may by virtue of a lottery get a right to go on the land.

Mr. WARREN. May I ask the Senator from Missouri a question?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. As a matter of fact, has not all our public domain been purchased in one way or another, and has it not cost the Government something?

Mr. COCKRELL. Not in this way.

Mr. WARREN. It cost a small sum per acre, but it cost the Government money.

Mr. COCKRELL. None of it was acquired in this way—not one foot of it. It was acquired for political and territorial reasons, in large quantities, unsettled and uninhabited, a wilderness, subject to the possessory and proprietary right of the Indians who were scattered here and there over it.

Mr. WARREN. Nevertheless, I will ask the Senator if it does not stand of record that while it may have cost but 10 or 15 or 20 cents an acre, all the public land open to homestead to-day is that which has in some way been purchased and for which something has been paid by the United States Government? It is simply a matter of difference in price as I look at it.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not look at it in that light. It was not purchased as a part of the public domain. We did not pay the inhabitants of the Louisiana purchase a nickel of money for anything they had in it. It was a political transaction between the United States and France. We bought the land there. The people who were on the land and who had title to the land continued to have title to it. The balance was public domain.

Now, here are individuals, a band of individuals, with a clear title to the land, and this bill proposes to buy that land from them and pay the money to them. If we have the right to do that, and then to turn around and donate the land to those who may by lottery get a right to settle upon it, we have the same right to go into the State of Arkansas, the State of Missouri, or any other State of this Union and buy land from individuals, citizens, and open it up for free homes. No man can gainsay the proposition. One is just as fair and honest as the other. They are upon an equal footing. That is what this bill proposes to do; nothing more, nothing less, nothing else.

I say it is not just; it is not right; it is burdening the taxpayers of this country with that which should not be imposed upon them. It is not for the poor man, not for the man struggling with his wife and babies for a home, but for the man worth millions, perchance, who may have a technical right to make a homestead and may be fortunate enough to draw a prize in the lottery. That is the kind of people we are appealed to to benefit and bless—men who have homes, and yet have never exhausted their homestead rights. Any of them can go there, I care not who it is, from any part of the United States, and, possessing the homestead right, get a free home, no matter what his property is.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. May I ask the Senator from Missouri a question?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I know the Senator intends to be exactly correct and accurate, but is it not a fact that nobody can enter upon those lands under the proposed amendment who has a homestead elsewhere; that he must comply with the five years' residence upon the land; that he must absolutely comply with the homestead law, and if he has a large amount of land elsewhere, the homestead law absolutely prohibits him from taking advantage of this law?

Mr. COCKRELL. Any man who has the right to a homestead would have the right to go into this drawing.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. But if he goes into the drawing he goes into it subject——

Mr. COCKRELL. As a matter of course.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Just one moment. But if he goes into the drawing he goes into it subject to the regulations and the law of homesteads, and is it not a little far-fetched to assume that a millionaire will spend five years upon the Dakota prairies in order to get a hundred and sixty acres of land worth $2.50 an acre?

Mr. COCKRELL. Anyone having his homestead right unexhausted has a right to take his chance in getting a claim. The terms upon which he will get it after he has acquired that right is a different matter. He must comply with the law before he can get a patent. There is no question about that. But I say this measure is not for the benefit of persons who have a right now. It is not for the benefit of citizens of South Dakota that this bill is pending. Not at all.

We recently opened the Kiowa, Comanche, and Wichita land in the Indian Territory. I wish Senators to pay attention to this: That land was divided into 13,000 tracts of a hundred and sixty acres each. There was a registration called for of those who were eligible to make a selection and 165,416 people registered, claiming the 13,000 acres, over a hundred applicants for every tract of land. Now, does anybody suppose those were poor, struggling young men with their wives and babies who were there ready to make homes upon that land? How did they settle the contest? A hundred and sixty-five thousand applicants and 13,000 prizes. There was but one way—a lottery, pure and simple. Tickets were drawn and the wheel of fortune started on its round and the lucky ones, 13,000, had the right to go upon the land.

The Senators from South Dakota and from other States are here pleading and urging the passage of this bill. Probably a hundred thousand people will go there and apply for this land, and in the lottery the land will be divided into how many tracts——

Mr. TILLMAN. About twenty-four hundred.

Mr. COCKRELL. About twenty-four.

Mr. TILLMAN. Prizes.

Mr. COCKRELL. About twenty-four hundred prizes will be drawn, and these twenty-four hundred—Infinite Wisdom alone knows who they will be—are the objects of charity and sympathy, in whose behalf appeals are made to the Senate for the passage of this bill.

Senators, it is not right to pass it, because the bill is not right. I am as sympathetic as any man in the world, and no man has a warmer sympathy for the young man who is struggling in life to get a home for his wife and children, but I am not willing to tax the millions of young men with wives and children starting in life for the purpose of giving free homes to a few people—twenty-four hundred—who may be fortunate in the lottery. That is all there is in this bill. Shall we tax the struggling man to give twenty-four hundred men the chance of drawing a prize in a lottery? I can not see that it is just or right.

Now, it is claimed that we are reversing the policy of this Government; that it has always been the policy of this Government to give free homes. When did that policy originate? When was it the policy? Was it the policy when the pioneers from the Eastern States crossed the Alleghanies and went into the bloody land of Kentucky, or into Ohio, or Indiana, or Illinois? Not a bit of it. At first the Government charged $2.50 an acre for the public land, and the people who went on them were pioneers. They went there with their trusty rifles and ammunition. They went there to hew a home out in the wilderness and to drive back the Indians. They took all the chances, and yet they had to pay $2.50 an acre for their land.

Finally the price was reduced to a dollar and 25 cents an acre. Practically all the lands in Indiana and Illinois were disposed of at a dollar and a quarter an acre. The settlers paid the money into the Treasury. The people of the United States have received the benefit of it. In Missouri it was largely the same way. In Iowa it was largely the same way. Nine-tenths of the people there had to pay for their homes at a dollar and 25 cents an acre, until the graduated law of 1853–54, which reduced the price according to the number of years the land had been subject to entry, reducing it down as low as 25 cents an acre or less.

Mr. President, when did free homes arise? In 1862, for the first time in the history of this Government, the homestead law was enacted. It had been pending in Congress since the days of Mr. Benton, who had advocated it early in his career, and yet it was never enacted into law until 1862. There were reasons for it then. There were political reasons for it then. There were just reasons for it then. Our country was then engaged in the most fearful civil strife which ever paralyzed the energies of any great nation.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator from Missouri allow me to make a suggestion to him? Before the war, when I suppose nobody expected a war, Congress passed a free-homestead act, and it was vetoed by the President.

Mr. COCKRELL. It was not a law.

Mr. TELLER. No; it was not a law, but it was the Congressional mind and intention to have free homes.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now, in that struggle we had enlisted in the Union Army thousands upon thousands of men, many of whom had come from foreign lands and had no homes here. They had rendered their adopted country a great service. We passed this bill giving the right to the soldier to go and homestead the land and count his service as a part of the five years. It was a generous act, a just act, a liberal act upon the part of the Government. It induced many thousands of foreigners to become citizens and to go upon the lands and make their homes; and they have been doing it since.

Then we had millions of acres of tillable land, arable land, with all the climatic conditions necessary for supporting a population and developing the agricultural resources of the country. We had them in abundance; we had public lands in Missouri; we had public lands in Iowa. Lands were not scarce; they were abundant, and in justice, and in right, and in munificence this Government passed the homestead law. It was right then.

If we had the same condition, it would be right to-day. Nobody ever dreamed that that munificent law would be perverted to the idea that this Government has a right to go and buy private land at $2.50 or $5 an acre and then turn around and call it public domain. No, Mr. President, there was never any such contemplation.

This is not public domain in the strict or correct sense of the word. We would have the same right to go into Iowa, or into Minnesota, or into any other State of this Union and buy private lands, and call them public lands, and make them a part of the public domain, and give them away as homes to people as we have to go and buy land from the Indians and do it. There is no justice in this.

But from the arguments it would seem that the Government had already established a policy of making free homes out of Indian reservations. Let us see when the free-homes law was passed. The free-homes law in regard to Indian land was passed May 17, 1900. Was it a general law? Was it a law for the future or was it a law for special cases which then existed? Senators who were then here will remember that upon the opening of the lands in Oklahoma and that part of the country thousands of people flocked there. There was a drought one or two seasons in succession. The people failed to raise crops. They had promised to pay for the land. Congress was called upon to extend the time of payment. It was extended.

Still appeals were being made; sympathy was aroused; another extension of time was given by Congress for the payment of the purchase money for the land. The sympathy of the people was appealed to. The forlorn condition of the settlers was painted in grewsome colors, and we were asked to let them have their homes. They were there; they were in debt; they could not pay the price the Government was exacting, and out of sympathy and because of these appeals a law was passed, not for the future, but for these cases of supposed suffering. I will read it.

That all settlers under the homestead laws of the United States upon the agricultural public lands, which have already been opened to settlement, acquired prior to the passage of this act—

"Which have already been opened to settlement, acquired prior to the passage of this act"— by treaty or agreement from the various Indian tribes, who have resided or shall hereafter reside upon the tract entered in good faith for the period required by existing law, shall be entitled to a patent for the land so entered upon the payment to the local land officers of the usual and customary fees, and no other or further charge of any kind whatsoever shall be required from such settler to entitle him to a patent for the land covered by his entry: Provided, That the right to commute any such entry and pay for said lands in the option of any such settler and in the time and at the prices now fixed by existing laws shall remain in full force and effect.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will remind the Senator also that in the appeals made to us here it was stated that unless we did grant that relief by giving these homes, the capitalists who had loaned money to help build houses and improve the holdings would absorb and gobble up the whole business, and it was to prevent the absorption by capitalists of those homesteads that we put that bill through here.

Mr. COCKRELL. I thank the Senator from South Carolina for his suggestion. Everyone remembers that we were told they were going to be sold out under deeds of trust, and the only salvation was a donation of the land and free homes. That bill was passed through sympathy. If this bill is passed it will be by sympathy. It will not be passed upon the broad basis of equal and exact justice to all and special favors to none. It will be a law of favoritism, pure and simple, a law of gratuity to twenty-four hundred people who may in a lottery be the successful drawers of prizes for this land.

Therefore, Mr. President, under no circumstances can I vote for the provision that is now in the bill.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, we might relieve the situation in the question of the taxation of the old States for the benefit of the new if the older States would return a small part of the $28,000,000 which the Government received from the public lands a great many years ago and loaned to the States subject to call, which has never been returned, nor will it ever be returned.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I hope the Senator who has just spoken does not lay claim to any money the United States has received for its own property before any State which was created later had any existence.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. No; this is what I mean to say: Complaint is made that taxation is to be imposed upon the people of the whole United States to pay for this land in buying it from the Indians when the only beneficiaries will be the 1,300 or 1,400 people. I say we can relieve that situation and prevent the tax from being levied if the older States, who have received from the Government loans on the money heretofore received from the sale of the public lands of the Government to the amount of $28,000,000, will turn back into the Treasury about $1,000,000 of that sum and thereby save those taxes.

Mr. TILLMAN. If that is the programme, I suppose some one will introduce a bill to require those loans to be returned.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. No; that is not the question. The question is simply this: It comes with bad taste from those States which claim that the buying of this land for $1,000,000 of public money works a hardship when they have already in their coffers $28,000,000 of the Government's money which was loaned to those States and never has been returned.

Mr. TILLMAN. But I do not think——

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Nobody is questioning the right of the States to keep it, and nobody will. It is simply an illustration.

Mr. TILLMAN. The illustration does not seem to illustrate, for the simple reason that those older States at that time were the United States. They divided among themselves their own property, and the Government reserved the right to call for the loan in an emergency, when the States would respond.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I do not think the Senator fully understands the loan of which I was speaking.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will be very glad if the Senator will enlighten the ignorance of the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The Senator from Wyoming does not assume any ignorance on the part of the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. TILLMAN. He only asserts it.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I am speaking of only this one particular thing.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, I regret that the Senator from Wyoming has introduced the subject to which he has just alluded. There is no sectionalism about this measure. There is no question in it as between the older States and the newer States. I think the new States have been pretty well dealt with by the older States. We had in every new State great numbers of acres of public land, and when they were made States we have given it to them as a free gift. If you come and consider the question as to whether the new States or the old States have derived the most advantage from the public lands, the benefit is all, I think, in favor of the new States. In this very bill it is proposed to give the State of South Dakota two sections of land in each township, when by the act which admitted South Dakota into the Union it was provided that the grant of land of two sections in a township should not apply to the Indian reservations in that State. We are not dealing unjustly by the new States. We are giving them over and over more than the old States ever derived from the distribution of the proceeds of the sale of the public land.

Mr. GAMBLE. I will ask the Senator if it is not true that the act for the admission of the State of South Dakota also provided that when Indian-reservation lands were restored to the public domain there should be carried to the State sections 16 and 36 for school purposes? Was not that in the same law?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I read the provision here the other morning. I simply rose to say that I regretted the Senator from Wyoming should attempt to inject into this debate any question between the older States and the newer States.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I do not want to stand in a false light on account of the remark of the Senator from Connecticut. I simply replied to the observation of the Senator from Missouri that it was unjust to tax the older States for lands purchased in the newer States.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, speaking for myself, I well remember the time when as chairman of the Committee on Territories I helped to get six of the Western Territories into the Union, very much against the views of some people whom I represented; but I thought it was just. In each one of those acts thousands and hundreds of thousands of acres of the public land were given. I think 500,000 acres of the public land were given as a free gift to each of those States.

Mr. DIETRICH. Mr. President, I should like to call the attention of the Senate to one proposition. When this land is opened for settlement, one-fourth of the land will be owned by Indians. They will own the best portion of that tract of land. Those Indians will not be obliged to pay any taxes, all the taxes falling upon the whites who will own the land. The expense of all the improvements, public highways, public schools, and public buildings must be borne by the whites. Therefore I believe that we ought to act generously with those settlers who are willing to go among those Indians, and who are to pay the taxes and make the improvements which will be placed there for the benefit of those Indians.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BACON. I ask that the amendment may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. In section 3, page 6, line 18, after the word "acre," strike out the remainder of line 18, all of lines 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, and 25, down to and including the word "that," and insert the word "and;" so that if amended the proviso will read:

And provided further, That the price of said lands shall be $2.50 per acre, and homestead settlers, who commute their entries under section 2301, Revised Statutes, shall pay for the land entered the price fixed herein.

Mr. BACON. Will the Secretary please read the language proposed to be stricken out by the amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out the following words:

but settlers under the homestead law, who shall reside upon and cultivate the land entered in good faith for the period required by existing law, shall be entitled to a patent for the lands so entered upon the payment to the local land officers of the usual and customary fee and commissions, and no other or further charge of any kind whatsoever shall be required from such settler to entitle him to a patent for the land covered by his entry, except that—

And to insert "and."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT].

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

So the amendment of Mr. PLATT of Connecticut was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

Mr. GAMBLE. I ask that the bill in regard to the ratification of the agreement with the Indians of the Rosebud Reservation be taken up to-morrow morning at the close of the routine morning business, in the hope that it will then be finally disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from South Dakota. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT FOR THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2295) temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes.

[Mr. PRITCHARD addressed the Senate. See Appendix.]

[Mr. SIMMONS addressed the Senate. See Appendix.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. What is the pending amendment, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is not any amendment pending.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Then let us vote on the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the bill itself? The bill is open to amendment as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COCKRELL. What bill is it that is open to amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What is known as the "Philippine bill."

Mr. COCKRELL. We shall have to have the yeas and nays on it, I reckon.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Why should we not vote upon it?

Mr. COCKRELL. It seems there is no pending amendment to the Philippine bill.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Then let us have a vote on the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I thought the committee had some amendments.

Mr. LODGE. The committee amendments have all been adopted.

Mr. COCKRELL. I thought the minority of the committee had some amendments.

Mr. ALLISON. They have not been offered.

Mr. LODGE. No amendment has yet been moved to the bill by the minority.

Mr. TELLER. The senior member of the minority of the committee in special charge of the bill on this side is not here; but I do not suppose it is seriously expected to get a vote on this bill to-day.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I had supposed the debate had been exhausted on the bill, as it seems to have been running for the last few days on everything but the bill; and so I supposed that we might vote on it.

Mr. TELLER. I do not suppose anybody really expects to vote on this bill to-day. Certainly we shall not get a vote on it to-day.

Mr. ALLISON. Then we might perhaps fix a time for a vote on it, if the Senate is not ready to vote on it to-day.

Mr. TELLER. I do not think we ought to proceed to fix a time for voting on the bill, or do anything else regarding it, until the senior Senator of the minority who has the bill in charge for the minority is present. You can do this to-morrow morning, if you want to, but he is not here now.

Mr. ALLISON. I should be very glad to have the Philippine bill disposed of. I am endeavoring to get in at intervals with an appropriation bill, all the time hoping that the Philippine bill would reach an ending.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator can take up the appropriation bill now, so far as we on this side are concerned.

Mr. ALLISON. Well, then, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the pending bill be informally laid aside.

Mr. TELLER. There is no use disguising the matter. You will not be allowed to vote on the Philippine bill to-day.

Mr. ALLISON. After that statement I hope the bill may be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent that what is known as the Philippine bill be temporarily laid aside. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PROTECTION OF GAME IN ALASKA.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCCOMAS in the chair) laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11535) for the protection of game in Alaska, and for other purposes, and asking for a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. BURTON. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. BACON, Mr. KITTREDGE, and Mr. GIBSON were appointed.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I now ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13123) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the bill will be resumed.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill at line 11, on page 105. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "National cemeteries," on page 106, line 15, after the words "District of Columbia," to insert:

or in the immediate vicinity thereof, and of such soldiers, sailors, and marines who die in the District of Columbia and are buried in the immediate vicinity thereof.

And in line 19, before the word "dollars," to strike out "forty," and insert "forty-five," so as to make the clause read:

Burial of indigent soldiers: For expenses of burying in the Arlington National Cemetery, or in the cemeteries of the District of Columbia, indigent ex-Union soldiers, sailors, and marines of the late civil war who die in the District of Columbia or in the immediate vicinity thereof, and of such soldiers, sailors, and marines who die in the District of Columbia and are buried in the immediate vicinity thereof, to be disbursed by the Secretary of War, at a cost not exceeding $45 for such burial expenses in each case, exclusive of cost of grave, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 107, to insert:

Road to national cemetery, Springfield, Mo.: For repairing and improving the Government road from Springfield, Mo., to the national cemetery near that city, $20,934.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Miscellaneous objects. War Department," on page 108, line 14, after the word "posts," to insert "and for the acquisition of such lands and leases in lands;" in line 20, before the word "hundred," to strike out "five" and insert "eight," and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to insert:

And from this amount there shall be expended for additional buildings at the military post at Fort Meade, S. Dak., $100,000; and for additional buildings at the military post at Fort Lincoln, N. Dak., $75,000. The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to accept donations of land or interests in land in connection with the establishment and maintenance of military posts and national cemeteries whenever it may be necessary for the use of said military posts and national cemeteries.

So as to make the clause read:

Military posts: For the construction of buildings at and enlargement of such military posts and for the acquisition of such lands and leases in lands as, in the judgment of the Secretary of War, may be necessary, and for the erection of barracks and quarters for the artillery in connection with adopted project for seacoast defenses, and for the purchase of suitable building sites for said barracks and quarters, $1,800,000; and from this amount there shall be expended for additional buildings at the military post at Fort Meade, S. Dak., $100,000; and for additional buildings at the military post at Fort Lincoln, N. Dak., $55,000. The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to accept donations of land or interests in land in connection with the establishment and maintenance of military posts and national cemeteries whenever it may be necessary for the use of said military posts and national cemeteries.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I inquire of the Senator from Iowa if it will be in order to offer an amendment at this time to the committee amendment?

Mr. ALLISON. It will be.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Then I move to amend the amendment in line 24, after the name "North Dakota," by striking out "seventy-five" and inserting "one hundred."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 108, line 24, it is proposed to amend the amendment of the committee after the name "North Dakota" by striking out "seventy-five" and inserting "one hundred;" so as to read:

And for additional buildings at the military post at Fort Lincoln, N. Dak., $100,000.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 109, line 12, to reduce the appropriation for the purchase of the necessary land for a military post in the vicinity of Manila, P. I., in accordance with a provision in the act approved February 14, 1902, from $75,000 to $55,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 109, line 19, before the word "small," to strike out "some;" so as to make the clause read:

For the purchase of small tracts of land adjoining the military reservation at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., necessary for the maneuvering of the troops, $9,300.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. QUARLES. I ask unanimous consent to offer a little amendment, in line 22, page 129, which I have had printed and laid upon the table. It involves the expenditure of $3,000 "for the improvement and repair of the military cemetery on the Fort Crawford Reservation at Prairie du Chien, Wis., and for the purpose of purchasing a suitable approach to such cemetery." I hope the distinguished Senator in charge of the bill will not object to this amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator will waive the offering of that amendment until we get through with the committee amendments.

Mr. QUARLES. I was fearful I might not be here when the bill was again under consideration. I will consider it a very great favor if the Senator will permit the amendment to come in now.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator will hand it to me, I will endeavor, if he is not here, to take care of the amendment. I think it is a proper amendment, but I do not wish to set a precedent that may give rise to trouble.

Mr. QUARLES. Very well, Mr. President; that is entirely satisfactory to me.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, at the top of page 110, to insert:

For the purchase, on such terms as the Secretary of War deems fair and reasonable, of the land forming the roadway from the Aqueduct Bridge to Fort Myer, in Alexandria County, Va., where the said land has not been dedicated to the public and is owned by private parties: Provided, That the United States shall acquire said land free from any obligation to keep said road in repair or open to the public, and that the parties from whom the land is purchased shall warrant the same to the United States against all claims of every kind and nature whatsoever, $4,500.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I should like to have some explanation of this amendment from the chairman of the committee. I presume the amendment is all right, but on reading it it looks as if it provided for a roadway in the State of Virginia, and whether it has been dedicated or not is not very fully set forth. I am not quite sure about it and I should like to have some explanation regarding it.

Mr. ALLISON. This is an appropriation for what is known as the Memorial Bridge across the Potomac River, to connect the District of Columbia with our possessions at Fort Meyer and also with the National Cemetery. I am not so sure whether all the land necessary for the purpose has been dedicated or not. I think it very likely that some of it has not been; but there is an existing hope that so much of it as may be necessary will be dedicated if we appropriate the amount of money here proposed and continue the appropriations hereafter.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Is there not a road from the Aqueduct Bridge to Fort Myer, which has been traveled for years and years?

Mr. ALLISON. I beg the Senator's pardon. There is. That is another matter. There is a portion of this road which has been used for many years, which, it is claimed, has never been dedicated to the public. The object of this amendment is to acquire a proper title. It is a small matter. I thought the Senator had in view the amendment regarding the Memorial Bridge.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I know it is a small matter, but the road is not to be a United States road, and the United States is to be under no obligation to keep it in repair. It seems to be buying land on which a road runs and which it is said has not been dedicated to the public. There is no provision for any investigation to ascertain the facts in regard to it and whether or not it has been dedicated.

Mr. ALLISON. There is a long document regarding this question, for which I have sent. The provision was inserted at the request of the Attorney-General, who considered this the wisest and best way to dispose of a disputed and rather complicated question.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I am not opposing it.

Mr. ALLISON. I shall be very glad to have the letter of the Attorney-General read, which gives information on the subject.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I hope it will be read. The provision simply struck me as peculiar.

Mr. ALLISON. It is peculiar. The object of it is to settle a difficulty which has arisen respecting the road to Fort Myer.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. In most States—I do not know how it is in Virginia—where a road has been for a long time traveled by the public that itself is evidence of dedication which you can not go behind.

Mr. ALLISON. That question has been raised, and there is some doubt about it. The Attorney-General recommends this provision as the wisest and most economical method of settling the controversy. I shall be glad to have the letter read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, D. C., September 27, 1901.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 24th ultimo, in which you ask my opinion as to whether or not the interests of the Government require a final adjudication of the questions involved in the criminal proceeding (instituted in September, 1899, in a court of Alexandria County) in behalf of the Commonwealth of Virginia v. Howard P. Marshall and H. Rozier Dulaney, charged with obstructing the Rosslyn-Fort Myer military road, before the land is acquired, as contemplated, by purchase.

The proceeding in question resulted in the conviction of the defendants and the imposition of a fine, from which judgment a writ of error to the circuit court of said county has been sued out. There the matter stands.

At the request of the United States attorney for the eastern district of Virginia, in whose request you concurred, the Attorney-General appointed Francis L. Smith as special counsel in the case, and subsequently employed him to act as legal adviser to the board of Army officers appointed by you to investigate and report upon the title to the road, etc.

In reporting upon the case, the United States attorney stated that the verdict in the county court was really obtained upon the ruling of the trial judge to the effect that, although there was no legal dedication, the defendants or those under whom they claim had, after long usage by the public, closed the original road and substituted the land over which the road runs in part for the land originally occupied as a road, and then the judge decided as a "question of first impression" against the accused.

The doctrine laid down by the supreme court of appeals of Virginia (Kelly's case, 8 Grat., 632; Gaines v. Merryman, 95 Va., 660, and Buntin v. Danville, 93 Va., 200) is that the mere user of a road by the public for however long a time will not constitute it a public road, and that a road dedicated to the public must be accepted by the county court upon its record before it can become a public road, not necessarily a formal acceptance; any entry on the records of the court showing that it is regarded as a highway will be sufficient.

Further action by the circuit court in the criminal proceeding was suspended pending your consideration of the offer of the defendants to sell to the Government the land involved at the same rate, $1,000 per acre, at which they acquired it years ago. This offer was submitted as the result of a conference between the special assistant United States attorney and counsel for the defendants.

It seems to be the judgment of the Judge-Advocate General that, in the event the State is successful in the pending prosecution of Dulaney and Marshall, the Government will not need to purchase their interest in the land. This view of the matter would appear to be correct and controlling were it not for the opinion expressed by the United States attorney and the special assistant attorney who was in immediate charge of the case that, in the light of the decisions of the supreme court of appeals as to what constitutes dedication, and in the absence of record proof of dedication, the prosecution will not result in the conviction of the defendants.

Viewing the case as they do, counsel for the Government recommend the acceptance of the offer of compromise and regard that disposition of the matter as a highly satisfactory adjustment of the controversy, and, under all the circumstances, I agree with them.

The refusal to accept the offer of compromise will doubtless result in the trial of the case upon the writ of error, in the reemployment of special counsel, and probably, if the State is unsuccessful, in the failure of the War Department to secure as reasonable terms as those now offered.

I may add that upon being informed on June 7, 1901, by the board of Army officers that Mr. Smith's services had been completed and were highly satisfactory, the Department directed the payment of $500 to him, making $750 in all for his service in the prosecution of the case and as legal adviser to the board, and that Mr. Smith's connection with the matter has been closed.

The papers sent with your letter are herewith returned.

Very respectfully,

P. C. KNOX, Attorney-General.

The SECRETARY OF WAR.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. That seems to be satisfactory, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 110, after line 11, to insert:

For construction of macadamized road 30 feet wide and 3,450 feet long on Fort Sheridan Military Reservation, Ill., for the purpose of connecting present road on reservation with that known as the Sheridan road at the northern boundary of reservation, $8,000: Provided, That the use of said road shall not be permitted to interfere with or obstruct the garrison in any of its military exercises, drills, maneuvers, target practice, etc., or to disturb the quiet of the garrison at night.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 112, line 24, after the word "carriages," to strike out "and model in relief of the Nashville and of the Atlanta battlefields;" so as to make the clause read:

Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Park: For continuing the establishment of the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Park; for the compensation and expenses of two civilian commissioners and the assistant in historical work; maps, surveys, clerical, and other assistance, messenger, office expenses, and all other necessary expenses; foundations for State monuments; mowing; historical tablets, iron and bronze; iron gun carriages; for roads and their maintenance, and for the purchase of land already authorized by law; in all, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 113, line 6, before the word "civilian," to strike out "three" and insert "two;" and in line 10, before the word "thousand," to strike out "forty" and insert "thirty-seven;" so as to make the clause read:

Shiloh National Military Park: For continuing the work of establishing a national military park on the battlefield of Shiloh, Tenn.; for the compensation of two civilian commissioners and the secretary, clerical and other services, labor, land, iron gun carriages, and historical tablets, maps and surveys, roads, purchase and transportation of supplies and materials, office and other necessary expenses, $37,000.

Mr. BATE. In the sixth line on page 113 I should like to have inserted the words "an assistant in historic work."

Mr. ALLISON. I had a conversation with the Senator about this matter yesterday. I do not quite understand the proposal of an assistant engaged in historic work. I do not think it has been estimated for.

Mr. BATE. They have them elsewhere in some of these national military parks. And if it is consistent with the Senator's idea of right, I should also, in this connection, like to have the amount restored to $40,000. The committee of the Senate have reduced it to $37,000. Forty thousand was recommended by the House committee.

Mr. ALLISON. I will ask that the amendment be stated from the desk.

Mr. BATE: I will state it. After the word "commissioners" in line 6, on page 113, I wish to insert "an assistant in historic work and". The Senator who has this bill in charge can see at once the necessity for a historian to get up the histories, in connection with this battle, of the various regiments that fought in it.

Mr. ALLISON. Has it been estimated for? Does it meet with the approval of the War Department?

Mr. BATE. I am not aware of any objection.

Mr. ALLISON. There is no estimate for it. It creates a new office. I trust the Senator will not press the amendment, and I will waive the amendment in line 10, so that they will have a little more money to use.

Mr. BATE. I will see the War Department about it, as the Senator seems to regard the approval of the Secretary of War essential.

Mr. ALLISON. I prefer to pass the paragraph over until the Senator shows some recommendation of the War Department.

Mr. BATE. In addition to that, and in connection with this section, I should like to call the Senator's attention to another amendment. I wish to insert after the word "dollars" in line 10, page 113, the following:

For the construction and extension of the metaled or macadamized road leading from Pittsburg Landing through Shiloh battlefield in the direction of Corinth, Miss., so far as that amount will build it, $10,000.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I ask that the amendment also may go over until the Senator can secure some recommendation of the Secretary of War. I am not familiar enough with the matter to allow the amendment to go in without further information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The entire paragraph in reference to the Shiloh National Military Park will be passed over for the time being.

Mr. BATE. And also the amendments which I have offered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator from Tennessee will send his amendment to the desk it will be printed.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 113, line 21, before the word "civilian," to strike out "three" and insert "two;" and in line 25, before the word "dollars," to strike out "seventy-five thousand" and insert "seventy-one thousand one hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

Gettysburg National Park: For continuing the work of establishing the national park at Gettysburg, Pa.; for the acquisition of lands, surveys, and maps; constructing, improving, and maintaining avenues, roads, and bridges thereon; making fences and gates; marking the lines of battle with tablets and guns, each tablet bearing a brief legend giving historic facts, and compiled without censure and without praise; preserving the features of the battlefield and the monuments thereon; providing for a suitable office for the commissioners in Gettysburg; compensation of two civilian commissioners, clerical and other services; expenses, and labor; the purchase and preparation of tablets and gun carriages and placing them in position, and all other expenses incidental to the foregoing, $71,100.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 114, line 3, before the word "civilian," to strike out "three" and insert "two;" and in line 11, before the word "dollars," to strike out "one hundred thousand" and insert "ninety-six thousand four hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

Vicksburg National Military Park: For continuing the work of establishing the Vicksburg National Military Park; for the compensation of two civilian commissioners, the secretary and historian; for clerical and other services, labor, iron gun carriages, the mounting of siege guns, monuments, markers, and historical tablets giving historical facts, compiled without praise and without censure; maps and surveys; roads, bridges, restoration of earthworks, purchase and transportation of supplies and materials; office and other necessary expenses, $96,400.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will not insist upon the amendment, but will allow it to be disagreed to and the provision as it passed the House to stand.

I desire to say that the Vicksburg National Park stands in a different attitude toward the country from either of the others, because of its newness. It is only a little while since they began to improve the park, and the full commission, so far as I can learn, is very much needed. With the older parks, which have been in a state of improvement for ten or fifteen years, of course there is no necessity for retaining three commissioners. Certainly if ever three are required in any park, they are required for the Vicksburg park. I am especially interested in it because it so happens that the State of Illinois, which I have the honor to represent in part, had more troops there on the Federal side, by two to one, than any other State in the Union.

There is very great need of a full commission for some years yet, and I hope the chairman of the committee will allow the Senate provision to be disagreed to and the full commission of three to remain. I have documents here, which I could read, showing the facts in reference to it, but I do not think it is necessary. The mere suggestion of the fact that that is a new work and that we have practically just commenced upon it, while the others are old, it seems to me, should be sufficient. I think some of them are thirteen years old, some of them eleven years old, some of them seven years old, and so on. I can see that there might be some reason for reducing the number of commissioners in connection with them.

Mr. ALLISON. I am familiar with the situation in this park. The Senator from Illinois did not quite state the condition as I understand it. If he will turn his eye to the paragraph just below he will observe that as the bill came to us there was added a provision whereby at all these parks there should be but one commissioner.

Mr. CULLOM. That, I understand, is recommended by the Senate committee to be stricken out. I hope we will strike it out.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope so, too. The Committee on Appropriations believed there should be at least two commissioners at each of these parks, and they so provided in the amendments proposed, and some of which have already been agreed to.

There is some force in the suggestion that the large expenditure—because it is a large expenditure—made at Vicksburg is exceptional as compared with some of the other parks. The real work of laying out the park and of doing the things necessary for the park has already been done in all other cases except Vicksburg Park, so far as I know. I merely call the attention of the Senator to the fact that if we do not in some way amend this paragraph, and then if we are obliged at some stage of the proceedings to accept the subsequent paragraph, he may be in a worse condition than he is now. I shall leave the matter to the Senate.

Mr. CULLOM. If the amendment proposed by the committee on the part of the Senate is rejected and "three" remains, and the subsequent paragraph is stricken out——

Mr. ALLISON. Finally.

Mr. CULLOM. Finally; then would there be any other amendment necessary?

Mr. ALLISON. There would not be; but suppose at the final conclusion of the bill the paragraph now in the text, and which we recommend shall be stricken out, can not be removed from the text of the bill. Then the Senator will be in a worse condition than he is now.

Mr. CULLOM. That is true.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. Will the Senator from Illinois permit me?

Mr. CULLOM. Certainly.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. It will also be necessary for the chairman of the committee to waive the amendment, offered in line 10, where it proposes to strike out "one hundred thousand" and insert "ninety-six thousand four hundred."

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly; and waiving these amendments will place this paragraph beyond our control hereafter, without stating in what way, as is quite well known to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. BATE. Will the Senator from Illinois permit me? There is an additional reason. I was one of those interested at the beginning in these national parks on battlefields. Several of us had a meeting. I remember there were present General Manderson, General Walthall, and, I think, General COCKRELL and others. It was generally understood that there would be more than one commissioner—certainly two, if not three—and at most places three were provided for. The reason was that we wanted both sides of the battle to be represented; that is, that the Federal side should have a commissioner and one should be appointed likewise from the Confederates. It is required as the law stands now that each shall have been in that particular battle, one on the Confederate side and the other on the Federal side. And that is the way the number three came to be agreed upon. I think the Senator from Illinois gives a very good reason why perhaps in this instance there should be a third one.

I am against the House proposition in regard to this matter because it gives but one. Take Shiloh, for instance, for which I was speaking a while ago. There would be but one commissioner. If he belonged to either the Confederate or the Federal side it would be exceedingly embarrassing. I think the committee has shown great wisdom in making it two, if they can not make it three, because we must do justice to all parties. It would certainly be unjust otherwise, for the commissioner has to get up the history of all who were engaged in the battle, and see that the monuments are properly placed, and supervise everything connected with it. Therefore, you must have one Confederate to be en rapport with his people and secure proper information, and you must have one from the Federal side for a like purpose.

Therefore I think the amendment which the committee have recommended to the bill is correct, unless three commissioners can be obtained. There should be two, and we should not take any less at any rate.

The Secretary of War has acted with us all the while. He has agreed to it, and has made the appointments with the idea expressed in the law. The preceding Secretary of War, General Alger, once made a different appointment, and some of us from both sides went to him and told him the history of matter, how it originated, what the original understanding was, and he corrected the mistake.

Mr. CULLOM. The Illinois commission had recently been at Vicksburg, and it has been at work for a week or two weeks, perhaps. One of them wrote to me that he had been climbing hills and running down hollows and through the brush and bushes and briars until he had worn out all his clothing pretty nearly, and he says it is a tremendous work, and that three commissioners certainly ought to be retained in connection with that commission. They ought to be, as the Senator from Tennessee says, men who are familiar with the siege of Vicksburg. The delegation from Illinois was composed of old soldiers who were engaged in that siege. I hope in the end the chairman of the committee will take care of this matter.

I will say to the Senator from Mississippi that I think we had better leave the total as it is, so that the conference committee can have control of it when they come to dispose of it finally.

Mr. BATE. I think the Senator from Illinois will join with me in regard to the Shiloh matter. He spoke of the number of Illinois troops engaged at Vicksburg. They had 34 regiments at Shiloh, according to history; and in praise of his State I will say that they have already erected that many monuments or markers. So have Ohio and Indiana erected monuments and made arrangements for others, as have many other States.

Mr. CULLOM. I am not as familiar with Shiloh as I am with Vicksburg. It is a little older——

Mr. BATE. And much larger.

Mr. CULLOM. And in that view I was not disposed to make any question about any of the parks except Vicksburg, where the work has but recently been entered upon.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. I have no objection, as suggested by the Senator from Illinois, to leaving the amendment of the committee in line 10, inserting "ninety-six thousand four hundred" instead of "one hundred thousand." I supposed, though, that when the committee struck out "three" and inserted "two," causing a reduction of $3,600, the reduction was with reference to the reduction in the number of commissioners. If the number were reduced to two instead of three, I suppose it would be understood by the committee that one of them, as suggested by the Senator from Tennessee, should be from the Confederate side and one from the Federal side. But for the reasons which have been given by the Senator from Illinois I think it very proper to provide three commissioners in this case.

Mr. CULLOM. I think General Lee——

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. General Stephen D. Lee.

Mr. CULLOM. He is the Confederate soldier in connection with that park?

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. Yes, sir; he is now one of the Park Commissioners.

Mr. BATE. And is chairman of it?

Mr. CULLOM. No.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. He was a lieutenant-general.

Mr. CULLOM. I think a gentleman from Iowa is in charge of the Commission, and then there is General Lee, from Mississippi, and an Illinois man.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, if there is necessity for three commissioners anywhere, it is at Vicksburg. The line of the Confederates there was over 7 miles long—from river to river. The line of the Federal forces being exterior to it and at some places a quarter of a mile distant, while in other places almost hand to hand, was much longer—13 or 14 miles, my recollection is.

Mr. CULLOM. A communication which I have here says 13 miles.

Mr. COCKRELL. It was fully that. There is a dense growth there.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. And the country is hilly.

Mr. COCKRELL. Very hilly. In some places the hills are almost straight up and down. I had occasion to visit it during the summer, in connection with Confederate and Federal officers, to try to locate the position of the Missouri troops on both sides. It was a very difficult task. It was much more difficult to locate the Federal troops than it was the Confederates, because there was a line that we could trace all the way around where the fortifications had been. They had not entirely disappeared, and some of them were very distinct. But where the Federal line was is now in the woods. A dense growth has grown up where there were no trees at all at the time. There are now trees 6 or 8 or 10 inches in diameter where there was not a thing at the time the battle ended. It makes it very difficult to mark out the line.

I do not think the amount is excessive there. It ought to be a liberal allowance to mark out the lines. It will take some time to place markers along the lines where the troops were. It is very difficult to learn where a regiment was, and the right and the left of the regiment, because everything has disappeared which was there at the time when the fighting occurred. If three commissioners are needed anywhere, they ought to be there, because of the immense work that has to be done.

Then, in my judgment, as long as we have commissioners, until the work is practically done and the lines occupied by the forces marked out and markers placed, there ought to be at all parks two commissioners, so that the lines may be shown and marked and the positions of the troops on each side marked.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be divided. The question will first be put on agreeing to the amendment in line 3, page 114, to strike out "three" and insert "two."

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, on page 114, line 10, to strike out "one hundred thousand" and insert "ninety-six thousand four hundred;" so as to read:

Vicksburg National Military Park: For continuing the work of establishing the Vicksburg National Military Park; for the compensation of three civilian commissioners, the secretary and historian; for clerical and other services, labor, iron gun carriages, the mounting of siege guns, monuments, markers, and historical tablets giving historical facts, compiled without praise and without censure; maps and surveys; roads, bridges, restoration of earthworks, purchase and transportation of supplies and materials; office and other necessary expenses, $96,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FORAKER. I gave notice some days ago that I would introduce an amendment to the bill at page 107. I had the misfortune to be called out of the Chamber just before that point was reached, and I did not return until after the clause had been reached which is at present under consideration. I therefore ask the Senator from Iowa having the bill in charge to allow me to offer the amendment, to be inserted on page 107, at the end of line 5. It is as follows:

For reconstruction of stone wall inclosing the Confederate cemetery at Camp Chase, Ohio, $2,000.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator will withhold the amendment for the present until we complete the amendments of the committee.

Mr. FORAKER. Very well. I do not understand in what way the amendments are now being considered.

Mr. ALLISON. If it is inserted it should be inserted as a separate paragraph.

Mr. FORAKER. Very well. For information I will make an inquiry. Do I understand that after we get through with the consideration of the committee amendments we will go back, that such amendments as Senators may desire to offer may be submitted?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the bill will be resumed.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 114, after line 11, to strike out:

No part of the foregoing sums for national military parks shall be used during the fiscal year 1903 for the payment of more than one commissioner for service in connection with each of said parks under the direction of the Secretary of War, nor shall more than 10 per cent of the sums for either of said parks be expended for salaries of clerks or other employees.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 114, line 25, after the word "charts," to strike out "and bulletins;" so as to make the clause read:

Survey of northern and northwestern lakes: For survey of northern and northwestern lakes, including all necessary expenses for preparing, correcting, extending, printing, and issuing charts, and of investigating lake levels, with a view to their regulation, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended, $150,000.

Mr. ALLISON. Those words were rather improvidently recommended by the committee to be stricken out. I understand from the War Department that the words should be retained. I hope the amendment will be disagreed to.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, on page 116, line 3, after the word "therefor," to strike out "under a contract to be made with the Board of Charities of the District of Columbia;" so as to make the clause read:

Garfield Memorial Hospital: For maintenance, to enable it to provide medical and surgical treatment to persons unable to pay therefor, $19,000, one half of which sum shall be paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia and the other half from the Treasury of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 116, after line 20, to insert:

Governors Island, New York: For continuing the enlargement of Governors Island by construction of wharf, dredging, bulkhead, and filling, $200,000; and for the erection of storehouses and other necessary buildings, in accordance with the plan reported by a board composed of Maj. Gen. John R. Brooke, Col. George L. Gillespie, and Col. Amos S. Kimball, dated July 21, 1900, $60,000; in all, $260,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 117, after line 4, to insert:

Memorial bridge across the Potomac River: To enable the Secretary of War to begin the construction of a memorial bridge connecting the Potomac Park with the Arlington estate property, $100,000: Provided, That so much of the said amount as may be necessary may be expended for the purpose of securing and determining the proper plans for said bridge, said location and plans to be in accordance with the recommendations of the Secretary of War and to be subject to the approval of the President and Congress: And provided further, That the cost of said bridge and the approaches thereto shall not exceed $2,500,000.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, I should like some explanation of this item. What is the necessity for saying "to begin the construction of a memorial bridge," when the amendment provides that the plans are "to be subject to the approval of the President and Congress?" How can such a bridge be commenced if the plans are to be subject to the approval of Congress before, as I suppose, anything is done? They would not be approved by this Congress, I suppose; perhaps by the next Congress.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator means at the present session?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. By Congress at this session.

Mr. ALLISON. It might not be, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Let me make a further inquiry. Is it intended by this amendment to really begin the construction of a memorial bridge before plans for it are approved by Congress?

Mr. ALLISON. It is not.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. If that is the understanding of the amendment I have no objection to it, but it looks as if it was to be begun immediately.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator will read the proviso he will see——

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I have read it.

Mr. ALLISON. It reads:

That so much of the said amount as may be necessary may be expended for the purpose of securing and determining the proper plans for said bridge, said location and plans to be in accordance with the recommendations of the Secretary of War and to be subject to the approval of the President and Congress.

I do not see very well how they can expend any portion of this money except whatever may be necessary to secure the plan until after it has received the approval of Congress.

Mr. WARREN. I think the Treasury Department rules that the expense of the drawing of plans is a part of the construction or cost of a public building. I assume that a Government bridge would come under the same rule. Therefore it is necessary to provide some fund for drawing the plans in order to make the initial commencement.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. If the plans are not yet determined I think we ought not to do anything in the way of actually commencing the construction of the bridge until those plans have been determined and approved by Congress.

Mr. ALLISON. That is the understanding of the amendment.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. If that is meant by it I have no objection.

Mr. ALLISON. If more apt phraseology can be used I shall be glad to have the Senator suggest it.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 117, after line 16, to insert:

Establishment of Apache prisoners at Fort Sill, Okla.: For the erection of buildings and repairs to same, purchase of draft animals and live stock for breeding purposes, farm and household utensils, blacksmith and wheelwright tools and repairs to same, and all other necessary articles absolutely needed for the support and maintenance of the Apache prisoners of war permanently established at Fort Sill, Okla., under control of the War Department, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

For new barrack, $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 123, line 10, to increase the total appropriation for the support of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers from $305,275 to $335,275.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 130, line 16, before the word "hundred," to strike out "four" and insert "nine;" and in line 22, before the word "hundred," to strike out "three" and insert "eight;" so as to make the clause read:

For president of the Board of Managers, $4,000; secretary of the Board of Managers, $2,000; general treasurer, who shall not be a member of the Board of Managers, $4,000; inspector-general, $3,000; assistant general treasurer and assistant inspector-general, $2,500; two assistant inspectors-general, at $2,500 each; clerical services for the offices of the president and general treasurer, $10,500; messenger service for president's office, $144; clerical services for managers, $3,900; agents, $1,800; for traveling expenses of the Board of Managers, their officers and employees, $15,000; for outdoor relief, $1,000; for rent, medical examinations, stationery, telegrams, and other incidental expenses, $8,000; in all, $58,844.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 130, line 23, to increase the total appropriation for the maintenance of the National Homes for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers from $3,693,469 to $3,724,369.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 131, line 2, after the word "and," to strike out "of" and insert "officers under;" so as to make the clause read:

Hereafter the officers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, and officers under the Board of Managers thereof, shall be appointed, so far as may be practicable, from persons whose military or naval service would render them eligible, if disabled and not otherwise provided for, for admission to the Home, and they may be appointed, removed, and transferred, from time to time, as the interests of the institution may require, by the Board of Managers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Miscellaneous objects, Department of Justice," on page 133, line 21, to increase the appropriation for defraying the necessary expenses of defending suits in claims against the United States from $45,000 to $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 133, line 24, before the word "For," to strike out "Defense of suits before Spanish Treaty Claims Commission" and insert in capitals "DEFENSE OF SUITS BEFORE SPANISH TREATY CLAIMS COMMISSION;" so as to make it a subhead for the clause following.

The reading was continued to page 134, line 10.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 134, line 10, under the subhead "Defense of suits before Spanish Treaty Claims Commission," after "dollars," I move to strike out the period and insert a comma and the following:

Of which not exceeding $1,000, to be immediately available, may be expended for law books and books of reference.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 135, line 19, to increase the appropriation for actual and necessary expenses of the judges and clerks in the district of Alaska when traveling in the discharge of their official duties from $3,000 to $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 136, line 8, to reduce the appropriation for the employment of counsel for the Mission Indians of southern California from $1,000 to $500.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Did not the Attorney-General request an appropriation of a thousand dollars there?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir; he estimated that sum.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Did not the committee think it was necessary? The chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs is perhaps better informed on the subject, but I had understood that the work of special counsel there was to be important, and perhaps $1,000 would not be too much.

Mr. ALLISON. I should be very glad to have an explanation from the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. STEWART. What is the amendment?

The Secretary read as follows:

Counsel for Mission Indians: To enable the Attorney-General to employ a special attorney for the Mission Indians of southern California, upon the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior, $500.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. One thousand dollars was appropriated by the House, and the amendment strikes it out and makes it $500.

Mr. STEWART. I do not think there is much in that.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. All right.

Mr. ALLISON. I think there is nothing in it. Indeed, I think we could omit the entire appropriation, but we thought some good service might be done during the year. He has been paid $1,000 for a long time.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was, on page 137, line 4, after the word "dollars," to insert:

The Commission may pay a fixed compensation, not to exceed $2,500 annually, with allowance for subsistence, instead of fees, to commissioners, not exceeding two in number, whom the Commission under existing law may appoint to take testimony in the island of Cuba. The Commission may, in the place of two clerks now in service, employ an assistant clerk at the rate of $2,000 per annum and one clerk at the rate of $1,400 per annum.

So as to make the clause read:

Salaries and expenses, Spanish Claims Commission: For general expenses of the Commission for all the purposes mentioned in the act approved March 2, 1901, in addition to the continuing annual appropriation of $50,000 provided in said act, $5,000. The Commission may pay a fixed compensation, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 3, page 138.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 138, after line 3, under the heading "Judicial," I move to insert:

For salary of the additional circuit judge in the second circuit authorized by the act approved April 17, 1902, $6,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 15, page 138.

Mr. ALLISON. I offer the following amendment, to be inserted after line 15, page 138:

And provided, That from and after July 1, 1902, all the fees and costs in extradition cases shall be paid out of the appropriations to defray the expenses of the judiciary, and the Attorney-General shall certify to the Secretary of State the amounts to be paid to the United States on account of said fees and costs in extradition cases by the foreign governments requesting extradition, and the Secretary of State shall cause said amounts to be collected and transmitted to the Attorney-General for deposit in the Treasury of the United States.

Provided, That each clerk of the district and circuit courts shall, on the first days of January and July of each year, or within thirty days thereafter, make to the Attorney-General, in such form as he may prescribe, written returns for the half year ending on said days, respectively, of all fees and emoluments of his office of every name and character, and of all necessary expenses of his office, including necessary clerk hire, together with the vouchers for the payment of the same for such last half year; and the word "emoluments" shall be understood as including all accounts received in connection with the admission of attorneys to practice in the court, all amounts received for services in naturalization proceedings, whether rendered as clerk, as commissioner, or in any other capacity, and all other amounts received for services in any way connected with the clerk's office: Provided further, That no amount in excess of $5 shall be received from any attorney in connection with his admission to practice in a circuit or district court.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 14 I move to modify the amendment by striking out the word "accounts" and inserting "amounts."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be so modified, in the absence of objection.

Mr. ALLISON. I will state briefly that this amendment comes to us from the Department of Justice. It is deemed important in settling accounts.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was, on page 140, after line 6, to insert:

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent to amend the amendment by adding after the word "residence" in line 25 the following:

Which expenses shall be in lieu of those authorized by section 8 of the act of March 3, 1891.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The communication will be included in the Journal and will lie on the table.

ROBERT J. SPOTTSWOOD AND HEIRS OF WILLIAM C. M'CLELLAN.

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up a privileged report, which I will send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7018) for the relief of Robert J. Spottswood and the heirs of William C. McClellan, deceased, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the words stricken out by the said amendment insert "twelve thousand five hundred."

JOSEPH V. GRAFF,
D. J. FOSTER,
PETER J. OTEY,

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, that does not give the House the information as to what has been done.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask if there is any statement filed.

Mr. GRAFF. There is no statement filed with the report, but I can make a statement.

Mr. LOUD. But the rules of the House require a statement, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. GRAFF. I did not file a statement. That I thought was not necessary—that I could make an oral statement.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, the rules of the House require a statement.

The SPEAKER. The rules are explicit on this matter. A written statement must accompany the report. The gentleman will please recall his report until the statement is furnished.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. McCLEARY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 14019) making appropriations for the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 14019) making appropriations for the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 14019, with Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 14019. By unanimous consent general debate has been concluded, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. McCLEARY. Mr. Chairman, an amendment was pending, offered the night before last, and I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment which is offered and is pending. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCLEARY. As a substitute I offer the following, which I will send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after line 20, on page 4, the following:

"That for all purposes of assessment and collection of taxes upon personal property in the District of Columbia, the act of Congress approved March 3, 1877, entitled 'An act for the support of the government of the District of Columbia for the year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes,' as amended by specific acts of Congress, is hereby declared in full force and effect and to have been continuously so in force since its enactment; and that the board of assistant assessors created under the act of Congress approved August 14, 1894, be, and they hereby are, clothed with the duties and powers of the assessors mentioned in said first-named act, and, under the direction of the assessor, they shall for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1902, and subsequent fiscal years, assess personal property for taxation as required by law; and said board of assistant assessors, together with said assessor, are hereby constituted a board of equalization, appeal and review of the assessments of personal property; and hereafter said board shall, between the 1st day of September and the 31st day of October in each year, hold daily sessions for the purpose of equalizing the assessments theretofore made by them and of hearing and determining any and all appeals from the valuations theretofore made by them: Provided, That the tax on personal property shall be due, payable, and collected as now provided by law: Provided further, That each national bank, as the trustee of its stockholders, through its president, secretary or cashier, shall make the like returns and pay the same taxes as other corporations are required to do in said first-named act: And provided further, That the assessor and the three members of the board of assistant assessors authorized by the act approved August 14, 1894, whose salaries are herein appropriated for, shall, within ten days after January 1, 1903, be appointed by the President for a term of three years each, except that the terms of each of the three members of the board of assistant assessors shall terminate as follows. One year each, to be determined by lot among the three members of the board first appointed."

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. This is an amendment to the amendment?

Mr. MUDD. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland offers an amendment to the amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the proposed amendment:

"No person shall be appointed as assessor or assistant assessor as aforesaid unless he shall be a freeholder and an actual bona fide resident of the District of Columbia."

Mr. MUDD. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have another amendment which I wish to have read in my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment for the purpose of information.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the last proviso of the proposed amendment.

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Chairman, I have offered one amendment, and had another read. I might have offered both and had them pending at the same time. The first amendment proposes to perfect the clause or section giving the President the power of appointing the assessors, and the second proposes to strike it out, so both would be in order under the rule, the first having priority as to order of voting. The first amendment proposes that in case the President shall appoint these assessors he shall appoint actual, bona fide residents of the District of Columbia and persons who are freeholders. I do not deem it necessary to discuss that at all. It seems to me very clear that if the method of appointment of these people is to be changed, actual residents and freeholders of the District of Columbia, who are interested in property matters here and who are at least fairly qualified to pass judgment upon those questions, ought to be the ones appointed.

I suppose, Mr. Chairman, if I wanted to get some one from my district appointed to one or all of these places it might be a pretty good thing from my standpoint to leave this provision as it was originally reported. This happens to-day, however, to be just the one office under the Government of the United States that I have not at this moment of time any applicant for. I have no doubt I shall have a great many in due season should the provision be enacted as it stands. But, Mr. Chairman, seriously speaking, I want to say that I do not desire any applicant from my district to be considered for these places, because I think in all good faith and fairness these people ought to be appointed from the District of Columbia. Now, if the committee does not see fit to adopt that amendment as to the residence and property qualification of the appointees, or even in case it does adopt that amendment, I propose to move to strike out the proviso, because it strikes me that if we are to give any regard whatever for the theory of local self-government to the extent that it can be given in this District, the District Commissioners ought to be allowed to continue to appoint these people.

These are the objects of my two amendments. The first one, I repeat, is to the effect that the President, if he be given the power of appointing, shall appoint actual bona fide residents and freeholders of the District. I should like to have a vote on that amendment.

Mr. HEPBURN. I should like to ask the gentleman if that is the present provision of law. Are the officers as now appointed necessarily residents or freeholders of the District of Columbia?

Mr. MUDD. I do not know that that is the case, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. HEPBURN. Why the necessity for the change at this time?

Mr. MUDD. Because I apprehend that the Commissioners, in making their appointments, will appoint from the District of Columbia. I take it for granted that they are so wedded to the idea of local self-government that they can be fairly trusted to make appointments from the District of Columbia, or people who are practically residents here, who have property here, who are freeholders of the District, and who know the needs and understand the business conditions of the District.

Mr. HEPBURN. Would the gentleman be willing to apply that provision to all the other employees of the District government?

Mr. MUDD. Well, I am not sure that I am prepared to say, or that it would be altogether consistent in me to say, that I stand committed to a literal adherence to that doctrine as to all the employees of the District. I apprehend that would be, as a general proposition, the better theory. But whether that be true or not, it is clear to my mind that the administration of a law that so deeply and peculiarly affects the local property interests that lie within this District and the intangible properties of people who live and make their permanent home here ought not under any conditions be placed under the control of men who shall be quartered upon this District merely to provide them with offices, and who know nothing and care nothing about the needs and the interests of the District or its people.

Mr. McCLEARY. As to the first amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland, I see no objection to its adoption.

Mr. BENTON. What is it?

Mr. McCLEARY. That the assessors shall be actual residents and freeholders of the District.

Mr. BENTON. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to that amendment. The assessor and his assistants are now appointed by the District Commissioners. The object of your committee in the amendment which it offered was to put that power of appointment in the hands of the President of the United States.

Mr. MUDD. I think the gentleman misunderstands the purport of the first amendment. The amendment that I now ask for a vote upon is simply to require that in case the President shall appoint, he shall appoint from among the freeholders and actual residents of the District. That is the amendment now pending.

Mr. BENTON. That is what I am talking about. The President has now authority to appoint the Commissioners. He can appoint one from the Army; he can appoint one from New York, and one from Louisiana, Virginia, or Missouri. The object of our committee was to have this question placed in the hands of the President, divorcing the appointment of the assessors from the Commissioners and from the authority in the Senate to confirm, so that the assessor and his assistants should be subject alone to the public opinion of the United States and to the opinion of the President as to whether they were faithful officers. I do not believe that he should be compelled to appoint the assessors from bona fide residents of the District of Columbia. If it is done they are more or less under local influences, and the very object of the amendment, in my opinion, would be destroyed. I hope that the amendment will be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. MUDD. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 26, noes 65.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MUDD. I have another amendment, to strike out the last proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. That was not offered.

Mr. MUDD. I move to strike out the last proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman did not offer it, because it was not in order. The gentleman now offers the amendment to strike out the last proviso, giving the President power to appoint. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the last proviso of the proposed amendment, as follows:

"And provided further, That the assessor and the three members of the board of assistant assessors authorized by the act approved August 14, 1894, whose salaries are herein appropriated for shall, within ten days after January 1, 1903, be appointed by the President for a term of three years each, except that the terms of each of the members of the board of assistant assessors shall terminate as follows: One each year, to be determined by lot, the three members of the board first appointed."

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, as I understand the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland, it is to strike out the proviso last read by the Clerk. I take it that the sentiment of the House was sufficiently expressed in the last vote, and that that amendment can not carry. It would make the entire amendment ineffective. The purpose of this amendment is to raise taxes upon personal property. The purpose of the proviso is to take the entire appointment of the assessors of the District of Columbia away from local influences of the District, and I trust that the amendment may stay in such condition that that purpose may be enacted into law.

I want to say just a word about the amendment itself. The Committee on the District of Columbia have been criticised somewhat on the floor of this House for not bringing in a bill on this question. This matter has been called up on the floor of the House one way or another ever since I have been a member of this body; and I remember distinctly, some five years ago, when the matter was discussed a little on the floor, that gentlemen opposed any consideration of the matter, because they said the District was then raising as much taxes as the Government was willing to appropriate to meet, and for that reason there was no necessity for taxing personal property. Later on, as the revenues of the District began to be eaten up by the increased expenses, there appeared in the House some disposition to tax personal property; but then it was discovered that in places in authority in the District, and especially with the Commissioners of the District and many influential citizens, there was a very strong disinclination to any such law.

The matter has been considered once or twice in our committee. I introduced rather an extensive bill in the last session, and, I believe, reintroduced it in this session. I want to say, on behalf of the committee, that we have been favoring legislation along this line, but we thought it was best—in the interest of effective legislation—that it should first come from another Chamber. We felt that if we passed a law through our committee, and if the House should approve the work of the committee and pass it through the House, it might be sufficient to get large appropriations on this bill and might not in the end become a law. For that reason the Committee on the District of Columbia, and especially the subcommittee in charge of this work, concluded that it was best—for the benefit of legislation and effective legislation—that they should not act on this matter prior to action had in another body.

Now, let me say, in passing, of this measure, I am heartily in favor of it. It is quite possible—in fact, it is more than possible; it is a fact—that the legislation may be considered crude——

Mr. McDERMOTT. If the gentleman will permit me, I have considered this matter somewhat, and I want to arrive at a conclusion as to what this amendment means. What does this committee do with a foreign corporation that has an office here and transacts business outside of the District of Columbia? Illustrating it, as I did on yesterday, take the General Electric Company. If the General Electric Company establishes an office and works here and invests capital in it, does this bill subject the entire capital of that company to taxation here?

Mr. COWHERD. I do not think so, unless its capital is here.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Then it has no effect on a foreign corporation whatever.

Mr. COWHERD. It would have no effect on property that they owned outside of the District of Columbia, and ought not. I have not investigated that subject particularly, but that is my idea.

Mr. McDERMOTT. The gentleman thinks the tax would not be on the capital stock of a foreign corporation?

Mr. COWHERD. Not unless it has its chief place of business here.

Mr. McDERMOTT. I say it has its office here. The gentleman thinks the amendment would not have anything to do with a foreign corporation?

Mr. COWHERD. No.

Mr. McDERMOTT. I think we might spend a few moments on this and get an understanding of it.

Mr. BENTON. I will state, by way of interruption, that the gentleman from New Jersey is arguing on the main proposition, which is not now before the committee. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland, striking out the proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD] has expired.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, I ask that I may have five minutes more, and I will only use part of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word in regard to the old law. There was a law on the statute book that provided for the assessment of taxes on personal property, and under that act it was provided that the Commissioners should publish an assessment list which should be sent out, and the police were sent out to deliver them to every householder. There was not in that law, and will not be if reenacted, a proper provision for the collection of the lists and the return of them, but it is the best that we can do at this time. It is the best we can do in this way, and I want to say that, in my opinion, after wrestling with this question a little in the last three or four years that I do not believe that we can ever enact a law in this District to tax personal property unless it is in some such way. You have got to put it on an appropriation bill or in some way force it through both houses of Congress or you will not get it. While I believe this law is crude and will not be a perfect law, it is the best we can do at this time. We may have to amend it at the next session of Congress, but as soon as it goes on the statute book and once is enforced I think every man in the District will be in favor of amending it and perfecting it. I am heartily in favor of the legislation, and I am heartily in favor of the way in which it is brought before the House.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I agree with the statement that has been made in regard to the necessity of some law to tax personal property in the District of Columbia. I think at the door of the Commissioners of the District, or whoever it was that was at fault when the former statute was dismantled and wrecked, lies much of the blame for the situation which we have now in this District. But I am very doubtful about whether we are going to do justice by the passage of this law. I heard the statement of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations in regard to the great expenditures that have been made on behalf of the District, and I am impressed with the fact that some, indeed a great deal of injustice appertains to that criticism. To illustrate: We took out of the funds of the District of Columbia one-half of the cost of the great improvement of the water supply and spent that money under the jurisdiction of the General Government. And then we find ourselves again taking the funds of the District for the building and completion of the same improvement of the water supply. I do not believe there was any equity or any justice in that performance from the beginning to the end. The cost of that work, the double cost of that work, the much more than double cost of the work, was caused by a blunder, to use no stronger term than that, of the representatives of the Federal Government and not of the District of Columbia, and I believe injustice was done for that reason.

Another criticism I make is as to the manner in which the funds of the District of Columbia have been handled. I do not know whose fault this is, but driven out into the outer country, in many instances beyond the line almost of the District—certainly beyond the residential portion of the District—we find enormous expenditures for streets. I was told this morning that three quarters of a million dollars had been expended on the extension of a few streets that have no beneficial effect to the District of Columbia or the people of it whatever, and yet they are taxed with their share of it. The real benefit goes to a coterie of real estate speculators in that section of the District.

Now, I am told that the real estate of the District of Columbia is now taxed at about 1½ cents on the dollar, and that the appraisement for that purpose is put at about 70 per cent of the nominal value.

Mr. BENTON. The gentleman means on the hundred dollars?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Certainly; a dollar and a half on the hundred, but that the appraisement is 70 per cent of the nominal value.

Mr. BENTON. It is 65 per cent.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Well, 65 per cent. I was told that it was 70. In most of the States, and I have full knowledge of one of the States, where our assessment reaches far less than a cent and a half, and is put on an estimated value generally not above one-third of the nominal value of the property. I think if you are going to put the full assessed tax on the personal property in this District at the rate of $1.50 on the hundred, and then superadd that to the 1½ per cent on real estate, that you have got a condition of taxation that will be destructive rather than beneficial.

Mr. COWHERD. When the gentleman states that the tax in his State is much less than 1½ per cent, does he mean to include the State and county tax?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Not so far as I know. I think in Cincinnati the tax falls under 2 per cent all told, of every description.

Mr. COWHERD. Here the dollar and a half per hundred covers all.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. I ask an extension of my time for five minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. SHATTUC. Did I understand my friend to say that in Ohio the taxes are less than 1½ per cent?

Mr. GROSVENOR. On the average much less than 2½, I said.

Mr. SHATTUC. I wish to say that on the tax list of Hamilton County, Ohio, we have 30 houses which are all assessed at 65 per cent of what they would sell for, and on all bonds and stocks returned I pay 3 per cent.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Something depends upon the locality. In the small town in which I live the little property which I have is taxed only as I have stated, but in a city of the size of Cincinnati there is, of course, no such tax as that.

Mr. SHATTUC. Just a word more. In Cincinnati real estate, on an average, is taxed on a valuation of over 65 per cent, and on the income of bonds of the city of Cincinnati, selling at par and bearing 3 per cent interest, we pay 3 per cent tax.

Mr. GROSVENOR. And every time Cincinnati offers bonds for sale she gets a large premium.

Mr. SHATTUC. And none of them are sold in Cincinnati. They are all sold in New York or other points in the East.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman used some language just now which seemed characteristic of him. He said: "All the bonds and stocks that I return." I do not know why he uses just that expression.

Mr. SHATTUC. I noticed that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] prompted you to make that statement.

Mr. GROSVENOR. That shows the importance of concentrating the wisdom of the House on "trusts."

Mr. SHATTUC. I said just exactly what I meant. I thought you might "get onto" that yourself; but you did not.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Now let me go on.

Mr. SHATTUC. I will ask that your time be extended, if necessary.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman lives in a village—a very beautiful village—where large expenditures are made for schoolhouses and fine streets and other improvements. A great many people living there do business in Cincinnati, and it is sometimes convenient—I do not say that I know of any case of that kind—but it is sometimes convenient for a property owner to be in doubt as to where he ought to return his property. That is one of the difficulties we have had in the District of Columbia; and therein I think the people of this District have brought upon themselves a condition that justifies Congress in enacting and enforcing or seeing to the enforcement of some law that will bring in additional money needed for public purposes in the District.

We are all interested in that. We are not only interested in reducing the taxation where it falls too heavily, but we are interested in making this section of the country a little too warm to be a convenient place for a large number of gentlemen who from time to time have seen fit to hazard the doubtful question where they live so as to get rid of paying taxes anywhere.

Not very long ago, in the matter of a large estate, it was solemnly urged upon a judge of the United States court in Cincinnati that the trustee of the estate ought to be appointed in the District of Columbia for the reason that here no taxes would be levied upon the estate. That argument was made very seriously and very earnestly. But when he got through the judge said that he was not in the business of issuing orders for the protection of tax dodgers, and he very promptly appointed a trustee in the State of Ohio.

Mr. BROMWELL. As there has been some little question raised in regard to the tax paid in Cincinnati, allow me to say that I pay at the rate of 2.6 per cent on my property in the village of Wyoming, and on a farm which I own just below Cincinnati I pay, on a valuation of $500 more than I paid for the property, very nearly 2.5 per cent.

Mr. GROSVENOR. It will be seen that when one puts his money into a farm, even a Congressman can not get away from the taxgatherer. But in regard to personal property, we all know its remarkable transitory quality in the matter of taxation.

Now, all I appeal for is this: In the swinging of the pendulum the other way, let us not do that which will be injurious and unjust and which may produce reaction. I believe the people of this city are willing to pay a reasonable tax; but I should be sorry if this old enactment, which never ought to have been evaded as it was, should now be reenacted in gross without the opportunity for the people of the District to come before a committee of Congress and make known any criticism that they have to make in regard to it. They are very anxious on this subject, so far as I know.

Mr. McCLEARY. Mr. Chairman, the immediate question before us is the amendment by the gentleman from Maryland as to the method of appointing assessors.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Allow me to add that I am wholly opposed to that amendment. I think the bill as drawn is far better.

Mr. McCLEARY. Mr. Chairman, the question before us is this: Shall the assessors charged with the assessment of persoual property be appointed by the President or by the Commissioners of the District? Your committee recommends that they be appointed by the President. In so recommending, the committee means no disrespect to anyone; it intends no reflection on the present Commissioners or on the present assessors, all of whom are men of high character.

But the local feeling against a personal-tax law seems to have been for many years very strong. Fifteen months after the law of 1877 was passed, the Commissioners then in office, under the authority granted to them in the act of 1878 to consolidate offices, wiped out the officials provided for the assessment of personal taxes. The law granting the Commissioners this power to consolidate offices is still in force. Under it they would, in the judgment of your committee, be under great pressure to negative the law again. To remove from them this pressure, the committee has recommended that the appointment of the assessors be made by the President, who represents the entire country, from whose treasury one-half of the expenses of the District is paid. Therefore the committee hopes that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland will be voted down.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say just a few words with reference to this matter, about which there has been a great deal said in the press lately, and particularly since it has been suggested by the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR]. Considerable talk has been had as to what the United States should pay for the running expenses of the District of Columbia and how much taxes this District should pay. We hear a good deal of complaint and a good deal of fault finding about the District of Columbia having to pay so much of the taxes. The people complain that they are compelled to help open up Rock Creek Park, and they complain that they ought not to help pay for the water system; they complain of a good many things they have to pay for, that Congress has laid upon them, as they say. I have been interested in looking this matter up to find out that there is another side to this question, and if we will investigate it we will find, and the gentleman from Ohio will find, that Congress has never been slow in paying her full proportion of the expenses of running the government of the District. Congress has paid for a great many things exclusively that would very properly be charged to the District.

I find that from 1878 down to 1892 the Freedman's Hospital, for example, was appropriated for entirely out of the revenues of the Government. The District did not pay any of it. I find also that from 1878 to 1896 the maintenance of the District of Columbia jail was paid for entirely out of the revenues of the United States Government, and if the District of Columbia had been required to pay one-half thereof, at the low average of $20,000 per annum, it would have amounted to a total of $280,000. I find also that from 1878 to 1893 the salaries of the supreme court in the District of Columbia, now costing about $30,000 a year, were paid out of the revenues of the United States Government, and at an annual charge of $15,000 for the whole sixteen years would have been $240,000. I find also, from 1878, the date of the organic act, until 1899, inclusive, Providence Hospital, now costing $19,000 per annum, was paid for solely out of the revenues of the United States Government, and that from 1886 to 1899, Garfield Hospital, now costing $19,000, was paid for exclusively out of the United States Treasury, and if the District's proportion during those years had been the low average of $8,000 it would have amounted to $98,000.

I also find that from 1878 to 1900, inclusive, there was paid for improving, policing, and for lighting all the city parks around the city, costing now more than $100,000 per annum, but at the low average of $40,000 per annum for the District's share would have made a total of $920,000. And there is another thing that we will find the United States Government has paid for exclusively, as has recently been developed—a sum over and above the charge that has been made to the District, for caring for the insane persons and patients of the District, an amount that will aggregate, probably, as near as can be estimated, $500,000 that we have been undercharging the District of Columbia for caring for insane persons.

Another thing I desire to call attention to is that the United States Government has been paying every dollar of juror and witness fees for the courts here in the District of Columbia. The foregoing items will aggregate $2,589,000, that properly under the act of 1878 should have been provided for from District revenues.

We have also appropriated a sum total out of the United States Treasury of $2,359,000 on river and harbor bills from time to time. And for what? To reclaim the Potomac Flats, to clean out the lowlands and the miasma, and to better the condition along there; and that is for what? For the benefit of the people of the District of Columbia, but all paid for out of the United States Treasury. It has been suggested that I ought to state that 700 acres of land also has been reclaimed to the District as the result of that expenditure and dedicated for the purposes of a public park.

Now, we see in the papers and we hear complaints—and I speak of it now particularly because the gentleman from Ohio brought it out—that the people of the District are improperly charged, first, with a million and eight hundred and eighty thousand and odd dollars for the water supply of Washington; and yet we know that the water system was originally installed at the expense of the Government of the United States. But, sir, that water system is a matter of necessity for the people of the District, and yet through the press we hear them complaining about their having to pay half of the cost of subsequent extension and maintenance. Then there is the Zoological Park, something almost entirely and exclusively, we may say, for the use and enjoyment of the people of this District.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the time of the gentleman be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks that the time of the gentleman from Minnesota may be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURKETT. Well, I did not have a great deal more to say.

Mr. SIMS. Give the total of all that.

Mr. BURKETT. I have not the total here, but if there is no objection, when correcting my remarks, I will give the total of it and put a summary of all this matter into the RECORD.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I would like to ask the gentleman a question, as to whether or not in every city in the United States where street paving is done from two-thirds to the entire cost of the street paving is not assessed upon the abutting property owners, and as to whether that is the case in the District of Columbia?

Mr. BURKETT. It is not the case in the District of Columbia. As I suggested yesterday in my remarks, the joint fund of the Government of the United States and the District of Columbia pays entirely for the paving. The abutting property is not taxed at all for paving. It is taxed one-half for sidewalks.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Why should not the abutting property be taxed for a betterment of that character?

Mr. BURKETT. Well, the policy here has been to pay it out of the general fund.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Does it not arise from the fact that the National Government pays half, and that is the reason we have a different rule in this District from anywhere else in the country?

Mr. BURKETT. I think, perhaps, that has something to do with it; but I can say this to the gentleman, that in most cities where the abutting property pays for pavements you can not put a pavement down in front of a piece of property or in front of a block unless a certain per cent of the property owners in that block or district ask for it—two-thirds, I believe it is.

Mr. SHAFROTH. A majority usually.

Mr. BURKETT. That is the rule in my city, and I presume it is the rule in Denver, where the gentleman comes from. Now, here in Washington, this is our national capital. We control it and we do not want to have to go and ask the property owners if we can put a pavement down in front of their property. We are not in a position to do that as Congress, and if we are going to control this, it is probably better that we should put it down and raise the revenue for it by taxation.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Do you think the property owner should pay nothing for this direct improvement to his property?

Mr. BURKETT. Well, the property owner does pay his proportion of the one-half. Whether that is a proper division of the burdens or not I will not pretend to debate at this time, but I am really constrained to believe that the better way for us here, as we want to develop this city in our own way and in our own time, is to retain absolute control of the pavement question.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Do not other cities get paved in the same way? New York is well paved.

Mr. BURKETT. But we know that other cities do not get pavement put down where they want it, nor the kind they want in all cases.

Mr. SHAFROTH. They do not have it on the outskirts, and they should not have it on the outskirts, even in this city, if property does not justify it.

Mr. BURKETT. I submit, to be printed in the RECORD, a summary as I have mentioned before.

SUMMARY.

The following objects of expenditure now conceded and accepted as a proper charge on the Federal Treasury and the District revenues jointly under the act of 1878 were for many years subsequent to 1878 borne entirely by the United States Government, namely:

From 1878 to 1892, inclusive, Freedmen's Hospital, now appropriated for at $54,000, an average annual charge of only $26,000 on this account against the District for the fifteen years would amount to $375,000.

From 1878 to 1896, inclusive, maintenance and expenses of District of Columbia jail, now costing $48,000 per annum, an average annual charge of only $20,000 on this account for nineteen years would be $280,000.

From 1878 to 1893, inclusive, salaries, judges of the supreme court, now costing $30,000 per annum, an average annual charge of $15,000 against the District for sixteen years would be $240,000.

From 1878 to 1899, inclusive, Providence Hospital, now costing $19,000 per annum, an average annual charge of $8,000 against the District for twenty-two years would be $176,000.

From 1886 to 1899, inclusive, Garfield Hospital, now costing $19,000 per annum, an average annual charge of $8,000 against the District for fourteen years, would be $98,000.

From 1878 to 1900, inclusive, for improving, policing, and lighting city parks, now costing more than $100,000 per annum, an average annual charge against the District of $40,000 for twenty-three years would make $920,000.

It has recently been developed that the District has been undercharged for the care of her insane at the Government Hospital for the Insane by at least $70,000 per annum. The Commissioners acquiesce in if they do not concede this contention. An average for ten years on this account of only $50,000 would aggregate $500,000.

The foregoing sums aggregate $2,589,000. On river and harbor acts up to date the sum of $2,359,000 has been appropriated for the reclamation of the so-called Potomac Flats, resulting in the reclamation of a body of land of more than 700 acres that has already been dedicated as a public park for the District of Columbia.

Mr. COWHERD. I agree with the gentleman's conclusion as to the policy, but is not that still another argument as to the low rate of taxation in the District, that there is practically no special tax imposed here, whereas these special taxes are borne by property owners in nearly every other city in the country? It simply shows that while other people are paying 2 per cent or 3 per cent, they still, in addition to that, pay these special assessments. Here in Washington they pay a cent and a half, and do not have to pay any paving assessment. They get their ashes hauled out, they get their allies cleaned out, and all that sort of thing that in most cities we have to pay for in addition.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Do they not also get the benefit of having trees planted in front of their premises, and is there any other city in the Union that gets such an advantage as that?

Mr. BURKETT. There is an appropriation in this bill for trees in the District of Columbia.

Mr. McDERMOTT. The policy that the gentleman praises now is one that involves a hardship to everybody except the line owner. The abutting property owner is assessed in every other city except this by assessors who estimate the benefit to the abutting property owner by reason of the improvement, and the surplus, if any, is assessed upon the district or city at large.

Mr. BURKETT. Does the gentleman state that that is the way it is done in all other cities?

Mr. McDERMOTT. I know of no other city in which it can be done in any other way.

Mr. BURKETT. I presume in nine out of ten cities the amount that the paving costs is divided into ten equal assessments, and these assessments are taxed up against the lot under the law.

Mr. McDERMOTT. That is because the property owners do not test the law by going to the courts, because under the Federal and State decisions you can not take a man's property for nothing, and when you assess any improvement by linear frontage so much per foot, without regard to the benefits acquired by the property owner, you confiscate his property, and that proposition has never been submitted to any court in any State in this country that the assessment has not been set aside.

Mr. LOUD. I beg the gentleman's pardon. The supreme court of my State has determined that question.

Mr. BROMWELL. In the city of Cincinnati they assess half on the city and half on the property owner by linear feet, and without reference to the benefits.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Then that assessment is sustained on the idea that the linear property owner is benefited to that extent.

Mr. BROMWELL. That may be the theory, but that is the fact.

Mr. BENTON. I ask that the pending amendment may be again reported.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. McCLEARY. Unless some other gentleman desires to debate the amendment, I ask for a vote.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Chairman, I should like to take exceptions to the remarks which were made by my colleague on the Committee on the District of Columbia in regard to the manner in which the business of assessing and carrying out the provisions of the tax law by the gentleman in charge of that bureau has been done. Now, I understand that Mr. Darneille, who is the gentleman probably referred to, has not only carried out the law, but he has gone further, and has attempted to carry out this law, which lacks something to make it operative to-day.

Mr. COWHERD. I hope the gentleman did not understand me to make any reflection upon the way the law had been enforced which was on the books?

Mr. MORRELL. I so understood you.

Mr. COWHERD. I certainly did not state my feelings clearly or the gentleman did not understand me. The statement I made was that the Commissioners of the District of Columbia were opposed to assessing a personal tax.

Mr. MORRELL. Yes.

Mr. COWHERD. And had opposed the passage of the bill—had opposed it in our committee. I did not intend to make any reflection upon the way the assessor had enforced the law now on the books.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Why do they not enforce the law that is on the books?

Mr. COWHERD. I could state that, but it would come out of the gentleman's time.

Mr. MORRELL. In answer to that, I would like to read from the report of the hearings before the Committee on Appropriations. On page 8, Mr. Macfarland, in answer to a question of Mr. BURKETT, says:

> I may say, at the request of Senator McMILLAN the assessor of the District has drafted the outline of a personal-tax law which will be effective, our former tax law having been within the last few weeks put on trial and within the last few days practically declared invalid by our supreme court of the District.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Does the gentleman know why it was declared invalid?

Mr. MORRELL. The report goes on as follows:

> Mr. MOODY. It has been declared invalid?
> Mr. MACFARLAND. Yes, sir; on the ground that a necessary cog in the machinery of assessment was lacking.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Who knocked out that cog?

Mr. MORRELL. That I do not know.

Mr. GROSVENOR. It is a matter of history that the action of the District Commissioners destroyed the machinery, and practically the law stands hung up in the air, as I understand. I ask the gentleman from Missouri if that is not true?

Mr. COWHERD. As I understand, there were formerly 12 district deputy assessors, 1 for each district. The Commissioners consolidated 3 offices, known as assessor, superintendent of taxes, and treasurer, and then Congress passed an act creating an assessor and 3 deputy assessors to assess real estate. That left nobody to assess personalty, and he has no power, at least, for personal assessment. That is my understanding of the matter.

Mr. GROSVENOR. And no one came to Congress asking for a change or to make any legislation, and so we have stood here for twenty years.

Mr. BENTON. And that was done by the Commissioners themselves.

Mr. GROSVENOR. That is what I understand.

Mr. COWHERD. That was done by the Commissioners, and the act of 1894 was an approval of it.

Mr. MORRELL. I can not understand that the Commissioners willfully in this amalgamation that took place left out the proper officer to assess this personal tax with the intention in their own minds in any way of doing away with this tax.

Mr. GROSVENOR. But they must have found out that it did when they found that no taxes were being assessed.

Mr. MORRELL. I presume they have found it out.

Mr. GROSVENOR. And they waited twenty years or upward while they did not complain about it, and they are now opposing revesting the machinery with activity.

Mr. MORRELL. I do not think the Commissioners are opposed to it. I would like to read from this report of the hearings before the House Committee on Appropriations. In that report the Commissioners say that they are in favor of this tax.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may print in the RECORD as a part of my remarks a portion of the hearings before the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations on the District appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Mr. McCLEARY. The Commissioners have kindly come this morning to make a general statement of the plans and methods of the revision which they have been laboring on for some time, and we are ready to hear them.

Mr. MACFARLAND. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, may I ask leave to present first, briefly, a general statement as to our financial situation, so that it may be a matter of record?

The present financial situation of the District of Columbia, which now faces an estimated deficiency in revenue on June 30, 1902, of at least $1,491,365.55, is due to the fact that the revenues of the District of Columbia for over ten years have been continuously diverted by Congress from the general expenses of the District to extraordinary expenditures, or extraordinary projects of improvement. The District had a surplus at the beginning of every fiscal year from July 1, 1889, to and including July 1, 1900, varying from $83,767.19 to $917,581.91, except on July 1, 1892, when there was a deficiency of $5,088.04, caused by extraordinary expenditures taken from the District revenues. In the period referred to $5,383,589.20 was taken from the general revenues for extraordinary expenditures. Of this amount, the sum of $1,426,777.12 was taken exclusively from District revenues to pay for the purchase of land for street extension, and the sum of $227,578.50 was taken exclusively from District revenues for miscellaneous purposes.

Besides these, large amounts, which of themselves are more than twice as large as the deficit in the revenues on the 1st of July, 1901, when the consequences of this method of appropriation became conspicuous.

Besides these amounts, $1,881,760.54 was taken for increasing the water supply; $1,120,473.04 in carrying out the sewage disposal plan, and $727,000 for the purchase of Rock Creek Park and the National Zoological Park, in each case, of course, to meet the one-half of the expense which had been charged to the District. The enormous appropriation for increasing the water supply was taken from the general revenues instead of from the revenues of the water department, notwithstanding the provision in the act of July 5, 1884, for advances from the Treasury to be reimbursed from the water revenues in twenty-five annual installments, with interest at 3 per cent per annum upon the deferred payments. If Congress had adhered to the "half-and-half principle" of the organic act of 1878 in providing for the street-extension purchases instead of charging them wholly to the District revenues, leaving the District to recover later what it could under the head of assessments for benefits, or if it had adhered to the provision of the act of July 5, 1884, in providing for the increase of the water supply, we should be facing a large surplus instead of a large deficit.

The Commissioners brought the financial condition of the District to the attention of Congress at the last session, with the recommendation that Congress should provide the necessary funds by general legislation for extraordinary expenditures and to meet the impending deficiency, so as to leave the current revenues of the District free for the current needs of the District government. The principle presented was that here, as elsewhere, all extraordinary expenditures should be especially provided for by anticipating in some way the revenues of the future, which would, presumably, share the benefit of the extraordinary projects. Congress accepted the recommendation of the Commissioners, and provided for the present fiscal year advances from the Treasury, to be repaid out of the revenues of the District, with interest at 2 per cent—these advances covering also the deficit in District revenues on July 1, 1901, which amounted to $716,155.38.

This provision, however, was but a makeshift. The time has come when Congress, it is believed, is ready to make a permanent arrangement adequate to the demands of the situation. It is obvious that it must be done by providing in some way for the anticipation of District revenues sufficiently to meet extraordinary expenditures without interfering with the current needs. This can be done, the Commissioners believe, most wisely either by continuing the advances from the Treasury, or by authorizing an issue of bonds to cover the District's obligations in the matter of these extraordinary expenditures.

The Commissioners understand perfectly, of course, that the legislation for this purpose must be matured by the Committees on the District of Columbia, and that the Committee on Appropiations has taken the ground that it can only appropriate or recommend appropriations to the amount of the estimated revenues. It is necessary, however, that this matter should be brought to the attention of the Committee on Appropriations, with the statement that the Committees on the District of Columbia are preparing to bring forward legislation designed to meet the need it presents. Knowledge of this fact makes it proper for the Commissioners to present, and for the Committee on Appropriations to consider in connection with the appropriation of the estimated current revenues, the necessities of the regular budget.

In presenting their estimates to Congress the Commissioners therefore desire to distinguish clearly between the items which should come under the head of extraordinary expenditures, and which, therefore, should be provided for in an extraordinary manner, and those which come under the head of ordinary expenditures and should be provided for out of the ordinary revenues. It would be manifestly improper, for example, for the Commissioners to recommend a cut of a million dollars in the appropriations for the regular District services, which would practically stop the wheels of the District government, in order to provide out of the current revenues of next year for the continuation of work on the filtration plant. Therefore the Commissioners, in complying with the courteous request of the subcommittee on Appropriations to point out the items in the estimates which can best be omitted or reduced, so as to bring the total sum within the estimate of revenue made by the Secretary of the Treasury, began unhesitatingly by picking out items for extraordinary projects of improvement to be set aside for consideration later on, when provision shall have been made by general legislation for such expenditures.

Even after doing this the Commissioners, in order to meet the subcommittee's wishes, have had to select a large number of items necessary for the ordinary improvement of the District of Columbia and to meet the ordinary growth in its current demands. The diversion of the District surplus to the extraordinary expenditures has prevented the District from receiving annually that increase in its regular appropriations which its natural growth has required, and it has, therefore, suffered in many of the departments of its work. If Congress had applied this money to current needs, appropriating, according to the spirit of the organic act, dollar for dollar from the National Treasury, the District services could have been properly kept up and the current needs of the District would not be so much in arrears as they now are.

Revenue estimate, District of Columbia, 1902.

Deficiency in the revenues of the District of Columbia June 30, 1901, in the event that the appropriations for the fiscal year 1901 are entirely expended, as follows:
On account of street extensions	[a]$298,732.64
On account of general expenses	417,422.74
		$716,155.38
NOTE.—The amount of the actual deficiency as shown by the advances was but $220,182.57.
Payments on account of street extensions to December 1, 1901, fiscal year 1902		[a]451,325.46
Appropriations chargeable to the revenues of the fiscal year 1902.		4,108,148.97
Total		5,275,629.81
Revenue, fiscal year 1902, based on the assessor's addition of the tax ledgers, and the estimated collection on account of miscellaneous items		3,784,264.26
Deficiency in revenue June 30, 1902, estimated		1,491,365.55

[a]NOTE 1.—The foregoing deficiency of $1,491,365.55 embraces [a]$750,058.10 advanced on account of street extensions, as provided for by the act of February 11, 1901.

NOTE 2.—The deficiency of June 30, 1902, may be increased by the following items:

(1) Appropriation for highway bridge across the Potomac River; District's one-half, $282,250.

(2) Extension of streets, etc., Sixteenth street, award now pending, charged wholly to the revenues, $729,952.29.

(3) Deficiency appropriations during the fiscal year 1902.

(4) Immediately available appropriations, fiscal years 1902, 1903.

Estimate of revenue by the Treasury Department, fiscal year 1903	$3,750,000.00
Commissioners' estimates of appropriations, fiscal year 1903, $10,441,481.97, one-half of which, payable from District revenue, is	5,220,740.98

The committee will understand from what has been said the method which the Commissioners took in regard to the revision of the estimates. Of course it is unnecessary to say that the Commissioners do not desire the omission or reduction of any item. Our estimates were made carefully. They were, of course, not the estimates submitted to us in the first place by our subordinates, but were cut down very considerably in order that they might come within reasonable bounds; but at the same time, as I have said before, the neglect of current needs in past years has made it imperatively necessary that we should ask for larger things than might have otherwise been necessary. The constant diversion in recent years of District funds from what we believe to have been the purposes for which they ought to have been used has prevented the District from receiving what is needed for current improvements and enlargements.

The gentlemen of the committee have in printed form, I believe, the revised estimates, but we have here a summarized statement of them all, showing where the estimates can be cut $2,947,431, which might be summed up as follows: Take the largest item first, which is under the head of the Washington Aqueduct filtration plant, $1,000,000, which we have cut out, for, while we believe it should be provided for, we think that it, with all other extraordinary projects, should be provided for by extraordinary means. The next largest item is for the high-pressure water service proposed for the business section of the city of Washington, $500,000; then the item for sewers, bringing them all together, either directly as a part of the sewage-disposal system or as an auxiliary to it, $705,000. Then in that same class comes the work of the Connecticut avenue bridge over Rock Creek, for which $100,000 was estimated.

Mr. MCCLEARY. Do you eliminate that?

Mr. MACFARLAND. Yes, sir; that is to say, with the suggestion that it is one of the extraordinary projects that ought to be deferred. Another large item which does not come under that head—there is where we stop so far as extraordinary projects are concerned—is for the compensation of clerks, overseers, inspectors, foremen, and other employees other than day laborers, who are employed under the authority of and paid from general appropriations and are engaged upon regular and continuous work, and whose services will be required during the fiscal year 1903, and who have been omitted from the revised estimates of the expenses for the support of the government of the District of Columbia for that fiscal year, $117,565. In making the estimates originally we estimated for per diem employees and left the lump sums out of which they had been paid as they were to meet the increases which ought to be made in the different services which they represented.

Now, we suggest that either this sum shall be deducted from the general appropriations, or if you prefer the system of paying the per diem men out of the general lump appropriations, simply continue the general appropriations as we have estimated. In either case $117,000 can be taken out. The other items are items in the ordinary expenses of the District of Columbia in each case suggested to us as preferably to be cut by the boards or departments under which they come. In the order in which they appear here we have streets; certain asphalt pavements which are desired on Seventh street between Pennsylvania avenue and E street and between G and K streets NW., $24,000; P street from Rock Creek to Twenty-ninth street, $11,500, and C street from New Jersey avenue to Fourth street NE., $17,500.

Next we come to the disposal of city refuse. There is a great desire—Commissioner Ross, who is in charge of the department, knows more about this than I do—for an extension of the service of the removal of ashes so as to take in miscellaneous refuse from hotels, apartment houses, markets, restaurants, and other business establishments, and we had hoped under that item of $35,000 to meet that desire, but under this stress we suggest the omission of that item. Here is a small item of a new hay scale for the Center Market, $450. The old one ought to be replaced, it having been in service a long time, but we leave that for another time. Under the electrical department there is an item for raising roof of fire-alarm headquarters, $4,500, which we suggest may be omitted. This is for the fire-alarm headquarters, where the men swelter in the summer nights, and days, too, for that matter, and where we believe a change should be made.

Under the head of public schools we very reluctantly suggest these omissions: For a public playground, $7,028; four-room building and site, seventh division, near Conduit road, $25,000; for reconstructing the Henry School, second division, for use of normal school, $22,500; for eight-room building, second division, in the vicinity of Henry School, $65,000 (those two are linked together) for purchase of lot to rear and west of Western High School, $7,000; purchase of lot adjoining Brent School, $8,300; purchase of parts of lot 5, square 796, for additional playground for Gidding School, $1,944. Gentlemen of the committee, I need not have to tell you that we do not wish to omit any of these.

Mr. BURKETT. Are not these on the same ground as the others—part of the permanent improvement?

Mr. MACFARLAND. They might be so considered; it might be proper to put all municipal buildings in the general scheme for extraordinary projects.

Mr. BURKETT. As I understand, you expect the District of Columbia Committee to bring a proposition for a bonded system or something of the kind to care for these things?

Mr. MACFARLAND. Yes, sir; I think there is no doubt, from the conferences we have had informally with Senator MCMILLAN and Mr. BABCOCK, chairmen of the two committees, that a scheme will be provided for all extraordinary projects and improvements, but what shape it will take we can not yet tell. Senator MCMILLAN has, I think, publicly, so there is no reason why we should not speak of it (and Mr. BABCOCK, I understand, takes the same position), stated that there should be an effective personal-tax law enacted in the District of Columbia which would provide additional revenue, and that may be one of the things which they will bring forward; but whether this is so or not, provision will have to be made toward anticipating even that revenue, and that we understand will be done. Both of those gentlemen believe their committees will be ready to do it. I may say, at the request of Senator MCMILLAN, the assessor of the District has drafted the outline of a personal-tax law which will be effective, our former tax law having been within the last few weeks put on trial and within the last few days practically declared invalid by our supreme court of the District.

Mr. MOODY. It has been declared invalid?

Mr. MACFARLAND. Yes, sir; on the ground that a necessary cog in the machinery of assessment was lacking.

Mr. MOODY. Is that opinion printed?

Mr. ROSS. It has been printed, and I will send you a copy.

Mr. MOODY. I would like to have it.

Mr. MACFARLAND. Last summer the assessor of the District made an assessment of personal property in a large number of cases, especially in order to bring this matter before the court. It was on one of these assessments that the case was tried. It was very fully discussed and so fully covered by the decision that the Commissioners thought it not worth while to take an appeal, for it was very evident to us, and especially Commissioner Ross, the legal member of the board, that it would not be worth while to take an appeal. So that is the situation as far as that is concerned.

Mr. BENTON. Can such a tax law be of service to the District this year?

Mr. MACFARLAND. No, sir.

Mr. MOODY. You assess taxes on the 1st of May?

Mr. ROSS. They are assessed in the summer, between July and September.

Mr. MOODY. But are they assessed as of the 1st of May?

Mr. ROSS. The taxes are payable in the latter part of May.

Mr. MCCLEARY. Is there not a tax date at which the value is considered?

Mr. ROSS. My impression is under the old law it was during the summer months—that they are assessed between July and September.

Mr. MCCLEARY. The actual assessment, but it must refer to some tax date, because a man may have changed his property from one place to another.

Mr. MOODY. In our State the assessors begin their work the 1st of May and continue until the 1st of September, when the tax bills are sent out, but the date selected as the day of assessment is the 1st of May, and that of course has to be so in order to determine the question of residence.

Mr. MACFARLAND. I had understood that was the date.

Mr. MOODY. Of course it would not be possible to do anything until the taxes of the next fiscal year.

Mr. MACFARLAND. Yes; and I think the gentleman will have to consider for the next fiscal year some extraordinary means must be provided. It is perfectly evident from the statement of our financial situation that we put before you the estimated deficiency on July 1 next is $1,491,365.55 without counting the possible payments for the awards for damages on Sixteenth street, for the purchase of land for the extension of Sixteenth street, which is $729,932.29, and of course without counting the deficiency appropriations which may be made in this fiscal year and any appropriation which might be made for the highway bridge across the Potomac River. I do not believe this is likely, because the board of Army engineers has reported that the project must be revised and a larger estimate of cost must be made, so I take it we will not be called upon for our half of that. Possibly our proportion of $150,000 a year of the amount provided last year for the Baltimore and Ohio terminal may be required. It was not required the 1st of last July, but simply passed over, and therefore I presume on the 1st of next July we will be in debt $300,000 under that act.

Now, if you will allow me, I will go on with these items and finish them. Under the head of police department we suggest the omission of the item for the erection of a station house and stable in southeast Washington, on site of the present fifth precinct, $30,000. That is a matter we have brought to the attention of Congress frequently. It is very much needed; but if we must cut, this seems to be the thing we can best spare in regard to buildings. Also, the item for rent of building to be occupied temporarily during the construction of the new fifth precinct station, $900, and also—and this is a thing that we give up most reluctantly—25 policemen, class 2, $27,000.

Now we come to the fire department. This is especially interesting to me, because it is immediately under my care and has been unquestionably neglected by Congress in the past—for example, in its pay, which is below normal, because in these years when we have been paying out of our revenues these large sums it has not been kept up.

Mr. BURKETT. You did not take out the new police station here?

Mr. MACFARLAND. Yes; that is $30,000.

Mr. BURKETT. I thought that was the southeast one; have you not got in here an item for a new police-court building?

Mr. MACFARLAND. Simply for the plans for that; that does not come under the police department. However, we make these suggestions as to the fire department——

Mr. MCCLEARY. I must confess, after witnessing the splendid display you gentlemen made of the fire department a week or ten days ago, I was impressed with the efficiency rather than the deficiency of that department.

Mr. MACFARLAND. It is very efficient for its size, but it is very deficient in comparison with the extent of the territory it has to cover. Later on I shall be very glad to bring up a map which we have, which shows the distribution of these companies and how very meager the service is compared with the 70 square miles it has to cover. You gentlemen must remember that this territory is unusually large. In this publication of Col. Carroll D. Wright, the September (1890) bulletin of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, which is very instructive in some points, giving the comparative statistics of municipalities of 30,000 population, including the area of the different municipalities, the District here, or rather what is called the city of Washington, which extends all over the District, is very much larger——

Mr. MCCLEARY. What publication is that?

Mr. MACFARLAND. It is the September bulletin of the Bureau of Labor Statistics. Congress in 1898 directed the Commissioner of Labor Statistics to furnish each year the comparative statistics of the municipalities of over 30,000 inhabitants, and for the last three years he has done that.

Mr. MOODY. Does that include indebtedness, rate of taxation, and all points of comparison?

Mr. MACFARLAND. It contains everything; it is very comprehensive and very interesting, and as I have studied it it puts the facts in a very favorable light for the District of Columbia.

Mr. McCLEARY. It is an arsenal for you?

Mr. MACFARLAND. Yes; I think it could be used that way.

Mr. McCLEARY. People who rest their contention on rock proof may fear no trouble.

Mr. MACFARLAND. I think we have nothing to fear. The items of the fire department we suggest may be deferred are: First, increases in pay and increase in amount of pay for proposed new companies now to be omitted, $80,040; house and site, southwest Washington, $25,000; house and site, northwest $30,000; house and site, northeast, $25,000; house etc., chemical engine at Good Hope, $15,000; school for fire department, $5,000——

Mr. McCLEARY. What is that?

Mr. MACFARLAND. A practice school, such as they have in New York and other cities, where the raw recruits are given actual practice before they go into active service. It would be a small building especially fitted up for the purpose, and they would be put through a course there which would prepare them for their duties. The next item is three engines, $15,000, for the three new houses; three combination engines, $5,400; one chemical engine, $2,500; one truck, $3,500; net reduction miscellaneous items, $8,000, making a total of $214,440. Now, health department, purchase of site for isolation buildings, $10,000; erection and equipment of isolation buildings, $10,000. These buildings are now rented, and this is to take the place of them. Under the head of care of the insane at the Government Hospital for the Insane—that is, the insane of the District who are boarded there—we suggest the possible omission of $65,000, which is the additional amount that the institution and the Secretary of the Interior, who has the administration of it, desire now to collect on District patients. It has been claimed now that the District has been paying too little for the maintenance of its patients there and that it ought to pay $65,000, and we submitted that estimate in the estimates of the board of charities practically at the request of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. McCLEARY. And you submitted it as a separate item?

Mr. MACFARLAND. Yes, sir; with the estimates of the board of charities; but the present arrangement has gone on for a number of years, and it might seem in the wisdom of Congress it might go on for another year. We simply suggest that because——

Mr. McCLEARY. That is one of the things you think you can dispense with without prejudice?

Mr. MACFARLAND. In other words, we have no great interest in it.

Mr. BURKETT. I do not quite understand where you make the saving; you say the District does not pay for the keeping of the insane?

Mr. MACFARLAND. The District has been paying a certain amount for the support of the insane at the Government Hospital for the Insane. Now, the new superintendent has suggested to the Secretary of the Interior that we have not paid enough and that we ought to pay more.

Mr. BURKETT. What have you been paying it out of—the general fund?

Mr. MACFARLAND. No, sir; from the appropriation each year of so much for the support of the District insane in the Government Hospital for the Insane. It is our only insane asylum, and all the indigent insane of the District of Columbia must go there.

Mr. BURKETT. It is one-half paid out of the Government funds and half out of the District fund?

Mr. MACFARLAND. Yes, sir. We pay board for these people, but the Government pays half of this and we pay half of it.

Mr. BURKETT. Instead of making the District stand it you make the Government stand it, and if their pay is $65,000 short the Government can stand that another year?

Mr. MACFARLAND. It has been going on for years and it may be that it is a proper charge. I do not remember the details of the estimate on their part, but I think they claim sufficient attention was not given to working out the actual cost before.

Mr. McCLEARY. In other words, this omission you contemplate with complacency?

Mr. MACFARLAND. Yes, sir; it is the only one on which we look in that way. Gentlemen will see we have not hesitated to apply the knife to the estimates for our current needs. We have done so in every case on the advice of the boards and department chiefs under us. In other words, besides the large projects, we found it necessary in order to come within the desire of this committee to cut very considerably our——

Mr. MOODY. Your estimates you have brought down within the possibilities of appropriation?

Mr. MACFARLAND. Within $7,500,000, which was the estimate of the Secretary of the Treasury for the revenues for the next year, and which may or may not turn out to be correct. For example, the assessor of the District of Columbia says if Congress should pass a bill which has been introduced allowing the payment of arrears of taxes with only 6 per cent penalty, he believes that something like $500,000 would be paid in next year. That of course would be in addition to any estimate made heretofore of what the revenues would be. Then, gentlemen must remember, if we had this money which was diverted in these extraordinary expenditures we should have a very large surplus on which we could call, or rather that we wish it had been spent from time to time in improvements, so we might not now have the difficulty which confronts us.

Here is a statement in detail of the surplus or deficit at the beginning of each fiscal year from July 1, 1889, to December 1, 1901, and extraordinary expenditures for the same periods paid wholly or in part from District revenues, which I desire to submit:

NOTE 1.—It is apparent from the foregoing statement that during the period covered thereby the revenues of the District were more than sufficient for ordinary demands, and that the present shortage is due to summary drafts for expenditures extraordinary both in purpose and amount.

The sum of $1,426,777.12 for street extensions was paid wholly from District revenues, and the further sum of $1,881,760.54 for increasing the water supply was paid out of the general fund instead of being charged against the revenues of the water department. Leaving out of the account, however, the amount thus paid for street extensions and the equitable liability of the Government for one-half thereof, if the sums making the aggregate of $1,881,760.54, expended for increasing the water supply, had been advanced by the Treasury and reimbursed from the water fund in 25 annual installments, the arrangement would have been fair to the United States, and the District would show a large surplus instead of a deficit in its revenues.

NOTE 2.—In addition to the foregoing there have been expended on account of the sewage-disposal plan $520,473.04 for completed work, and in round numbers $630,000 for work which is still in progress; total $1,120,473.04.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland.

The question was taken, and the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the amendment "all property assessed by such assessors shall be assessed under uniform rules and according to true value."

Mr. McDERMOTT. Mr. Chairman, my attention has been called to the discrepancy in the assessments in this city. In some cases property is assessed at 100, in other cases at 110, and in other cases at 60, at 30, and even 20 per cent of its true value. The gentleman from Tennessee called my attention yesterday, as an offset to a case I had illustrated with, to a case where the assessed value of the property was about 20 per cent of what it was sold for at a private sale. Of course what property brings at condemnation or public sale affords little criterion for its true value, but while the statute provides that the assessors shall assess according to value, and, theoretically, it is assessed at 100 per cent, yet we have had the statement made several times that it is assessed at 65 per cent. The truth is that there is no rule of valuation in the District of Columbia. There should be a rule. I know that wherever you elect your assessors, men who have voted against the assessors on election day are liable to find their property suddenly enhanced in value. Here we appoint the assessors.

What I want is this: You have an appeal here the same as you have in any other municipality, and that appeal is on the value of the piece of property that is brought before the commissioners. The commissioners of appeal will require you to prove that your property is assessed for more than 100 per cent. They do not have before them the entire assessment, and they do not deal equitably with the whole assessment, but with that individual property owner and the piece that he complains of. What I want is that they shall act, in their investigation, upon the question, Is all the property assessed according to the rule? What is that rule? To-day there is none. If you are assessing the real estate at 65 per cent of its market value, well and good. It is no matter whether you assess the property at 10, 20, or 60 per cent, if you assess all alike.

Mr. BURKETT. What does the gentleman understand that a board of equalization is for, if it is not for that very purpose?

Mr. McDERMOTT. It is absolutely impossible for a board of equalization to equalize taxes on individual pieces of property. What they may deal with is sections. You have a county board of equalization——

Mr. BURKETT. The board of equalization may deal with every piece of property.

Mr. McDERMOTT. But I want them to deal with it under a rule.

Mr. BURKETT. The very word "equalization" provides that it shall be according to a rule. If two men own property alongside of each other and A is assessed for $6,000 and B is assessed for $5,000 and the property is presumed to be of the same value, A comes before the board of equalization and says, "My property is assessed $1,000 more than my neighbor, B, and it is worth the same amount."

Mr. McDERMOTT. That equalizes the taxes of those two men. But if the gentleman will study this question of taxation a little further he will find that right here is one of the great troubles of taxation in all sections of the country. When you have equalized the taxation of A's property and B's property, you have not equalized the taxation of A and B in relation to all the relatables in that district.

Mr. BURKETT. The business of the board of equalization is to equalize the taxation of all the property in that community where the owners make complaint.

Mr. McDERMOTT. I understand that; but they deal with specific cases. How many of such cases are there in your district? Take your own tax board of appeal. I venture to say that not one out of every thousand people who are taxed in your district appeal to that board.

Mr. BURKETT. Certainly not; but everyone who does appeal gets a hearing.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BENTON. Mr. Chairman, the law to which the amendment offered by the committee seeks to give virility affords an opportunity for an equalization of the assessed values of property. The board of assessment, after assessing the property, are required by law to give notice to the taxpayers interested, any of whom are entitled to come in and show that they have been unfairly dealt with by the assessors.

The amendment proposed to the committee amendment by the gentleman from New Jersey would be a fruitful source of litigation. Men may come in continually and say, "My property is assessed higher than its true value, while that of my neighbor is assessed below its true value." Thus there will be created a hotbed of litigation. I hope the amendment to the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Let me ask the gentleman a question. Suppose that the property of A in the city of Washington is assessed at 40 per cent of its market value, while the property of B in the same city is assessed at 80 per cent of its market value. What is the remedy of the man who thus suffers from having his property valued at a higher rate than that of his neighbor?

Mr. BENTON. He can come before the assessors and show the facts.

Mr. McDERMOTT. But what is the result of his doing so?

Mr. BENTON. If the assessors are honest they make an equalization between those two men.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Between A and B?

Mr. BENTON. They make an equalization as to all the people affected.

Mr. McDERMOTT. In order that that might be done there must be a review of the assessment of every single piece of property in the city of Washington.

Mr. BENTON. It is the duty of the board to make such an assessment.

Mr. McDERMOTT. That would be impossible.

Mr. BENTON. It is their duty to go over all the assessed property and see that no such inequalities exist.

Mr. McDERMOTT. My object in introducing this amendment was that there might be an equalization of all the property—to provide that this equalization be obtained in the first instance by the assessors making their assessment under uniform rules. Take the case of a man whose property we will suppose has been assessed at 20 per cent of the actual value. Suppose I, his neighbor, go and make complaint that my property has been assessed at 60 per cent of its actual value. What can the board of equalization do? Can they find out what all the property in the city of Washington has been assessed at and then undertake to equalize the whole assessment? That is an absolute impossibility. They may say, "Here is A's property assessed at 20 per cent of its value and B's property assessed at 60 per cent; we will strike an average and make the assessment in both cases 40 per cent." Will such a proceeding establish a rule of assessment? Absolutely, no. It will simply settle something in those individual cases; it establishes no rule of assessment.

Now, what I want is this: That the assessors when called before the board of equalization shall be able to say, "We assess property upon a uniform rule, at a certain percentage of the market value—say, at 65 per cent." Then every man whose property is assessed at over 65 per cent can come in and say, "Your rule has been violated. That is what I complain of; not that the particular property of A or B has been improperly assessed." If there is a uniform rule, the citizen will have the right to insist that the rule be uniformly followed. The want of conformity to a uniform rule in this respect is one of the troubles in this city, as it probably is in every other city. But unless you have a uniform rule, according to which all property is to be valued, every individual citizen is subject to the vagaries of the assessor.

The question being taken on Mr. McDERMOTT's amendment to the amendment, it was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. McCLEARY], a member of the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the last word. I do not feel called upon in any particular sense to rise here in defense of the Commissioners of this District; but there have been made one or two remarks in this discussion which, in my judgment, place those officials in a false light, and which I think ought not to be permitted to pass without notice. From some of the remarks made here this morning it might be inferred that the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are opposed to a personal-tax law, and were in some way endeavoring to prevent the passage of such a law. That is not the fact. On the contrary, they prepared a bill for making provision for such a tax, which bill I understand has been for some time pending before the Senate committee. Whether reported yet to the Senate I do not at this moment recall, but that bill has been under consideration by the committees of both Houses.

Mr. COWHERD. Is it not a fact that at least two members of the Board of Commissioners appeared before the committee last year, and that the president of the Board made a statement that they did not think personal property ought to be taxed in the District of Columbia.

Mr. MUDD. Well, I am not going back to ancient history. I am not now looking after last year's birds' nests. I know that these Commissioners have prepared a bill and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD] has been assisting in the consideration of that very bill prepared by those Commissioners this year and submitted to this Congress.

Further than that, Mr. Chairman, it would be supposed from the discussion here that these Commissioners had in some way connived at or given their approval of the abolition or destruction of the machinery by which this personal-tax law was intended to be put and kept in operation. That is far from being the fact. The truth is, and the whole of the truth is, that in 1878 the Board of Commissioners that were then in existence, by the abolition of some offices—not a very bad thing, I submit, to be done by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia—and by the consolidation of some offices took a step which Judge Clabaugh decided, less than a year ago, to have destroyed this machinery. These men acting at that time did not mean to destroy the machinery, because they went on in the exercise of the powers given under the bill which the machinery was to put in force, and it was not until about the latter part of last year that Judge Clabaugh's decision was rendered, when for the first time it was ascertained and judicially declared that the machinery was ineffective or did not exist.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Were they collecting a tax on personal property until about a year ago?

Mr. MUDD. Yes; up until about a year ago.

Mr. GROSVENOR. How much money was collected, we will say, for 1900 on personal property in this District?

Mr. MUDD. I am not contending that this act was carried out very vigorously or very successfully, but I am contending this, that the fact they did collect taxes shows that the Commissioners never intended by their act of consolidation to destroy the machinery which was intended to have collected the taxes.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Then the machinery was broken, and the Commissioners did not find it out.

Mr. MUDD. The machinery was broken about twenty-odd years ago before the present Commissioners were heard of as such, or were thought of as probable incumbents of the positions they now occupy.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Oh, well, the other Commissioners.

Mr. MUDD. Well, it would seem that the effect of the act done twenty years ago was to destroy that machinery, but that effect was not declared or known in this District until Judge Clabaugh's decision rendered less than a year ago.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Then I assume they were collecting taxes under it.

Mr. MUDD. They were.

Mr. GROSVENOR. To what extent?

Mr. MUDD. I do not know; I can not say that, but they were collecting taxes. So far, therefore, as it may appear to be the purpose to charge the present Commissioners with any manifestation of hostility to the enactment by this Congress of a personal assessment law, the charge would be absolutely groundless. It might be further stated also, as negativing the intimation that the Commissioners who were in office in 1878 meant to nullify the provisions of the law for the collection of personal taxes, that their act of consolidation of the offices of assessor and treasurer, which Judge Clabaugh held to destroy the necessary machinery for the collection of such taxes, had the same effect as to taxes on realty as upon those on personalty.

Now, it is not to be thought for a moment that these men or any other men in their position would deliberately take a proceeding that would end the collection of all taxes in the District of Columbia. Judge Clabaugh held that the act of Congress of 1892, amended by the act of 1894, repaired or replaced the machinery for the collection of taxes on realty, but omitted to do it with reference to the taxes on personalty. So that the defect in the status of the law, for the first time made manifest by this decision, would seem to be chargeable to Congress as much as, if not more than, to this old Board of Commissioners.

Now, one other thing. From the general tenor of the remarks of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BURKETT] yesterday they would seem to convey the impression that the Commissioners had subjected themselves to complaint and to criticism for requesting here an unreasonable expenditure in the face of the amount of revenue at their disposal, and this ought to be said in that connection, that the Commissioners of the District of Columbia in asking this year for, if I am not mistaken, some extraordinary expenditures expected the revenues to be provided outside of the usual channels and in an extraordinary way, and they have always represented, so far as I know—they certainly have to our committee—that if those expenditures were provided for they would expect Congress, and in the exercise of their duty and their legitimate functions under the law would ask Congress, to provide for the requisite additional revenue, either by a personal-taxation bill or by a further advance out of the National Treasury.

I make this statement because I think it ought to be made in justice to the District Commissioners. They have done their duty and nothing outside of their duty in this matter. They have recommended some extraordinary expenditures of pressing and urgent importance, in response to an almost universal popular demand. They have asked Congress to provide the extraordinary revenue to meet these requirements and suggested the means of doing so. It is for Congress to determine just what action it shall take.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. OLMSTED having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11353) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. BELLAMY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding after the last word of the committee amendment the following:

"Any person who shall be a bona fide resident of the District of Columbia and liable for the assessment for taxes and who shall, after having been notified in writing by the assessors, unlawfully and willfully refuse to return the schedule of his property as required by the act, being chapter 117 of the Statutes at Large, ratified March 3, 1897, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and punished by a fine of not less than $1 nor more than $1,000, in the discretion of the court, provided said notice shall be given at least ten days before the time for returning the said schedule shall expire."

Mr. BELLAMY. Now, Mr. Chairman, I am in hearty sympathy with the committee amendment, but unless there be a provision inserted in it, a compulsory provision, requiring the owner of personal property in the District of Columbia who owns no real estate and no tangible personal property, to return it, the committee amendment would be totally inefficient. It is a well-known fact, Mr. Chairman, that all through the United States there are citizens who have acquired either through personal exertion or by inheritence large sums of money in the places where they do actually reside, who fail to give in their taxes there because they claim they are residents of the District of Columbia.

I have seen in the papers from the town in which I live, this morning, where a resolution was yesterday introduced into the city council requiring the city attorney to see if there can not be devised some plan to cause the assessment of nearly $1,000,000 worth of personal property which escaped taxation in that town, by reason of certain residents flocking to other places and claiming to reside there, while they do business in, possess homes, and have all the habiliments of residents of that city. It is well known that these people, when they get to Washington, spend a day or two at a hotel, claim Washington as their residence, give in no property for taxation here, and none for taxation at their homes. There ought to be some machinery, some means to get at that class of citizens. Washington has really become the Mecca of the tax dodger, and there ought to be provided some plan of reaching those men who claim to reside here in order to escape taxation in their true homes and actual places of residence.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if this amendment is adopted it will be carrying out a provision similar to that which is contained in the laws of many of the States of the Union. I was informed this morning by my friend Governor POWERS, of Maine, that in that State if a man liable for personal-property taxes failed, after being notified to do so, to return his property for taxation within twelve days he is liable to be fined and jailed for a misdemeanor, and is only allowed to take the insolvent debtor's oath to escape the tax. That provision is similar to many that exist in other States in the Union, and I do not see why it should not exist here. It is as much the duty of a man to contribute to the expenses of his government by taxes as it is in time of war to serve his country in the army.

Mr. McDERMOTT. I wish to suggest to the gentleman that the most efficient means of providing for the case that he illustrates is to allow the assessor, in case no return is made, to assess the personal property at such sum as he may fix, and this prevents the delinquent who has not made his return from appealing from the amount so assessed. That was the original idea of the income-tax law during the war. It has been ingrafted upon the laws of many municipalities, and has been found excellent.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McDERMOTT. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the time of the gentleman be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. POWERS of Maine. I desire to make a suggestion. I think the gentleman did not exactly understand me. In the case of the personal tax in Maine, if, after twelve days' notice from the collector that the party should pay it, he does not do so, he is not fined, but is subject to arrest and commitment to jail, to be released therefrom by a disclosure under the poor debtors' act.

Mr. BELLAMY. So the provision that I have inserted in this amendment is even more liberal to the residents of the District than is the law of Maine to its residents. But to reply to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. McDERMOTT]. He says that the assessors can assess against the individual whom I have mentioned, the tax, with 50 per cent additional for the failure to return it, against any property that he may own. Now, I ask him, how is it possible for the assessor to ascertain what property that man owns, when it is invisible and intangible? And where do they find the property against which to assess the tax, much less the penalty of 50 per cent?

Mr. McDERMOTT. The law would make the estimate of the assessor beyond appeal, no matter what figure he fixes it at.

Mr. BELLAMY. From what will you collect it?

Mr. McDERMOTT. If the man has no property, there is no use in assessing him. You would collect it the same as you would any personal tax.

Mr. BELLAMY. But if the individual has no tangible personal or real property here?

Mr. McDERMOTT. Then you can not collect anything from him.

Mr. BELLAMY. The purpose of this amendment is to make that man return his taxable property, and if he does not do so to make him subject to a penalty. It is easy enough to get at the individual.

Suppose, for example, a man claims Washington as his home, and he is really a resident of North Carolina. Suppose he is from the city of Wilmington, from which I come, and claims he is a resident of Washington. You can easily find that he has not listed his taxes in Wilmington. If he has not then he is liable for his taxes here, and if he fails to return them here the assessor can have him indicted for a misdemeanor for failing to make a return. It is as much a part of his duty to bear the expense and the burdens of this Government as it is the duty of the man who has a little home and a little tangible visible property. He is better able generally to bear the expense, because of the value of his property, and I contend that an amendment of this kind is absolutely necessary to make this committee amendment effective, so as to get at the taxable personal property. No good citizen ought to object to such a statute, when it simply compels him to discharge an honest public duty to his country.

The system of taxation existing in this District is abominable. The very idea of having a rate of $1.50 on the $100 valuation, inflexible and unalterable! A just system would require first to find out the amount of the taxable property, then the amount of taxes desired to be raised and then make your levy of such a per cent as is necessary to raise the amount. And again, too, we have been informed that for twenty years in this District, although the law requires the levy to be made on real and personal property alike, that all stocks of goods, furnishings of hotels, and similar property has never been required to be given in by the taxpayer. A large department store in Washington having over $100,000 of stock does not pay a cent of ad valorem taxes. This is a great wrong and injustice to the owner of real estate.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois asked me a question a few minutes ago in regard to why the Commissioners had not, previous to the present day, made some effort to have an officer appointed to assess and collect this tax. I should like to read from the hearings before the subcommittee of the House Committee on Appropriations for 1900, on the collection of personal taxes:

Mr. ALLEN. Did you notice some remarks on this question in regard to the failure to collect taxes on personal property in the House on Saturday?

Mr. WIGHT. Yes, sir; I saw a reference thereto made by Mr. Moody.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Moody and Mr. COWHERD. Mr. COWHERD said that it had been stated to the District Committee that taxes were not collected on personal property because the District did not have any use for the money.

And that is probably the reason why the commissioners did not bring in a bill to provide for the officer to collect this personal tax, simply for the reason that the District did not need the money at that time. The Chairman goes on:

The CHAIRMAN. That was a year or two ago, when you were flush.

Mr. ROSS. We have recently had a commission to revise the whole subject of taxation, and the Commissioners are now considering that revision, which will make the collection of taxes on personal property much more complete than heretofore. There have been defects in that law.

The CHAIRMAN. Are the defects in the law or in the machinery?

Mr. ROSS. In the law itself.

The CHAIRMAN. The present machinery is sufficient to collect the taxes if the assessment was made, is it not?

Mr. ROSS. It will be difficult to enforce the collection of them.

Mr. BENTON. For what reason?

The CHAIRMAN. To enforce the collection or the assessment?

Mr. ROSS. The collection. I would like to have the assessor state in regard to that.

Mr. H. H. DARNEILLE (assessor, District of Columbia). The defects in the law are that, as it stands to-day, it requires a board of assessors, which is not in existence, to prepare and have printed blanks and schedules and publish in the newspapers a certain number of times information as to those notices. That board being out of existence, if we were to go into court to prosecute a delinquent the court would throw the case out on that ground alone.

Mr. BENTON. That is when you try to enforce collections?

Mr. DARNEILLE. Yes; and in the collections it is equally as bad.

Mr. MORRELL. Now, Mr. Chairman, that is just exactly the point.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Does the gentleman think that the Commissioners did not have intelligence enough to go on and levy the assessment and then come for the confirmatory act of Congress? That is what would be done, it seems to me, by any other body where they were authorized to tax—first to make the levy, and then furnish the office to cure the defect in the mere matter of procedure.

Mr. MORRELL. I am going on to show that. Immediately after this hearing, in 1900, Mr. Ross prepared a stringent personal tax bill, which was carried, according to Mr. Darneille's statement to me, to General Grout, chairman of the subcommittee of the Committee of the District of Columbia. What came of that I do not know, but this shows that the Commissioners, instead of being opposed to such a bill in 1900, prepared a bill and had the bill taken by the assessor of the District to the chairman of the subcommittee. That was in 1900. In January 29 of this year——

Mr. COWHERD. If the gentleman will permit me, I will state that there was a change in the Commissioners, and that bill never was perfected.

Mr. MORRELL. The bill was prepared by the Commissioners.

Mr. COWHERD. The bill was prepared by the Commissioners, but about that time there was a change in the Board of Commissioners; one of the Commissioners went out and another Commissioner came in, and the bill was withdrawn and never again presented. Afterwards I got a copy of it from a newspaper.

Mr. MORRELL. My information was that the bill was drawn by Commissioner Ross and carried by Mr. Darneille personally to the chairman of the committee, which showed conclusively in the year 1900 the Commissioners were interested in having such a law.

Mr. COWHERD. The information I am trying to give the gentleman—and I got it from the clerk of the District, as I remember, when I wanted to see what had become of that bill—is this: I was told that it had been withdrawn on account of the fact that there had been a change in the personnel of the Commissioners, and I got a copy from the newspapers.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask leave to print a letter of January 29, 1902, addressed to the Hon. JAMES MCMILLAN, chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia of the Senate, and signed by Hon. H. B. F. Macfarland, in which he states his views in regard to the matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing the letter which he has referred to.

Mr. BENTON. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BENTON. I move that all debate close on the amendment of the committee.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Minnesota representing the Committee on Appropriations.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

That hereafter when differences arise in the rendition, examination, or settlement of the accounts of the disbursing officer of the District of Columbia which would seem to render necessary the suspension or disallowance of any item in said accounts, the Treasury Auditor shall notify the auditor of the District of Columbia, who shall be authorized to present in explanation such facts or arguments as may, in his opinion, tend to the prevention or removal of such suspension or disallowance. When the auditor of the District of Columbia is in doubt as to the legality of an account or voucher for payment upon which he is required to act, he may apply to the Comptroller of the Treasury for a decision upon the question involved, and that officer shall render the same, and the decision so rendered shall govern the accounting officers of the Treasury in subsequently passing upon the account aforesaid. The auditor of the District of Columbia shall continue to prepare and countersign all checks issued by the disbursing officer, and no check involving the disbursement of public moneys by the disbursing officer shall be valid unless countersigned by the auditor of the District of Columbia.

Mr. PEARRE. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order upon that paragraph that it is new legislation and therefore not in order upon a general appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For attorney's office: For attorney, $4,500; first assistant attorney, $2,500; second assistant attorney, $1,600; special assistant attorney, $1,600; law clerk, $1,200; stenographer, $720; messenger, $600; in all, $12,720.

Mr. McCLEARY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 6, in line 13, strike out the word "attorneys" and insert in lieu thereof "city solicitor;" and in lines 13, 14, 15, and 16 strike out the word "attorney" wherever it occurs and insert in lieu thereof the words "city solicitor."

Mr. McCLEARY. This is simply to have the title of this office conform to the code.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the several amendments offered by the gentleman from Minnesota will be considered together. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered. The question is on the adoption of the amendments offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The amendments were agreed to.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

For rent of District offices, $9,000.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend in line 22, page 13, by striking out the word "nine" and inserting the word "ten," and I would like to have the Clerk read the two letters I send to the desk in my time.

The Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 4, 1902.

The honorable COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

GENTLEMEN: My duty, as President of National Capital Investment Company of the District of Columbia, compels me to write plainly respecting the status of our building which you have occupied wholly since March 1895, with a lease beginning July 1, 1895.

Colonel Ross, who was Commissioner at that time, will remember that the health, police, fire, street sweeping, charities, and Board of Children's Guardians departments were already in our building.

On February 26, 1895, you asked us to vacate all the other tenants and give your executive offices rent free to July 1. We completed the construction of the east side of building, making many changes to suit your purposes, constructed many more windows and 16 additional water closets, at an additional cost of $4,500. We were obliged to pay $1,500 for the use of side lot for lighting purposes. We made the elevators and steam service practically new before your entry. We sustained heavy loss by reason of other tenants ejected.

There was no question as to your ability to pay $10,000 yearly rental, and the deficiency then contemplated was expressly stated as only for the year 1895, until the Commissioners could secure the balance. The rent demanded by us was $12,000 for this fireproof building with nearly 70,000 feet of floor space, and the $10,000 agreed upon was a compromise. Let me be frank to say that had there then been any doubt as to your ability to secure the $10,000 yearly rental we would not have been willing to make the lease.

We wish to thank the honorable Commissioners for their unfailing courtesy in presenting this claim yearly to Congress, as by the lease they are required to do, and we most respectfully insist that we have paid our taxes, low as they are as compared with the cost of construction, and we have complied with both the letter and spirit of the lease in anticipating necessary repairs.

Gentlemen, if you can not correct the past deficiency by an appropriation now you should at least insist upon the current appropriation of $10,000 rental hereafter called for in lease.

Our people have expended in construction, changes, and charges $168,057.66, but we can not sell without great loss at present rental, nor can we pay such a dividend to our 85 stockholders as other like property in this city pays

The low rate of assessment is a partial compensation in the taxes paid, but not by our solicitation. You will acknowledge that the property has lost part of its value by reason of the severe usage of the large number of citizens who daily attend at the offices, and somebody will have to pay a large sum to restore the property to its proper condition when you vacate.

We do not appeal to you as mendicants asking for your bounty, but as citizens and taxpayers, who know the honorable Commissioners are controlled by the Golden Rule of justice to all and partiality to none.

We will welcome the day when you can secure a suitable municipal building upon the City Hall site, the center of business and population, and stand ready to contribute our time and money with you to secure this end.

Very respectfully,

THE NATIONAL CAPITAL INVESTMENT CO.,
By S. H. WALKER, President.

NATIONAL CAPITAL INVESTMENT COMPANY OF WASHINGTON CITY, D. C.,
OFFICE, No. 458 LOUISIANA AVENUE,
Washington, D. C., February 6, 1902.

Hon. JOHN W. ROSS,
Commissioner, District of Columbia.

DEAR SIR: When the National Capital Investment Company rented to the District the buildings designated as 462, 464, and 466 Louisiana avenue, the rent was fixed at $10,000 per annum. At that time, however, the offices of the government were housed in different buildings, for which the aggregate appropriation was not quite $9,000.

The Investment Company offered to take the amount appropriated provided the Commissioners would, in their next estimates, ask for the sum of $10,000 per annum, agreed upon between the company and the Commissioners as a reasonable rental.

In accordance with this understanding the Commissioners, at the ensuing session of Congress, asked for an appropriation of $10,000 per annum, but that body allowed only $9,000. At every subsequent session Congress has been asked, as a simple matter of justice, to appropriate in accordance with the agreement aforesaid, but has so far taken no action to this end.

The Investment Company intends to present the matter to the Committees on Appropriations, and in order to a perfect understanding of the question at issue, desire you to state, as the surviving member of the board which selected and first rented the building, whether or not the foregoing statement is in accordance with the facts.

Very respectfully,

NATIONAL CAPITAL INVESTMENT CO.,
By S. H. WALKER, President.

On the back of the last letter was the following indorsement:

FEBRUARY 7, 1902.

According to my recollection and belief the facts herein stated are substantially correct.

JOHN W. ROSS, Commissioner.

Mr. McCLEARY. Mr. Chairman, some five or six years ago the various offices of the District were housed in different buildings. About 1897 they were gathered into the building in question. The aggregate of all the rent paid in the separate buildings was about $8,000. The owners of this building in question have been heard in person and by attorney by the committee. The judgment of the committee is that $9,000 is all that it is authorized to recommend, and therefore we hope that the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Will not the gentleman concede that the contract was to pay $10,000?

Mr. McCLEARY. No, sir.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. I understand that is the fact, but that you have always pleaded poverty.

Mr. McCLEARY. The law forbids the Commissioners to make any contract exceeding an appropriation.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. That is not the question. I submit that the Commissioners did agree to pay $10,000.

Mr. McCLEARY. The Commissioners agreed to recommend to the committee that $10,000 be appropriated, and they did so recommend, but, in the judgment of the committee, that sum was not proper to be paid.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the gentleman from Michigan will be permitted to withdraw his amendment.

There was no objection.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

Sprinkling, sweeping, and cleaning: For sprinkling, sweeping, and cleaning streets, avenues, alleys, and suburban streets, including livery of horses, and necessary incidental expenses, and work done under existing contracts, as well as hand work done under the immediate direction of the Commissioners without contract: Provided, That whenever it shall appear to the Commissioners that said latter work can not be done under their immediate direction at 19 cents or less per thousand square yards, in accordance with the specifications under which the same was last advertised for bids, it shall at once be their duty to advertise to let said work under said specifications to the lowest responsible bidder, and if the same can not be procured to be done at a price not exceeding 20 cents per thousand square yards, they may continue to do said work under their immediate direction, in accordance with said specifications; $190,000, and the Commissioners shall so apportion this appropriation as to prevent a deficiency therein.

Mr. McCLEARY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 20, line 17, strike out the words "livery of horses" and insert in lieu thereof the words "purchase, maintenance, and livery of horses, purchase, maintenance, and repair of wagons and harnesses."

The question was considered, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

For electric arc lighting, including necessary inspection, and for extensions of such service, not exceeding $65,000: Provided, That not more than $72 per annum shall be paid for any electric arc light burning from fifteen minutes after sunset to forty-five minutes before sunrise, and operated wholly by means of underground wire; and each arc light shall be of not less than 1,000 actual candlepower, and no part of this appropriation shall be used for electric lighting by means of wires that may exist on or over any of the streets or avenues of the city of Washington: Provided, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to permit the erection of poles and the stringing of overhead wires thereon outside of the fire limits and east of Rock Creek for electric lighting purposes only.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the proviso beginning on line 8, to the end of line 12, on page 26. It is new legislation and never has been authorized by law.

Mr. McCLEARY. Mr. Chairman, the point of order is conceded.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. McCLEARY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 25, lines 23 and 24, strike out the words "sixty-five thousand" and insert the words "sixty-six thousand six hundred and fifty-six."

The question was considered, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

For operation, maintenance, and repair of the aqueduct and its accessories, including Conduit road, the new reservoir, and Washington Aqueduct tunnel, $33,000.

Toward establishing a slow sand filtration plant, and for each and every purpose connected therewith, including the preparation of plans, and for the purchase of such scientific books and periodicals as may be approved by the Secretary of War, $600,000, to be available immediately and until expended: Provided, That a contract or contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such material and work as may be necessary for prosecuting the work, or the materials may be purchased and work done otherwise than by contract, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $2,768,405, exclusive of the amount herein and heretofore appropriated.

Mr. McCLEARY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 27, line 4, strike out the words "exclusive of" and insert in lieu thereof the words "in including."

The question was considered, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee to give the Committee of the Whole House a little information about this water business. I observe that somebody has bought 34 acres of land to establish a filtration plant, at the rate of $18,000 an acre. And they propose to spend $2,069,000 more in establishing what they call a sand filtration plant for the water. I will agree that the water needs filtering, because there is no place on the top of the civilized earth where the water is so bad so many days in the year as it is in the city of Washington. In quality and consistency it is about like good consommé soup, and if cleanliness is akin to godliness we have mighty little godliness in the city of Washington.

I observe from the testimony of Colonel Miller, the man who seems to have everything in charge and who makes all the contracts, that he is furnishing 200 gallons of water per capita per day to the people of this District. That is over 5 barrels to every inhabitant, big and little, white, black, and copper colored, including pickaninnies.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. A large part of it is mud.

Mr. PALMER. Yes; but they do not charge anything extra for the mud, and it is good mud, part of the sacred soil of Virginia. It would be curious to know what becomes of 200 gallons of water a day for every inhabitant in the District of Columbia. My esteemed colleague [Mr. LIVINGSTON] says that he does not get over a barrel a day in his house; that they do not use over a barrel a day, and they have six people in it; so that he does not get by 29 barrels what he is actually entitled to. What becomes of 200 gallons a day? How are they going to use $2,069,000 on filtrating that amount of water—60,000,000 gallons? Twenty-four filter beds, costing $10,000 apiece, would do the business, because you can filter 2,500,000 gallons of water through an acre of ground, and do it well.

Mr. NEWLANDS. If the gentleman will permit me a moment, I think I can answer his question regarding the waste of water in this city.

Mr. PALMER. I shall be very glad to hear the gentleman. I know he is an expert on the subject of irrigation.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. Chairman, in no city in the United States is there such tremendous waste of water as in Washington. I am somewhat familiar with waterworks, for in my early days I was counsel of the Spring Valley Waterworks, a private corporation that furnished water to the city of San Francisco. There the per capita consumption was about 50 gallons per day. Here, as has been stated, it is about 200 gallons. In Liverpool the consumption is only about 20 gallons per day per head.

Now, a great many years ago an inquiry was made in the city of San Francisco regarding the consumption of water. The waterworks at that time proposed an increase in the plant, involving an expenditure of some millions of dollars, but before entering upon that enlargement they came to the conclusion that they would try to restrain the waste, and they did this by inaugurating the meter system. The result was that for years they were able to postpone the extraordinary expenditure which had been contemplated for an enlargement of the plant.

Now, in this District an effort has been made by the District Committee on several occasions to introduce the meter system—not so much with a view to charging every person with every drop of water he receives or uses, but with the view of checking or restraining the waste. That measure, I am sorry to say, has been defeated in the House every time it has been brought up, and Congress has insisted on going on with the present wasteful system. Over two-thirds of the water that comes into the city of Washington goes through the sewers without serving any useful purpose. We have gone on expending large amounts of money every year for increasing our water supply, without thinking of the advantage it would be to limit the waste and purify the supply that we already have; for if we should attempt to purify this immense volume of water which serves no beneficial use, we of course simply increase the expense of the administration in this city. The fault in this matter is, I think, in Congress in refusing, whenever the question has been presented, to authorize the meter system.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the amendment is exhausted.

Mr. PALMER. I move to amend by striking out the last two words. The point I am trying to make is this: The bill carries an appropriation of $600,000 for expenditures in connection with the water supply for the coming year, and it provides for constructing a slow sand filtration plant for this city at an expense not exceeding $2,700,000. Now, I wish to say that if 60,000,000 gallons of water daily are necessary for this city (which is not the fact) that quantity could be filtered through 24 filter beds. There is no mystery about a sand filtration bed. It is the simplest problem in engineering; and such sand filters as would be necessary would be, if constructed, dear at $10,000 apiece. I should be glad if the chairman of the committee would tell me and tell this House what they are going to do with $2,700,000 for the construction of a filtration plant for this city, even supposing that 60,000,000 gallons of water are needed every day.

I do not understand how those who have submitted the estimates could possibly expect this House to authorize a payment of $18,000 an acre—over $600,000—for 34 acres of land on which to establish a filtration plant. And if the House had been consulted no doubt the land never would have been purchased. It is stated that the land selected is within the city limits. But what necessity was there for purchasing land within the city limits for such a purpose? Why was not land purchased at the point where water is taken out of the river—20 miles up the Potomac—a suitable place for the construction of a filtration plant, and where land ought to be purchased for $50 an acre?

I have read all the testimony taken before this committee, and it consists of a statement of Colonel Miller. I suppose Colonel Miller is a very good man; I do not know anything to the contrary. But he gives as little information as any human being possibly could within the space occupied by his testimony. It seems he does the whole water business. He makes all the contracts; nobody else knows anything about the matter but Colonel Miller. It does seem to me that it would be an excellent plan to look into this water business and to ascertain whether filtered water can not be furnished to the city of Washington for far less money than it is proposed to expend. If the committee has any information on this subject besides that furnished by Colonel Miller in his testimony or that which is found in the Book of Estimates, I for one should be glad to hear it.

Mr. McCLEARY. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Appropriations bases its appropriations upon the estimates furnished to it, exercising such judgment as it may in regard to the wisdom of those estimates. We thrashed out this question in the last Congress as to the kind of filtration plant we should have, and the provision in the bill expresses the best judgment of the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

INCREASING THE WATER SUPPLY.

For fence around reservoir grounds, to cost not exceeding $5,000; walks, ditches, and drains on reservoir grounds; house over west shaft, and fencing; and for fencing, grading, and clearing at Champlain avenue shaft; in all, $12,000.

Mr. McCLEARY. I move to amend by inserting at the end of the paragraph just read the words "to be immediately available."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the enforcement of the provisions of the act to prevent the spread of scarlet fever and diphtheria in the District of Columbia, approved December 20, 1890, and the act to prevent the spread of contagious diseases in the District of Columbia, approved March 3, 1897, under the direction of the health officer of said District, $20,000.

Mr. McCLEARY. I move to amend by inserting after the word "District," in line 19, page 40, the words "including purchase and maintenance of necessary horses, wagons, and harness."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For maintaining the disinfecting service, $5,000.

Mr. McCLEARY. I move to amend by inserting after the word "service," in line 21, page 40, the words "including purchase and maintenance of necessary horses, wagons, and harness."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Writs of lunacy: To defray the expenses attending the execution of writs de lunatico inquirendo and commitments thereunder, in all cases of indigent insane persons committed or sought to be committed to the Government Hospital for the Insane by order of the executive authority of the District of Columbia under the provisions of the act approved January 31, 1899, $1,500.

Mr. McCLEARY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 43, after line 2, insert:

"Justices of the peace: For 10 justices of the peace at $2,000 each, and the further sum of $250 each for rent, stationery, and other expenses; in all, $22,500."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCLEARY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to follow that.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the amendment last considered insert:

"Hereafter any justice of the peace designated to serve as judge of the police court, as provided by section 51 of the act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia, shall receive no additional compensation while so serving."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCLEARY. Mr. Chairman, now I offer the following amendment to follow the last amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After amendment last considered insert:

"Hereafter justices of the peace in and for the District of Columbia who are also notaries public shall account for and pay over to the collector of taxes all fees earned as such notaries public as they are required by law to do as to fees earned by them as justices of the peace."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCLEARY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After amendment last considered insert:

"Hereafter the District of Columbia shall not be required to pay fees to the clerk of the supreme court of the District of Columbia.

"Hereafter the salary and compensation of the clerk of the supreme court of the District of Columbia shall not exceed $3,500 per annum; and the excess of fees received by him above said salary, after defraying therefrom the necessary expenses of his office, shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States.

"The permanent indefinite appropriation made by section 229 of the act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia, approved March 3, 1901, to pay the reporter of the court of appeals for volumes of the reports of the opinions of said court, is hereby repealed. And the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall hereafter annually submit estimates for the amounts required to pay said reporter for volumes of the reports authorized to be furnished by him under said section 229."

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I reserve all points of order on that.

Mr. BENTON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if that is a committee amendment.

Mr. McCLEARY. Yes, it is; they are all committee amendments.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do not know anything about it, Mr. Chairman, but it seems to me that last is an amendment of the code, which we passed after some considerable trouble, tacked on to an appropriation bill. I do not want to make any technical opposition to it if it is a matter that has been considered.

Mr. McCLEARY. I will say to the gentleman from Ohio that it is a matter that has been considered very carefully in committee and which has the unanimous approval of the committee. The first amendment provides salaries for justices of the peace.

In some way estimates for such salaries were omitted, and as the bill was first printed there was no provision for any salaries for these justices of the peace provided for by the code. The further amendments relate to their duties and to other matters whose propriety is regarded by the committee as beyond question.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Well, it is all right then.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio insist upon his point of order?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do not.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

That section 1178 of the "act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia," approved March 3, 1901, shall not be construed to amend, alter, or repeal the rate of interest fixed at 4 per cent per annum on judgments against the District of Columbia by the act approved September 30, 1890 (Supplement Revised Statutes, page 811, paragraph 3).

Mr. McCLEARY. Mr. Chairman, I move, as an amendment, to strike out all of line 13 on page 43. It is a mere reference.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the Columbia Hospital for Women and Lying-in Asylum, for the care and treatment of indigent patients, under a contract to be made with the Columbia Hospital for Women and Lying-in Asylum, by the board of charities, not to exceed $20,000.

Mr. McCLEARY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 49, in lines 17 and 18, strike out "the Columbia Hospital for Women and Lying-in Asylum, for."

Mr. McCLEARY. I will state that that is simply to correct the language.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 49, after the word "dollars," in line 21, insert the words "and the further sum of $6,000 is hereby appropriated for improvements and repairs at Columbia Hospital for Women and Lying-in Asylum."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the care and maintenance of children, under a contract to be made with the German Orphan Asylum by the Board of Children's Guardians, not to exceed $1,800.

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, in lines 5, 6, and 7, page 52, the words "under contract to be made with the" and "by the Board of Children's Guardians" and insert before "German," in line 6, the word "in;" so that it will read:

"For the care and maintenance of children in German Orphan Asylum, not to exceed $1,800."

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Chairman, in explanation of the amendment, I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read a letter.

The Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 1, 1902.

Hon. RICHARD BARTHOLDT,
House of Representatives.

DEAR SIR: The board of directors of the German Orphan Asylum of this city direct me to request that you will bring your influence to bear to have the objectionable phrase in the District of Columbia appropriation bill, H. R. 14019, page 52, lines 5, 6, and 7, viz, "under a contract to be made with the German Orphan Asylum by the Board of Children's Guardians," struck out.

We have received an appropriation of $1,800 for the last twenty years (independently of a special contract) under supervision of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and audited by the Treasurer of the United States, but if the said clause remains in the bill the management of our institution will be crippled, as we can not afford to surrender the control of our institution to the Board of Children's Guardians.

Aside from this, it seems that our institution is singularly singled out from among others to be burdened with the above-mentioned provision—for instance, the appropriation for St. Ann's Orphan Asylum, the Washington Hospital for Foundlings, etc., has not the said condition annexed to it.

Hoping that you will meet with success in your efforts, I remain,

Very respectfully,

WM. F. MEYERS.
Secretary German Orphan Asylum.

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Chairman, in addition, I wish to say that I am informed that for the last four years Congress has stricken out a similar provision. It ought not to be in the bill, and I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. McCLEARY. Mr. Chairman, this provision was inserted in accordance with the recommendation of the Board of Children's Guardians, and the statement was made at the time of the hearing that the amendment was acceptable to the officers of the German Orphan Asylum. I will say, in addition, Mr. Chairman, that this is in harmony with the policy which is sought to be inaugurated of placing all of these private institutions which call for public money under the direction of the Board of Children's Guardians. On the preceding page, page 51, we find:

For the care and maintenance of children, under a contract to be made with the National Association for the Relief of Destitute Colored Women and Children, by the Board of Children's Guardians—

And so forth. Now, the reason why these other three that are referred to—the Newsboys and Children's Aid Society, the Washington Home for Foundlings, and St. Ann's Infant Asylum—were not similarly specified, is that they were recommended to be stricken out, and we simply inserted them as they stand in the current law.

Mr. KLEBERG. I am informed that the same reason prevails for striking out this. I am informed that for the last four years the same item, reported by the Committee on Appropriations, has invariably been stricken out.

Mr. GROSVENOR. If the gentleman will allow me a word, he could have stricken out this provision on a point of order if he had chosen to do so, if this appears here for the first time.

Mr. KLEBERG. As new legislation.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Certainly.

Mr. KLEBERG. Then, Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this should be stricken out as new legislation.

Mr. McCLEARY. It is too late to make that point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. It is too late to make that point of order.

Mr. KLEBERG. Then I appeal to the committee to adopt this amendment to strike out this provision. It has been stricken out in every preceding Congress, and I am informed that it will cripple the institution if it is not stricken out.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the Women's Christian Association, maintenance, $4,000.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill if this item—for the Women's Christian Association, $4,000—is the usual sum. There was some discussion about it, and an attempt was made by the Board of Children's Guardians to cut it down to $2,000, I think. What I want to know is whether this is the usual amount which has been given heretofore.

Mr. McCLEARY. I will say to the gentleman that this is the usual amount.

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the bill.

And then, on motion of Mr. McCLEARY, the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 14019) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, and with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. McCLEARY. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to their passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, they will be submitted by the Chair to the House in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. McCLEARY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

CUBAN DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call up the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill covering the offices for Cuba. The bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 13996.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. CURTIS in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the diplomatic appropriation bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13996) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service in the Republic of Cuba.

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums be, and they are hereby, severally appropriated, in full compensation for the diplomatic and consular service of the United States in the republic of Cuba for the fiscal year ending

June 30, 1903, and from May 20, 1902, until and including June 30, 1902, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the objects hereinafter expressed, namely:

For salaries of minister and secretaries: Envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to Cuba, $10,000; secretary of legation to Cuba, $2,000; second secretary of legation to Cuba, $1,500.

For salaries of consul-general and consuls: Consul-general at Habana, $5,000; consul at Cienfuegos, $3,000; consul at Santiago de Cuba, $3,000.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, this bill is to provide for the service, consular and diplomatic, to represent our Republic in the republic of Cuba, which will be installed on the 20th of this month. It is an important consideration that our minister, especially, should be on hand at the time of the installation of that government, as our interests are most important and it will be well that our minister be the dean of the diplomatic corps from the beginning. The provisions of the bill are so plain and simple that they need little explanation. The salaries were determined by the Department upon a comparison with the past. The minister will receive a salary of $10,000. We now pay to the minister to Costa Rica and the Central American posts a salary of $10,000, and the minister to the tiny Republic of San Domingo $7,500.

Mr. KLEBERG. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HITT. Certainly.

Mr. KLEBERG. Has not the President recommended a salary of $10,000 for the minister?

Mr. HITT. That is the salary here fixed. The officers who are subordinate to the minister, as secretaries, are paid the usual rates in the service. At Habana, which is the principal port and place of business on the island, the salary of the consul-general is fixed in this bill at $5,000. Formerly the salary of the officer there, who was accredited to the Government of Spain, was $6,000. It is here reduced $1,000; but it is believed that the notarial fees and other sources of revenue will be sufficient to compensate him fairly.

Cienfuegos by this bill is paid $3,000. It was formerly $2,500. At Santiago de Cuba it is here fixed at $3,000 and was formerly $2,500; but we have, while establishing these posts at that rate, dropped Cardenas, $1,500; Matanzas, $3,000; Sagua la Grande, and Neuvitas. It was felt best that with the small fees of those places, where trade is quite subordinate, the business could be transacted by unsalaried agencies where we do not have any hope of a large business to justify a salary. The service is somewhat experimental. It is hard to say anything that would enlighten anyone generally well informed as to what and how great the commercial relations of our country with the new republic will be, but it is manifest that we should be represented, and that it should be immediately done. I will now gladly yield to anyone for suggestion or question.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Chairman, I desire to indorse the statement made by the chairman of the committee. These salaries are what the President recommended. Of course everybody recognizes the importance of putting ourselves on the very best possible relations with the new republic that is coming into being over there on the 20th of the month. Some people might think that the title of "minister plenipotentiary and envoy extraordinary" was a little top heavy for so small a republic, but Congress raised the minister to Mexico and changed that to ambassador, the very first one that America ever sent out. It was done for commercial reasons and because Mexico is our nearest neighbor on the South, and it is of the utmost importance, as the chairman has stated, that we have our representative on the ground in Habana at the time this republic is installed.

Mr. HITT. I will not detain the committee further, unless gentlemen desire to ask questions. I move that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. General debate has not been closed. Without objection, general debate will be considered as closed.

There was no objection.

Mr. HITT. The bill has been read.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the reading of the bill for amendments will be dispensed with.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the committee rise and report the bill to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CURTIS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 13996) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service in the republic of Cuba, and had directed him to report it back with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HITT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CALL OF COMMITTEES.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the committees.

Mr. SHERMAN (when the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce was called). Mr. Speaker, at the request of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY], who has been called out of town, I ask unanimous consent that that committee may be passed, the bill under consideration not being prejudiced by that action.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce be passed without prejudice. The Chair will state, before presenting that request, that that committee has had one day and is entitled to one further day, so this must be understood. The Chair now submits the request. Is there objection to the request? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Committee on Foreign Affairs was called.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the consideration of the bill H. R. 8129, to amend sections 4076, 4078, and 4075 of the Revised Statutes.

The SPEAKER. Is this by authority of the committee?

Mr. ADAMS. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Affairs to call this bill up.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 4076 and 4078 of the Revised Statutes of the United States are hereby amended by substituting for the phrases "citizens of the United States" and "citizen of the United States" the phrases "persons owing permanent allegiance to the sovereignty of the United States" and "person owing permanent allegiance to the sovereignty of the United States."

SEC. 2. That section 4075 of the Revised Statutes is hereby amended by inserting after the phrase "consular officers of the United States" as follows: "and by such chief or other executive officers of the insular possessions of the United States."

The following amendment was recommended by the committee:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"SECTION 1. That section 4075 of the Revised Statutes of the United States is hereby amended by inserting after the phrase 'consular officers of the United States' the following: 'and by such chiefs or other consular officer of the insular possessions of the United States.'

"SEC. 2. That section 4076 of the Revised Statutes is hereby amended so as to read as follows: 'No passport shall be granted or issued to or verified for any other persons than those owing allegiance, whether citizens or not, to the United States.'

"SEC. 3. That section 4078 is hereby amended so as to read: 'If any person acting or claiming to act in any office or capacity under the United States, its possessions, or any of the States of the United States, who shall not be lawfully authorized so to do, shall grant, issue, or verify any passport, or other instrument in the nature of a passport, to or for any person owing allegiance, whether a citizen or not, to the United States, or to or for any person claiming to be or designated as such in such passport or verification, or if any consular officer who shall be authorized to grant, issue, or verify passports shall knowingly and willfully grant, issue, or verify any such passport to or for any person not owing allegiance, whether a citizen or not, to the United States, he shall be imprisoned for not more than one year or fined not more than $500, or both, and may be charged, proceeded against, tried, convicted, and dealt with therefor in the district where he may be arrested or in custody.'"

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker, I will ask for the reading of the report, which consists mainly of a letter from the Secretary of State setting forth the reasons for the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read in the time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The Clerk read the report (by Mr. ADAMS), as follows:

The Committee on Foreign Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 8129) to amend sections 4076, 4078, and 4075 of the Revised Statutes, reports the same back with amendments, with the recommendation that the bill as amended be passed.

The draft of this bill was transmitted by the Secretary of State, with the subjoined letter in support of the necessity for its passage:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, January 4, 1902.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith a draft of a proposed amendment to sections 4076, 4078, and 4075 of the Revised States of the United States, which now limit the issuance of passports to citizens of the United States.

Since the treaty of peace with Spain the Department has received applications for passports from residents of the Philippine Islands, Porto Rico, and Guam. On the occasion of an application to the ambassador of the United States at London by several Filipinos the Department instructed the ambassador to issue the passports, but no passports have been issued to the residents of our insular possessions by this Department, nor has it authorized such issuance by our diplomatic or consular agents abroad, except in the instance above mentioned.

The diplomatic and consular officers have, however, been instructed to extend to all loyal residents of our insular possessions traveling or sojourning abroad the same protection of person and property as is accorded to native citizens of the United States, and to effect this purpose they have been instructed to issue such documents as are required by the foreign authorities and are not prohibited by our laws and regulations. This expedient has proved satisfactory for the time being, but it can not properly become a permanent practice for the reason that a passport is absolutely necessary in order to obtain admission to some foreign countries and is required for protection during sojourn in others.

The purpose of the amendment to existing legislation herewith submitted is to secure the sanction of law to the granting of passports to residents of our insular possessions, and thus enable this Government to extend to them a full measure of protection abroad.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

JOHN HAY.

Hon. R. R. HITT,
Chairman Committee on Foreign Affairs,
House of Representatives, United States.

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"SECTION 1. That section 4075 of the Revised Statutes of the United States is hereby amended by inserting after the phrase 'consular officers of the United States' the following: 'and by such chiefs or other consular officers of the insular possessions of the United States.'

"SEC. 2. That section 4076 of the Revised Statutes is hereby amended so as to read as follows: 'No passport shall be granted or issued to or verified for any other persons than those owing allegiance, whether citizens or not, to the United States.'

"SEC. 3. That section 4078 is hereby amended so as to read: 'If any person acting or claiming to act in any office or capacity under the United States, its possessions, or any of the States of the United States, who shall not be lawfully authorized so to do, shall grant, issue, or verify any passport, or other instrument in the nature of a passport, to or for any person owing allegiance, whether a citizen or not, to the United States, or to or for any person claiming to be or designated as such in such passport or verification, or if any consular officer who shall be authorized to grant, issue, or verify passports shall knowingly and willfully grant, issue, or verify any such passport to or for any person not owing allegiance, whether a citizen or not, to the United States, he shall be imprisoned for not more than one year or fined not more than $500, or both, and may be charged, proceeded against, tried, convicted, and dealt with therefor in the district where he may be arrested or in custody.'"

The reasons for the necessity for the passage of this bill are so fully set forth in the letter from the Secretary of State that your committee does not deem it necessary to make further suggestions.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker, the letter from the Secretary of State sets forth so fully the reasons for the necessity of this legislation that I do not think it necessary to say anything further. The fact is simply this, that the Revised Statutes uses the term "citizen of the United States;" and under that the State Department deem themselves prohibited from writing or issuing passports to citizens of the insular possessions. The Secretary of State has asked this legislation in order to put the Department in a position so to do.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question.

Mr. ADAMS. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MADDOX. Is this a unanimous report from the Committee on Foreign Affairs?

Mr. ADAMS. It is a unanimous report from that committee.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill which was carefully considered by all the committee, and was discussed fully at the time. There have been cases in the past where the Government officers have given certificates in one form or another instead of passports. Certificates may be available for some purposes, but some countries absolutely and in terms exact passports from persons coming from the United States. By our law now passports can be granted only to citizens of the United States. Now, there is a body or class of persons whom the gentleman from Pennsylvania has referred to who owe allegiance to the United States, living in Porto Rico and other insular possessions, to whom it is our duty to afford protection, but who have not yet been decided to be citizens. In the bill presented that protection is authorized to be extended by diplomatic officers granting passports to those owing allegiance to the United States.

Mr, SMITH of Kentucky. Does this bill undertake to deal with the inhabitants of Porto Rico, and Hawaii, and the Philippine Islands in any other capacity than as citizens of the United States?

Mr. ADAMS. It does not. This bill simply provides that all persons who owe allegiance to the United States shall be entitled to passports. All people under the sovereignty of any nation are entitled to the protection of that Government, and this law will enable the Department of State to issue passports to all people who have a right to claim protection from this Government.

Mr. CLARK. That is provided for by this language:

No passport shall be granted or issued to or verified for any other persons than those owing allegiance, whether citizens or not, to the United States.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. The committee have undertaken to say by inference that persons who owe allegiance to the United States are not citizens of the United States.

Mr. CLARK. No; the committee did not undertake to say anything of the sort. The situation, Mr. Speaker, is simply this; some of us believe that the very minute the Philippine Islands were annexed to the United States the people of those islands became citizens, as we had it stated here in the debate on the Porto Rican tariff; but there are a great many other people who do not believe anything of the sort, and it was necessary, in the judgment of the State Department and in the judgment of this committee, that some arrangement be made to grant a passport to these people in the Philippine Islands and other islands that are hung up like Mohammed's coffin, between heaven and earth. But in order to avoid that very difficulty of undertaking to decide whether they are citizens or not citizens, we used the language in the second section, which I have read, evading the whole thing. It leaves them exactly where we found them.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Well, Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that I believe that every man that owes allegiance to the United States is a citizen of the United States. I believe that is a sound proposition of law.

Mr. CLARK. If that is your position, this section of the bill does not run counter to it.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. This bill is a legislative construction of our laws relative to citizenship.

Mr. CLARK. Oh, no; it is not.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I so understand it to be.

Mr. CLARK. It takes your view and my view.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Let me ask the gentleman a question. If I support this bill, am I not conceding by that support that there are people who owe allegiance to the United States who are not citizens of the United States?

Mr. CLARK. Oh, no; if you support this bill, you will simply retain your political and constitutional integrity and at the same time allow the State Department to be authorized to issue passports to the Filipinos, whether it shall turn out ultimately that they are American citizens or not; and that is the reason this language is put in there—so that everybody here can vote for the bill and so that if a Filipino wants to go anywhere in the world before it is determined whether he is a citizen or not, he can, somehow or other, get a passport under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. One other question. Would not this bill serve the same purpose if the words "whether he be a citizen or not" were stricken out?

Mr. CLARK. I do not think it would.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. It would then include everybody who owes allegiance to the United States.

Mr. CLARK. Nobody can tell when the Supreme Court of the United States is going to decide whether these people are citizens; and what is a good deal more important, nobody can tell when Congress is going to act under the treaty of Paris and define the status of those people in the Philippine Islands. It is more than three years since that treaty was ratified; yet Congress has sat here and done absolutely nothing, so far as I have been able to ascertain, in the way of taking action under that section of the treaty which empowers Congress to fix the status of the people of the Philippine Islands.

Because Congress has not acted, because it has shown precious little disposition to act, because the Supreme Court has not decided and never will decide it until it is driven right up to the proposition, what the status of those people over there is, and because some of them want to travel around like other people, we have inserted this language which some gentlemen may call equivocal. That is the most you can make of it. If I thought that this language bound me for half a second to the declaration that any people under the American flag are not citizens of this country, I never would vote for it. But I do not feel that I should ever be precluded by this bill from taking any position that I pleased in regard to the status of those people in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. KLUTTZ. Does not the language imply a doubt whether they are citizens now?

Mr. CLARK. No; there is no such implication. We simply say, "If you take one man's view and say they are citizens, they can get their passports; and if you take another man's view and say they are not citizens, they can still get their passports."

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. The gentleman did not answer my question. I asked whether this bill, with the words "whether they be citizens or not" stricken out, would not accomplish the purpose intended and desired, without committing men who take the different views, one way or the other, upon the proposition of citizenship?

Mr. CLARK. If I felt like the gentleman from Kentucky does on this question, I should vote against the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Well, I shall vote against it if those words "whether they are citizens or not" are retained, because I think that to vote for the bill with those words included is tantamount to saying that people may owe allegiance to the Government of the United States without being citizens thereof. I do not believe any such doctrine.

Mr. KLEBERG (to Mr. CLARK). Does not the language of the bill imply that certain persons may be citizens of the United States and certain others subjects?

Mr. CLARK. It does not imply anything of the sort.

Mr. KLEBERG. That is exactly what it does.

Mr. CLARK. I do not think it does. A man may owe allegiance to the Government of the United States while here in the United States without being a citizen. I will give you an illustration. There are in the United States at the present time somewhere in the neighborhood of 300,000 Chinese. Every one of them owes allegiance to the United States as long as he stays here; he is subject to our jurisdiction. Now, if I felt as my friend from Kentucky does and my friend from Texas does, I would not vote for the bill. That is all there is about it.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Let me say to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] that the instance he cites is an instance of temporary allegiance.

Mr. CLARK. That is all true.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. It does not cover the allegiance required of every citizen of the United States.

Mr. CLARK. I hope from the bottom of my heart that that is all the allegiance these Filipinos will ever owe to the United States—a temporary allegiance—for I would gladly get rid of them by next Fourth of July, if it were possible.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. If they are persons owing only a temporary allegiance, we ought not to grant them passports.

Mr. CLARK. But they are in the country and they can not get out without a passport. We have, as it were, got them in jail.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I think that the provision of law which says that we may issue passports to citizens of the United States covers these people as much as it does those fully endowed with citizenship.

Mr. CLARK. I have stated all I know about the measure. I do not care very much about it anyhow.

Mr. ADAMS. I ask for a vote.

Mr. MADDOX. Allow me to make a suggestion to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ADAMS]. There seem to be some objections to this bill on this side of the House; we have no quorum here, and there was a general understanding, I believe, that no business would be taken up this afternoon after we got through the District bill.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker, I know of no such understanding.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker, I think it would be better to pass it, say, until to-morrow, so that we may have somebody here.

Mr. ADAMS. The trouble is that if we pass it I will lose my position on the call of committees. I will say to the gentleman that this bill was reported unanimously from the Committee on Foreign Affairs over a month ago.

Mr. MADDOX. Then the gentleman will simply force us to raise the question of no quorum.

Mr. ADAMS. Well, I do not wish to do that.

Mr. MADDOX. I think you can get unanimous consent to fix this at some time when we have a larger number of members present in the House.

Mr. ADAMS. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that to-morrow morning, after the reading of the Journal, this bill be made a special order.

The SPEAKER. To-morrow is set for claims, the Chair will state.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, how would it be to set it over until Monday?

The SPEAKER. Monday is set for District of Columbia matters, by order of the House.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Then Tuesday morning.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the House that Tuesday morning the Committee on Territories have given notice that they will call up the Territorial bill. The Chair will submit the request to the House if desired.

Mr. ADAMS. The matter will not take long.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Then I shall have to object to it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that this bill be made the special order for Tuesday morning next. Is there objection?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. ADAMS. Then I shall have to take a vote on the bill. I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to its passage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves the previous question on the bill and amendments to its passage.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I think if the gentleman will suggest Wednesday morning that will be satisfactory. The objection is, as I understand it, because it will interfere with the Committee on the Territories. Make it Wednesday morning and I believe there will be no objection.

Mr. ADAMS. Then I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that Wednesday morning next be set as a special order.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman withdraw his demand for the previous question.

Mr. ADAMS. I do, temporarily.

The SPEAKER. The demand for the previous question is withdrawn.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the consideration of this particular bill at any time that may be fixed, excepting that I do not wish it fixed at any time which will interfere with the statehood bill. If the gentleman will make his proposition such that it shall be taken up immediately after the consideration of the statehood bill, then I have no objection.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker, I renew the demand for the previous question on the bill and amendments to its passage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman demands the previous question on the bill and amendments to its passage.

The question was taken; and, on a division demanded by Mr. ADAMS, there were—ayes 64, noes 13.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker, I raise the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia makes the point there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

The Chair proceeded to count, when

Mr. MADDOX said: Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point, in order that the gentleman from Pennsylvania may make another request.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman withdraw his point of no quorum?

Mr. MADDOX. Yes; in order that the gentleman from Pennsylvania may make another suggestion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the question. Unanimous consent is asked to vacate the order to proceed to ascertain whether there is a quorum present or not. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker, I now ask unanimous consent that this bill be considered after the bill for the admission of the Territories as States.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that this bill be made the special order for the consideration of the House after the Committee on Territories has disposed of the statehood bill.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I wish to suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that he include in that request that the order for the previous question be vacated.

Mr. ADAMS. Oh, yes.

The SPEAKER. The previous question was not ordered. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The Clerk will proceed with the call of the committees.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Is this from the Committee on Foreign Affairs?

Mr. PERKINS. Yes. By direction of the Committee on Foreign Affairs I call up the bill H. R. 11576, which I will send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill granting permission to Capt. B. H. McCalla and others to accept presents and decorations tendered to them by the Emperor of Germany and others.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I will state——

The SPEAKER. The Chair would advise the gentleman that this bill is on the Private Calendar and not on the House Calendar.

Mr. PERKINS. Then it can not be called up under the call of committees?

The SPEAKER. Not under the call of committees. On the call of committees only bills on the House Calendar can be called up. The gentleman can only get it up under this call by unanimous consent.

Mr. PERKINS. Then I ask unanimous consent for its consideration, to get it out of the way.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that this bill may be considered now, under the call of the committees. Is there objection?

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BELL. Mr. Speaker, I want to know if we can raise the point of no quorum being present?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has that right.

Mr. BELL. Evidently there is no quorum here.

Mr. RAY of New York. I trust the gentleman will not raise the point now. I have a matter or two that I want to bring up.

Mr. BELL. The only reason I make it is that several members, including the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON], went away thinking nothing would be done except to pass the appropriation bill. A great many went away with that understanding. I do not want to object to anybody's bill, but we ought to have a quorum. What is the gentleman's bill?

Mr. RAY of New York. I want to return to the Judiciary Committee on the call. The gentleman can raise the point then, if he desires to.

Mr. BELL. Well, I withdraw the point for the present, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman withdraws the point of no quorum.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I rise for the purpose of asking unanimous consent to return to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries. I was present when the call was made and was listening, but did not hear the call of that committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there anything further from the Committee on Foreign Affairs?

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, unanimous consent was just asked by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PERKINS] to proceed with a certain bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHEELER] made objection. Has the gentleman from Illinois, or any other member of the Foreign Affairs Committee, anything further to bring out from that committee? [After a pause.] The gentleman from Washington.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask unanimous consent to return to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to return to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

VESSELS OWNED BY CORPORATIONS.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the bill (H. R. 11725) to amend section 4139 and section 4314 of the Revised Statutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington calls up a bill which will be reported by the Clerk.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4139 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 4139. Previous to granting a register for any vessel owned by any incorporated company the president or secretary of the company, or any other officer or agent thereof, duly authorized by said president in writing, attested by the corporate seal of the company, to act for the president in this behalf, shall swear to the ownership of the vessel by such company without designating the names of the persons composing the company, and the oath of either of said officers or agents will be sufficient without requiring the oath of any other person interested and concerned in such vessel."

SEC. 2. That section 4314 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 4314. Previous to granting enrollment and license to any vessel owned by any incorporated company the president or secretary of such company, or any other officer or agent thereof, duly authorized by said president in writing, attested by the corporate seal of the company, to act for the president in its behalf, shall swear to the ownership of such vessel by such company without designating the names of the persons composing such company, which oath shall be deemed sufficient without requiring the oath of any other person interested or concerned in such vessel."

The following amendments recommended by the committee were read:

In line 8, page 1, before the word "company," strike out "the" and insert "such."

In line 9 strike out the word "president" and insert the word "company."

In line 10 strike out the words "of the company" and insert the word "thereof," and strike out the word "president" and insert the word "company."

In line 14 strike out the word "will" and insert "shall," and after the word "be" insert the word "deemed."

On page 2, in line 4, strike out the word "to" and insert "for."

In line 6 strike out the word "president" and insert the word "company."

In line 7 strike out the words "of the company" and insert the word "thereof."

And in line 8 strike out the words "for the president."

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Speaker, the only effect of the amendments to the sections of the Revised Statutes referred to is to allow the regularly authorized agent of a company to make the oath in addition to the president or secretary. The present law allows the president or the secretary to make the oath of ownership required by the statutes. This simply extends it to an agent duly authorized by the company, under the seal of the company, to make the oath, in addition to the president or secretary.

Mr. CLAYTON. Does this come from your committee with a unanimous report?

Mr. JONES of Washington. The unanimous report of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. MADDOX. Is that all the change it makes?

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is all the change.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

CALL OF THE COMMITTEE OF THE JUDICIARY.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to the Committee on the Judiciary. I was busy when the committee was called, and did not apprehend that a call of committees would be made to-day. Coming in later, I found that the Committee on the Judiciary had been passed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to return to the call of the Committee on the Judiciary, he having been absent from the House when the call was made. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LIMITING THE MEANING OF THE WORD "CONSPIRACY."

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 11060) to limit the meaning of the word "conspiracy" and the use of "restraining orders and injunctions" in certain cases.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That no agreement, combination, or contract by or between two or more persons to do or procure to be done, or not to do or procure not to be done, any act in contemplation or furtherance of any trade dispute between employers and employees in the District of Columbia or in any Territory of the United States, or between employers and employees who may be engaged in trade or commerce between the several States, or between any Territory and another, or between any Territory or Territories and any State or States or the District of Columbia, or with foreign nations, or between the District of Columbia and any State or States or foreign nations, shall be deemed criminal, nor shall those engaged therein be indictable or otherwise punishable for the crime of conspiracy, if such act committed by one person would not be punishable as a crime, nor shall such agreement, combination, or contract be considered as in restraint of trade or commerce, nor shall any restraining order or injunction be issued with relation thereto. Nothing in this act shall exempt from punishment, otherwise than as herein excepted, any persons guilty of conspiracy for which punishment is now provided by any act of Congress, but such act of Congress shall, as to the agreements, combinations, and contracts hereinbefore referred to, be construed as if this act were therein contained.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, if there is no comment desired, I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves the previous question.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. RAY of New York, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

TERMS OF CIRCUIT AND DISTRICT COURTS, DISTRICT OF SOUTH DAKOTA.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the bill (S. 5105) fixing the terms of the circuit and district courts in and for the district of South Dakota, and for other purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter the terms of the district and circuit courts of the United States in and for the State of South Dakota shall be held as follows: At Sioux Falls, the first Tuesday in April and the third Tuesday in October; at Aberdeen, the first Tuesday in May and the second Tuesday in November; at Pierre, the second Tuesday in June and the first Tuesday in October; at Deadwood, the third Tuesday in May and the first Tuesday in September.

SEC. 2. That the provisions of statute now existing for the holding of said courts on any day contrary to the provisions of this act are hereby repealed, and all suits, prosecutions, process, recognizances, bail bonds, and other things pending in or returnable to said courts on the days now fixed by law are hereby transferred to and shall be made returnable to and have force in the said respective terms in this act provided in the same manner and with the same effect as they would have had had said existing statute not have been passed.

SEC. 3. That when the circuit and district courts are held, as provided in this act, at the same time and place, one grand and one petit jury only shall be summoned and serve in both said courts, and all grand and all petit juries for the circuit and district courts of the district of South Dakota shall be drawn from the body of said district and from the inhabitants of the State of South Dakota who are liable according to the laws of said State to do jury duty in the courts thereof, in the manner now provided by law.

SEC. 4. That this act shall be in full force and effect on and after July 1, A. D. 1902.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say to the House that this bill has passed the Senate and is unanimously reported from the Committee on the Judiciary. The act fixes the times and places for holding the courts in South Dakota, and is just as the Senators and Representatives from that State desire to have it to accommodate the courts. It creates no additional offices or expense. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the previous question or a vote.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York demands the previous question.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. RAY of New York, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, if I can without yielding the floor, I desire to permit a gentleman who passed a bill here a little while ago to move to reconsider and to lay that motion on the table.

The SPEAKER. Is the bill from the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. RAY of New York. The bill was passed.

The SPEAKER. What committee was it from?

Mr. RAY of New York. It was from another committee. The bill was passed.

The SPEAKER. It can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I only wish, Mr. Speaker, to move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed and to lay that motion on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to recur to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, for the purpose of moving to reconsider the vote by which a bill was passed, and also to move to lay that motion on the table. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT TO THE BANKRUPTCY LAW.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I now call up the bill H. R. 13679.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13679) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898.

Debts not affected by a discharge.—a A discharge in bankruptcy shall release a bankrupt from all of his provable debts, except such as (1) are due as a tax levied by the United States, the State, county, district, or municipality in which he resides; (2) are liabilities for frauds, or obtaining property by false pretenses or false representations, or for willful and malicious injuries to the person or property of another, or for alimony due or to become due, or for maintenance or support of wife or child, or for seduction of an unmarried female, or for criminal conversation; (3) have not been duly scheduled in time for proof and allowance, with the name of the creditor if known to the bankrupt, unless such creditor had notice or actual knowledge of the proceedings in bankruptcy; or (4) were created by his fraud, embezzlement, misappropriation, or defalcation while acting as an officer or in any fiduciary capacity."

SEC. 7. That subdivisions a and b of section 18 of said act be, and the same are hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

SEC. 9. That subdivision b of section 23 of said act be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

SEC. 10. That subdivision a of section 40 of said act be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"a Referees shall receive as full compensation for their services, payable after they are rendered, a fee of $20 deposited with the clerk at the time the petition is filed in each case, except when a fee is not required from a voluntary bankrupt, and 50 cents for every proof of claim filed for allowance, to be paid from the estate, if any, as a part of the cost of administration, and from estates which have been administered before them 1 per cent commissions on all moneys received and paid out by the trustee, or one-half of 1 per cent on the amount to be paid to creditors upon the confirmation of a composition."

SEC. 11. That subdivision a of section 48 of said act be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"a Trustees shall receive for their services, payable after they are rendered, a fee of $10 deposited with the clerk at the time the petition is filed in each case, except when a fee is not required from a voluntary bankrupt, and from estates which they have administered such commissions on all moneys received and paid out by them as may be allowed by the courts, not to exceed 10 per cent on the first $500 or less, 5 per cent on the next $1,000 or part thereof, 3 per cent on the next $8,500 or part thereof, and 1 per cent on such moneys in excess of $10,000. In the event of the confirmation of a composition after the qualification of a trustee, the court may allow such trustee not more than one-half commissions on the moneys or property received by him."

SEC. 12. That subdivision g of section 57 of said act be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

SEC. 13. That subdivisions a and b of section 60 of said act be, and the same are hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"a A person shall be deemed to have given a preference if, being insolvent, he has, within four months before the filing of the petition, or after the filing of the petition and before the adjudication, procured or suffered a judgment to be entered against himself in favor of any person, or made a transfer of any of his property, and the effect of the enforcement of such judgment or transfer will be to enable any one of his creditors to obtain a greater percentage of his debt than any other of such creditors of the same class. Where the preference consists in a transfer, such period of four months shall not expire until four months after the date of the recording or registering of the transfer, if by law such recording or registering is required or permitted, or, if not, from the date when the beneficiary takes notorious, exclusive, or continuous possession of the property transferred."

"b If a bankrupt shall have given a preference, and the person receiving it, or to be benefited thereby, or his agent acting therein, shall have had reasonable cause to believe that it was intended thereby to give a preference, it shall be voidable by the trustee, and he may recover the property or its value from such person. And, for the purpose of such recovery, any court of bankruptcy, as hereinbefore defined, and any State court which would have had jurisdiction if bankruptcy had not intervened, shall have concurrent jurisdiction."

SEC. 14. That subdivision a and clause two of subdivision b of section 64 of said act be, and the same are hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"a The court shall order the trustee to pay all taxes legally due and owing by the bankrupt to the United States, State, county, district, or municipality, except such taxes as are a lien on a homestead claimed by or set off to him as exempt from being taken on execution, in advance of the payment of dividends to creditors, and upon filing the receipts of the proper public officers for such payment he shall be credited with the amount thereof, and in case any question arises as to the amount or legality of any such tax, the same shall be heard and determined by the court."

"(2) The filing fees paid by creditors in involuntary cases, and, where property of the bankrupt, transferred or concealed by him either before or after the filing of the petition, shall have been recovered by the efforts and at the expense of one or more creditors, the reasonable expenses of such creditors in so doing."

SEC. 15. That subdivision e of section 67 and subdivision e of section 70 of said act be, and the same are hereby, amended by adding at the end of each such subdivision the words:

"For the purpose of such recovery any court of bankruptcy as hereinbefore defined, and any State court which would have had jurisdiction if bankruptcy had not intervened, shall have concurrent jurisdiction."

SEC. 16. That said act is also amended by adding thereto a new section, section 71, to read as follows:

"SEC. 71. That the clerks of the several district courts of the United States shall prepare and keep in their respective offices complete and convenient indexes of all petitions and discharges in bankruptcy heretofore or hereafter filed in the said courts, and shall, when requested so to do, issue certificates of search certifying as to whether or not any such petitions or discharges have been filed; and said clerks shall be entitled to receive for such certificates the same fees as now allowed by law for certificates as to judgments in said courts: Provided, That said bankruptcy indexes and dockets, as well as the indexes of judgments in the several courts of the United States, shall at all times be open to inspection and examination by all persons or corporations for the purpose of transcription or otherwise without any fee or charge therefor."

Mr. BELLAMY. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman from New York will postpone the consideration of this bill. I do not know of a more important bill that has been brought before this session of Congress than the bankruptcy bill, or a radical amendment to the bankruptcy law, which affects every section of the country. There is no quorum here this evening, and the bill ought to be postponed for consideration, so that we can examine the bill.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say, in answer to the suggestion, that I do not desire to be unfair about this or to disappoint anyone or to cut off proper debate. I would say here that this bill meets the unanimous approval of everybody favorable to the continuance of the bankruptcy law, and most of those who favor the repeal of the law favor the amendments. There are but one or two of these amendments that those who want to repeal the law find any fault with. Perhaps I might say two or three. There are some gentlemen who desire to repeal the law.

This bill has been sent to and has been in the hands of business houses, merchants, manufacturers, and lawyers, North and East, South and West, all over this country, for more than six months, and every business interest, lawyers, judges, from all directions, favor these amendments. I think those who have received communications on the subject, those who have studied the bill, speak in that way. But, Mr. Speaker, there are a number who favor a repeal, and I think three—is it three members of the committee?

Mr. CLAYTON. Four members.

Mr. RAY of New York. Four members of the committee have joined in a minority report in which they favor the repeal of the law.

Mr. CLAYTON. I think it fair to say in that connection that the minority who have presented their views oppose this bill, and oppose nearly every principal feature in this bill; and they also favor the repeal of the original bankruptcy act, and also are opposed to these amendments.

Mr. RAY of New York. Then this is the first time I have heard objections to the amendments, except as I stated. I do not desire to be unfair. Now, if it is the desire of gentlemen and the wish of the House, I am perfectly willing to let this matter stand over until there is another call of committees, and that will give everyone an opportunity to prepare themselves for the debate and study the bill.

Mr. LANHAM. It might be possible to fix a day in the future when the bill might be considered and given ample time.

Mr. RAY of New York. There is some confusion, and I did not hear what the gentleman said.

Mr. LANHAM. It might be possible to fix a day for the consideration in the pretty early future, when sufficient time could be devoted to the consideration of the bill to satisfy all.

Mr. RAY of New York. That may be, but——

Mr. LANHAM. We might reach an agreement by unanimous consent.

Mr. RAY of New York. It might interfere with the business of the House.

Mr. CLAYTON. I did not understand the statement of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. LANHAM. I suggest that there might not be sufficient time to consider the bill, and that we might agree upon some day—say next week, or in the early future—when it be taken up.

Mr. PAYNE. I suggest to the gentleman that he let this bill go over until the next call of committees.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman whether it is his purpose to move the previous question so as to prevent those in favor of the repeal of the law to have an opportunity to vote for that repeal. I would like to see the bill called up and have a chance to aid in the repeal of the law. I think there is a general feeling of that kind in the House that the law ought to be repealed, and I know there is a general feeling throughout the country to that effect, and this evening is not any too soon.

Mr. RAY of New York. When the gentleman says that, I say in answer that I know there is no such general feeling, because I have tested the feeling. As I said, I have in the committee room from all quarters of the country more than 20,000 letters favoring these amendments.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I agree with the gentleman from New York that there is no sentiment for the repeal, but I do not think a bill of such vast importance as this ought to be considered without all the members having an opportunity to investigate it and vote upon it. I do not believe there is a general demand throughout the country for the repeal of the bankrupt law, but I do believe there is a general demand for amendment to many of its features. I do do not know myself what this bill provides; I am not able to tell right now taking up this bill.

Mr. RAY of New York. If the gentleman will take the report he can see.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I have not had time to read it; I have just received it.

Mr. PAYNE. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PAYNE. If the House should adjourn now, would this matter come up on the next call of committees?

The SPEAKER. If the House should adjourn now, the first unfinished business will be that of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, as the House has by unanimous consent reserved its right. After that the Committee on the Judiciary will be next in order.

Mr. PAYNE. Well, I suggest that that is the best way to dispose of this matter.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, the time ordinarily given to the call of committees is insufficient for the consideration of this bill. It has taken twenty or twenty-five minutes to read it.

Mr. PAYNE. You will have two days to consider it under the rule.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Two days would be about the time that ought to be given to it.

Mr. CLAYTON. Not less than that.

Mr. PAYNE. That is all that can be given under the rule of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand whether the gentleman from Missouri made a point of order or not.

Mr. DE ARMOND. No, sir; I did not.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will say in respect to the time that on the call of committees each committee has two days to call up a bill, but the bill being once called up, consideration of it may be continued through the session.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY] yield to his colleague for that purpose?

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will withhold that motion for a minute.

Mr. PAYNE. I will withhold it, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. CLAYTON. I request unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that 1,000 copies of this bill with the report of the majority and the views of the minority be printed. They have been exhausted.

Mr. RAY of New York. They have been exhausted, Mr. Speaker, and I would like to have the gentleman make it 2,000.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that 1,000 copies of the bill and report and the views of the minority be printed for the use of the House, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY] moves to amend by making it 2,000.

Mr. CLAYTON. That is agreeable to me.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request as amended by the gentleman from New York? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves that the House do now adjourn, and pending that, the Chair lays before the House the following personal requests:

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. BOREING, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. TAWNEY, for two weeks, on account of illness.

To Mr. BOWERSOCK, for two days, on account of important business.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted Mr. HENRY C. SMITH to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, papers in the case of Jehu F. Wotring, Fifty-sixth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

The motion of Mr. PAYNE was then agreed to.

Accordingly the House (at 4 o'clock and 24 minutes) adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock noon.

MAJ. CORNELIUS GARDENER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business is closed, and the Chair lays before the Senate the following bill.

Mr. LODGE rose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is a resolution coming over from a previous day.

Mr. LODGE. I wish to say a word in regard to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays the resolution before the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. The resolution need not be read. The Senate is familiar with it. It is the resolution in regard to summoning Major Gardener from the Philippine Islands.

Day before yesterday, on learning that Major Gardener's regiment would not sail from Manila until the 15th day of June, I asked the committee on its assembling to authorize me to summon him in the usual way employed by the committee in case of other Army officers, through the Secretary of War, and that resolution was adopted by the committee. Later in the day I was informed, which was a great surprise to me, that a cable had been received from General Chaffee a few days before, stating that Major Gardener had filed no specifications of his charges, and that the Department had cabled to know what the condition of the investigation was and whether Major Gardener had filed any specifications.

On learning that, the committee yesterday, in order to await the coming of the answer from Manila, rescinded their resolution authorizing me to call him. That answer has just been received, and I will read it:

[Cablegram received at the War Department May 2, 1902, from Manila.]

ADJUTANT-GENERAL, Washington:

With reference to your telegram of 1st, Maj. Cornelius Gardener has filed few specifications, very general in character, and practically paraphrasing his report. In one instance he gives the name of an officer. The board—

That is, the board of inquiry—consists of Col. Theodore J. Wint, Lieut. Col. Joseph W. Duncan, and Capt. William T. Johnston, sitting at Lucena, under instructions to afford Major Gardener full opportunity to substantiate every allegation. Major Gardener has telegraphed Luke E. Wright that investigation has developed into attack on him, and has asked for counsel. First Lieutenant Trent has been authorized to aid him. Wint has been directed to afford Major Gardener every opportunity. The following is his reply:
